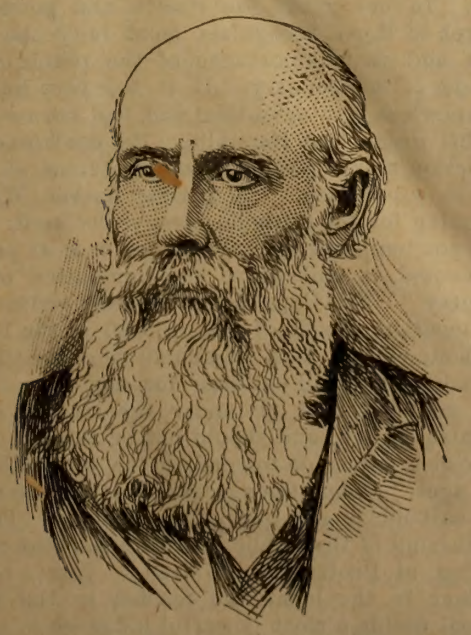
ATTENTION, IOWA!

The annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November. Where shall we meet? The Executive Committee desire to locate the meeting where the largest measure of good may be accomplished. Invitations are solicited, and they will be carefully considered. Address all communications to T. P. ROBB.

Linton, Ia.



REV. JAMES P. STODDARD, in charge of the N. C. A. exhibit at the World's Fair, who always has an unflinching testimony against the lodge.

Antipathy to the resident Chinese at Redlands, Cal., culminated in riotous proceedings, about the first of September, which threatened to bring on a bloody race-war. The whites armed themselves to drive out the Chinese, but the latter were also armed and ready for the fray. The facts having come to the ears of the authorities before the commencement of open assaults, the State government ordered sufficient troops to the scene of disorder to prevent further hostilities. About 200 Chinese were ordered to leave town within forty-eight hours, but a law-and-order meeting and the presence of troops served to maintain peace.

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in the courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion."

The Catholic Review, in noticing the recent Peace Congress, held at the Art Building on the Lake Front in this city, attributes the militarism of the present century to the Protestant Reformation, and adds that under the benign influence of the church, up to that time, the military spirit was steadily declining. We believe this is untrue in fact, and misleading in its tendency; for all war is in violation of Christian principles, and is not to be justified among Protestants or Catholics; but history does not show that Protestant nations have been more warlike than those controlled by Catholics. No nation in Europe has been, or is now, more warlike than France, and there has been none more thoroughly Roman Catholic. Had the Roman church granted religious liberty, there would have been no religious wars after the Reformation.

About 1,000 delegates were in attendance at the Triennial International Sunday-school Convention at St. Louis, Mo., August 30–September 2. Hon. Mr. Harris, of Alabama, the outgoing president of the Association, occupied the chair. The proceedings were full of interest, and the reports of Sunday-school work encouraging. The statistical secretary's report showed that there were now in the United States and British American provinces 130,197 schools, 1,372,558 officers and teachers, and 10,870,104 scholars, an increase in three years of 1,285,439 attendants. Contrary to expectation, the present system of International Sunday-school Lessons was neither abolished nor materially changed, although the debate over it was ably conducted. B. F. Jacobs, of Chicago, was elected president. The next place of meeting will be at Boston, in 1896.

The Deseret (Utah) News has discovered a new secret political party in the Rocky Mountain ranges, known as "The Western Star, or Amorines." It has headquarters at Salt Lake City, and is one of that kind, like the Patriotic Sons of America, the American Protective Association, and others, whose watchword is "Put none but Americans on guard," and is intensely anti-Catholic. The News understands that it is an adjunct of the Liberal party of Utah. It is too young and insignificant, as yet, to excite much attention; but it serves to illustrate the tendency of the age to cloak every movement of doubtful character with oath-bound secrecy.

The "World's First Parliament of Religions" convened in this city on Monday of this week, and will continue in session until the 28th inst. A careful observer of this heterogenous gathering, most of whose active participants are not members of the church of Christ, but rather its opponents, will find in it little or nothing to advance the interests of his kingdom. While several conservative Presbyterian clergymen, like Rev. John H. Barrows, its promoter and apologist, have accepted places on its program, it is noteworthy that neither the United Presbyterian, the Reformed Presbyterian, nor the Southern Presbyterian churches will have part in it.

Paeductar attention is called to the article on page [illegible] this issue of the Cynosure, entitled "A Liquor Mafia," from the New York Voice. The remedy proposed by the writer for the suppression of the liquor traffic and the defeat of its supporters very forcibly appeals to every friend of the anti-secrecy reform, and will bear frequent and emphatic reproduction. "Nothing," he says "can thwart this power but a thoroughly aroused and quickened public sentiment, not against liquor not against any political party, not for prohibition, but against secret societies and associations organized for political purposes, with a view to obtaining class legislation for themselves or their allies." The entire article is replete with food for careful thought.

CHARLES SUMNER —"I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistical to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

CHRISTIAN FIDELITY.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Fidelity involves two distinct and important duties. 1. Strict and careful custody of that which has been committed to our care. The treasurer of the funds of the government is faithful when he keeps securely that with which he is entrusted. The master of a prison is faithful when he guards the prisoners so that no one escapes. A minister is faithful when he "keeps that which has been committed to him." 2. Conscientious discharge of our obligations and assiduous performance of our duties. An employe is faithful who is at work on time, who studies his employer's interests and endeavors to make himself useful. A member of the Y. P. S. C. E. is faithful who attends every meeting, unless providentially hindered, who takes some part in every meeting, and who remembers his vows to wait upon God in the ordinances of his house. A citizen is faithful who leads a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty, who is loyal to the Constitution and government, and who discharges his duties arising out of his relations to the political and social order. These two ideas are combined. A steward has the property and goods of his master placed under his hand, and the government and conduct of his household. Fidelity means protecting this property, wisely conducting the affairs, and increasing the possessions of his master. Christians are stewards of the household of God.

I. A trust has been committed to them. Of Israel it is said: "Unto them were committed the oracles of God." Paul said: "As I was allowed to be put in trust of the Gospel." "A dispensation of the Gospel hath been committed unto me." To all believers it is said: "Hold fast that which thou hast." This treasure has been placed in our hands. This trust includes all divine truth—the whole Word of God. 1. It is of infinite value. No limit can be placed to its worth. There is no known standard of comparison. Light cannot be compared to sound, nor beauty to time. Truth stands alone. It is invaluable. We have different methods of determining value. (a) There is the value arising from rarity. A rare plant or gem may sell for a great sum without having intrinsic worth, simply because of its uncommonness. A rare book is valuable for the same reason. When Tischendorf found the celebrated manuscript called Codex Aleph in the convent at Mt. Sinai, in 1848, which dates back to the beginning of the fourth century, the only one of the kind in the world, he offered the monks large sums of money for it, but they would not part with it; and it was only by persuading them to present it to the Czar of Russia, that he obtained permission from that emperor to publish it. The Bible is the only book of the kind in the world. Hence the command: "Lay fast hold of instruction; let her not go; keep her, for she is thy life." (b) There is the value of utility. When Napoleon entered one of the cathedrals of Spain and saw golden images on the walls, he asked the bishop: "What are these?" "They are the twelve apostles," he replied. "Well," said the emperor, "take them down and convert them into coin and let them go out and do good like the apostles." When Luther was asked to help a certain Christian work, and had no money, he remembered a certain medal of Joachin, Elector of Brandenburg, which he highly prized. Going to the drawer where he kept the coveted medal, he said: "What art thou doing here, Joachin? Dost thou not see how idle thou art? Come out and make thyself useful." In the business world utility measures value. The labor question must be settled according to this principle. "The skillful surgeon, who by hard study, and giving his life night and day to his profession, has become eminent, will never work for the same wages as the day laborer." The Bible is the most useful book in the world. Upon it depends our forgiveness, holiness, happiness, the interests of society, civilization, humanity. "Buy the truth and sell it not." Buy it at any price; sell it at no price. (c) There is intrinsic worth. Gold is a standard of exchange the world over because it has inherent value. Silver is a standard in many countries for the same reason. The Bible, in this view of it, is invaluable. It is more valuable than gold, fine gold, much fine gold; better than silver tried in the furnace seven times. There is a sense in which the knowledge of God and of Christ is God and Christ. "This is life eternal, to know thee and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." No wonder Job said: "Man knoweth not the price thereof: neither is it found in the land of the living. The depth saith, It is not in me; and the sea saith, It is not with me. It cannot be gotten for gold; neither shall silver be weighed for the price thereof. It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx or the sapphire."

2. It is most difficult to keep. Gold or precious stones may be kept in safes or buried. The hard times now upon us are caused largely by the fact that moneyed men have stored their coin and bills in safe-deposit vaults. There it is kept. When Napoleon Bonaparte fell, his brother Joseph came to America. Before leaving he put his gold and jewels in a box, and buried them in a secluded spot. Afterwards he sent his trusted servant back, with directions as to where to find the box. He went in the guise of a peddler, found the box and brought it over. But the truth cannot be thus kept. It is free and must be kept unconfined. The Latin church was at first pure and held the truth. But she corrupted the Word and became mother of harlots. The Greek church was originally true to God's Word. But she departed from it and became a lifeless fossil. The Reformers brought the pure Word with them when they came out of Rome, in the sixteenth century. But their descendants corrupted the Word, and hence there are to-day 140 Protestant denominations. The Reformers suffered and died for a free and pure Bible. Wickliffe gave the Bible to England. Rome dug up his body, forty years after his death, burned it, threw the ashes into the Swift, the Swift carried them to the Avon, the Avon into the Severn, the Severn into the narrow seas, and they into the wide ocean, emblematical of the world-wide mission of the Bible. But the degenerate sons of the Reformers allowed the Bible to be mutilated in the lodge. They join hands in this iniquity. The Puritans kept the Sabbath-day holy. But the Sunday trains, the Sunday newspaper and the Sunday excursions, are fast changing our Sabbath into the Continental Sunday. "Bind up the testimony; seal the law among my disciples." "To the law and to the testimony."

II. Fidelity implies undivided allegiance to Christ—"the truth." This allegiance has four characteristics. 1. It proceeds from love to Christ. "If ye love me keep my commandments." "This is love, that we walk according to his commandments." What the sap is to the vine, what life-blood is to the body, that love is to our obedience. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not love, I am become as sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal." "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, and have not love, I am nothing." 2. It disowns all other allegiance. When a foreigner becomes naturalized he swears to disown all other authority. And hence Roman Catholics are not competent to become good citizens, because they recognize the Pope as supreme, and all governments are subordinate to his will. The believer cannot serve God and mammon, Christ and Belial, the church and the world. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." We are to separate from heathen idolatry, Roman Jesuitry, and all secret, oath-bound lodges, that, together, form the "Secret Empire" of Satan. 3. It has reference to the entire law of Christ. "Whatsoever I command you." "All that the Lord hath said will we do and be obedient." "Whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point is guilty of all." 4. It continues throughout life. "Be thou faithful unto death." It is the last step in the race that counts. Until that is taken, all the rest count for nothing. "Ye did run well; who hath hindered you?" Benedict Arnold was a brave man and a natural leader. He served his country well during the first part of the Revolution; and he was promoted to Major General and given the department of Philadelphia. But on account of some irregularity, Gen. Washington reproved him. This he could not brook. And a little later he attempted to give West Point to the British. "If a righteous man turn away from his righteousness and committeth iniquity, for his iniquity which he hath done shall he die." Judas had many good traits. He served the Master with zeal. But his betrayal vitiated all. "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." "We are not of those that draw back unto perdition." A man may testify against the lodge for forty years and then go and join. Where is his testimony? Of what value is it? "He that continueth unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Boston, Aug. 14, 1893.

THE REASON WHY.

Some weeks since a national bank, a savings bank, and the People's Insurance Co., of Manchester, N. H., closed business suddenly. The treasurer of the insurance company was missing, and very soon Insurance Commissioner Linehan reported that some $490,000 of the company's property was missing also. He advised "if there was a God in Israel," that the defaulter be prosecuted. Then the president of the company said several things: that everything was all right; then that, at most, only $60,000 was gone. The Boston and State papers printed all sorts of stuff and "abused" the Insurance Commissioner.

A month passed, and, as all New England knows, the public really knew nothing about the steal. Then it came out that the thief had carried off the books; i. e., so it is said; and after a month's delay it is admitted that the commissioner stated the truth; and now after several meetings the capital of the company is reduced from $500,000 to $200,000, and it is said the new stock will be taken by stockholders and the company go on. Now, too, $1,000 reward is offered for the thief.

What of it? Simply this. The commissioner, like many others now in or being put into office in New England, is a Romanist. He worked the "God in Israel" idea, and gave facts while the "brothers" tricked and lied to the public for weeks—long enough to let things be "fixed" Masonically, and the thief got in a safe "asylum". Then, six weeks after the exposure, the books "are missing". It is said thus that the evidence to convict is gone, which being so, it is entirely safe now to offer $1,000 reward for the thief. No one knowing that by similar trickery bank defaulters have more than once been protected in the past—no one knowing that the Supreme Court of the State is in the hands of secretists, and that the State is ruled by them—can doubt for one moment that this Manchester farce is the latest example of Masonic trickery, treachery and rascality, as practiced in New Hampshire.

HINSDALE.

CATHOLICIZING THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

As promised, my friend and I now give further reason why Catholicism will delay her threatened war. In her grasp for wealth and power the church of Rome recognizes most fully the influence and vast importance of the public school system of this country. It is the very bulwark of American Protestantism and the corner-stone of this great free Republic. Its control or destruction makes possible the overthrow of Protestant supremacy. A priest, Father Walker, speaking for the Catholic clergy, declared: "Unless you suppress the school system as at present conducted, it will prove the damnation of this country." The Pope authoritatively writes that "Education outside of the control of the Roman Catholic church is a damnable heresy. Public schools open to all children for the education of the young should be under the control of the Romish church, and should not be subject to civil power, nor made to conform to the opinion of the ages." Thus the success of Romanism means the catholicizing of our public schools. The catholicizing of the public schools means the catholicizing of Protestant children. Next to the mother in the home the teacher in the public school wields a most powerful influence in moulding the character and citizenship of the American youth. Vast responsibilities are resting upon the public school teachers. They are the guardians and protectors of American doctrines, principles and institutions. The Catholic teachers are being pushed to the front. We as Protestants pay papal school officials, Romish school superintendents and Catholic instructors from the public school fund while their whole object is to gain control of beneficent public schools to convert them into nurseries and adjuncts of the Romish church to contaminate and poison the Protestantism and patriotism of American children. In some places the Catholic school authorities and Catholic teachers have clashed with our American Protestantism. Even the Pope's picture is reported to have been placed on every desk in the public school room. At Faribault and Stillwater, Minn., if we remember aright, there was an example of what Americans may expect in the catholicizing of the public schools. Protestant teachers in Missouri, do you know that just recently, on the appeal of a Catholic priest at Rolla, Phelps county, the attorney-general of this State decided that your teachers' institutes shall not convene with singing and prayer? Was any reader of this paper at the great Christian Endeavor convention in Montreal the other day when the whole police force was called out to protect American citizens from a Catholic mob? But in this public school contest, thus far, the Catholics have had little organized opposition from Protestant teachers and educators. If the Constitution of the United States cannot protect our schools from the machinations of priests and Jesuits on religious grounds, it can on political grounds. The Romish hierarchy is as anti-republican and despotic as it is anti-American and anti-Protestant. The American Protective Association and other political organizations now so rapidly forming will soon put a little starch in the backbone of indifferent Protestant educators. And it is high time, for the papacy is moving solidly to demoralize and destroy the entire free Protestant education of the nation. Cardinal Manning says: "The common school system of the United States is the worst in the world." Cardinal McCloskey declares: "We must take part in the elections and move in solid mass in every State against the party pledged to sustain the integrity of the public schools." The Freeman's Journal (Catholic) avows: "These schools are a devouring fire and pits of destruction. They ought to go back to the devil from whence they came." The New York Tablet (Catholic) charges: "The public or common school system is a swindle on the people, an outrage on justice, a foul disgrace matters of morals, and should be abolished." The Chicago Tablet (Catholic) adds: "The common schools of this country are sinks of moral pollution and nurseries of hell." A female Catholic teacher in a Philadelphia, Pa., public school read daily the "Douay" or Roman Catholic Bible. At Oro, near Leadville, Colo., a Roman Catholic teacher tried to force the Protestant children to daily Catholic prayer in the public school. So that it is not religion that papists object to but the Protestant religion. With the Protestant Bible and Christian prayers the public schools are "Godless," "a devouring fire," "pits of destruction," "a swindle," "a disgrace in morals," "sinks of perdition," and "nurseries of hell." Presto! With Catholic teachers, the Catholic Bible, Catholic prayers, the Pope's picture, they become a proselyting power, a feeder of the Romish church and a source of heretical income. And such is the bitter, unrelenting foe assailing our public education to increase Romish domination. Its triumphal progress along this line is another proof that threats of force will not at present be employed.

A LIQUOR MAFIA.

Can it be possible that our prohibition press does not fully grasp the importance of calling public attention constantly and continuously to the deep significance and almost infinite power of that secret political organization known as the "Retail Liquor Dealers' Protective Association," kindred societies, such as Tammany and the various drinking and sporting clubs, all of which will sneeze when the former takes snuff? Other great moneyed interests, monopolies and corporations have discovered the power of organized liquor to control elections and obtain class legislation and its ability, as a secretly organized political factor, through the partisan blindness of good men, to control the political machinery of all parties not formed especially for its destruction. Hence the log-rolling combinations with these are formed.

The power of a secret foe to destroy or rob his much stronger victim, as illustrated by the success of train robbers and other highwaymen, lies in their ignorance of his purposes, his time and method of attack. This secret power can pack any law and order league or mass meeting of citizens called together for the purpose of throwing off corrupt municipal, State and national rule, as it did last spring in Dallas, Texas. These miscreants can even gain admission into temperance, prohibition and church executive committees and official boards, and they can find and are finding ways to annul all safeguards afforded by the Australian ballot system. Indeed, nothing can thwart their power but a thoroughly aroused and quickened public sentiment, not against liquor, not against any political party, not for prohibition, but against secret societies and associations organized for political purposes with a view to obtaining class legislation for themselves or their allies.

The secret features of the "Know Nothings," although they were organized for a commendable purpose, met with a terrible rebuke at the hands of the American people; and if the sleeping genius of our free institutions and of American liberty can be awakened and its attention focalized, not so much upon the crime-breeding character of the liquor-traffic as upon the secret political methods by which it is enabled to combine, not the numerical strength, but the ruling power and machinery of all old parties, as well as the moneyed power of many other corporations and the social influence of all drinking and sporting clubs —if this can be done then American liberty will triumph once more over greed, corruption and spoils.

Let our internal dissensions cease and make the secret and political character and the infernal power of this un-American Liquor Dealers' Association be made the "dominant issue," with the emphasis not on liquor, but on a secret political combine, comparatively insignificant in numbers, but almost infinite in the power that pot-house political machinery and the corrupt use of massed wealth can give.

I believe a non-partisan address on this line could be prepared, and prominent influential business men and patriots of all parties could be found who would sign it. This could be sent out to individual pastors or pastors' unions and other non-partisan moral bodies, urging the law-abiding elements to ask the insertion of a plank in the platform of all parties, or of their respective parties, demanding, if need be, legislative action looking to the annihilation of all secretly-organized bodies, whether they pose as political parties or as business protective associations. Once arouse American freemen to the secret character of this political Mafia, and such an issue could be made sufficiently dominant in all parties (just as all parties cry for tariff reform) to break the backbone of this political hyena; and in doing this the hitherto blind partisan will discover the hidden power that was able to take his honest ballot, honestly cast, for the pure principles of his party, as he supposed, and make it just as effective for the liquor man's interests as if he had purposely voted solely and alone for this organized octopus.—W. D. Knowles, in the New York Voice, Aug. 24

THE WHITE CAPS.

A dispatch from Corydon, Harrison county, Ind., August 25, furnishes the following interesting particulars concerning the White Caps, who formerly had their headquarters in that county:

Just how the White Cap organization came into existence no one seems to know. It has been fully forty years since the first case of white-capping was reported. At that time they called themselves "Paderoles" (Patrols), and thus it seems the idea came from the South, where "Paderoling," or patroling, was practiced in the days of slavery.

About fourteen years ago an eminent citizen was chairman of the county organization of White Caps. He was no less a personage than the judge of the Harrison circuit court, if the statements of certain White Caps be true. The judge is now dead, but his memory is cherished by his former associates.

Three years ago there was a county organization of White Caps and there was a chairman and secretary of the society. All of the thirteen townships had organizations, and each of these had a chairman and secretary. County assemblies were held and delegates were sent from the different organizations. Meetings were held in sink holes in the forest, and sentinels were stationed to protect the meeting from intrusion. Signs, grips and passwords were used, just as in other secret societies. The obligation was a binding one. The candidate was required to get down on his knees and look into the muzzle of a gun while he took the oath. He did not obligate himself to go on any raids, as that was to be done voluntarily; but if he did go he obligated himself to obey all commands of the captain. Furthermore he pledged himself to give such assistance as he could to his brother if he should ever be arrested—to go to the place of trial and get on the jury if possible. One of the laws was that if a White Cap should be wounded while in a raid he should be shot by his associates. "Dead men tell no tales" was their password for a long time.

The same dispatch reports that the organization has dwindled to one band or lodge in that county, owing to the force of public opinion in opposition to its methods.

TEMPERANCE POLITICS IN ENGLAND.

A late number of the North American Review contains a well-written paper from Sir Wilfred Lawson, M. P., on "Prohibition in England". He gives an interesting and somewhat lengthy account of the rise and progress of the United Kingdom Alliance and of the agitation in the House of Commons on the local option question. He concludes the paper as follows: The great drink question stands thus on this side of the Atlantic: There is a virtual unanimity among the statesmen of all parties that the places licensed for the sale of drink are too numerous. The Conservative statesmen who make this avowal also declare that as they have failed in providing for their diminution by allotting public money for the benefit of those houses which may be disestablished, nothing more is likely to be done by politicians to promote temperance "for the next twenty years". The Liberal statesmen who formerly succeeded in their resistance to the Conservative scheme above-mentioned, it must be assured, have some plan ready for the reduction in the number of drinking houses, inasmuch as they have joined with the Tory statesmen in denouncing the superabundance of such places.

The Prohibition party, meanwhile, sticks to its simple, straightforward demand that it should be placed in the "option" of dwellers in specified localities to protect themselves. The Prohibitionists only ask for what are called in Africa, "uncontaminated zones," that is, districts without liquor shops, where local public opinion clearly demands that such shall be the case.

Not long ago Parliament, for the first time in our political history, gave a majority in favor of Sunday closing—for England. It also, by an overwhelming majority, carried the second reading of a bill designed to curtail the sale of liquor in Ireland on Sundays generally, instead of with exceptions, which is now the law, and also to curtail its sale considerably on Saturdays. But neither of these measures have been carried through and inscribed on the statute book, because the government of the day declined to give time or any of the assistance necessary for carrying the required stages through the House.

But the conflict and the result which I have described—the overthrow of the compensation scheme—is full of hope for the future. It was the voice of the people—the masses—the multitude—which really overthrew that great iniquity. When once they are so united and determined in their attack on their common enemy—drink—as they have now been in resisting his assault upon them, his final overthrow is certain.

To spread the light, to promote the union, and to perfect its own organization, is now the object and duty of the Prohibition party. In that duty it is my hope and my belief that they will not be found wanting, but that they will go on until they obtain their long-sought-for triumph over the liquor power. That triumph, when attained, will be indeed a great and glorious one; for the liquor traffic is by far the deadliest remaining obstacle to the complete success of that temperance reformation which Mr. Cobden has truly declared to lie at the foundation of every social and political reform.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Dr. Holmes' 84th birthday—A New England family—An ingenious excuse—The cyclone on Mt. Washington—The death of a Bonaparte—The suicide of Dr. Graves.

All, or nearly all, great men having a liking for flowers. I know Ruskin says the opposite, but I prefer to believe that in this case, as in so many others, he contradicts a pleasant belief just for the purpose of saying something startling. New England's literary Nestor, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, on his 84th birthday, seated in his study at Beverly Farms, filled with the floral gifts of loving friends, while the rain poured outside, counts more than three-score years and ten since he tried with the perennially hopeful courage of childhood to make daffodils and roses grow and bloom on the dry and sandy soil of old Cambridge, as he himself relates in his "Poet at the Breakfast-table." Talk of the inspiration that there is in youth and the sight of youthful faces! There is a thousand-fold more in the sight of a young-old age, whether in man or woman; especially to those who have passed life's mid-summer, and realize that its autumn is nearly on them. Think of the "Autocrat," written at 50, and "Over the Tea-cups," at 80! Dr. Holmes is worth more, so far as the force of helpful example and inspiring suggestion goes, than all the prodigies of youthful genius that have passed to untimely graves, from Keats and Chatterton downwards. Few of us like the thought of being "shelved,"—stranded high and dry like the hulks of superannuated vessels that have only weathered the storms to meet a more inglorious fate; so the sight of a busy, cheerful octogenarian, who still retains a warm human interest in everything which concerns his race, is like a beautiful prophecy that we too may have such a time of fruitage, mellow and serene—such a fair and glorious sunset, before we lay ourselves down among the shadows and sleep till they flee away before the Dawn that knows no setting.

I have just spent a delightful hour with a venerable lady who well illustrates in her own person what I have written—a sister of Dr. A. L. Stone, Park street's most celebrated divine; and who is not without a modest title to fame in her own right, from the fact that she was the author of the first reading-books and primers published for the use of the freedmen when the problem of their education began to press on the Northern conscience, and the first step in its solution was seen to be text books elementary enough for their capacity. Mrs. Stowe says somewhere: "So much has been said and sung about the beauty of young girls, why don't somebody wake up to the beauty of old women?" Why don't they, to be sure? for if that of the former is like the loveliness of a sylph or fairy, the latter is that sublimated, spiritualized kind which is akin to the beauty of the angels. The Stones of Connecticut, like the Beechers and the Abbotts, seem to have been born to the purple of intellectual supremacy. One brother, David A. Stone, has just retired from the editorship of the New York Commercial Advertiser, which he has held over forty years and never taken a vacation; while a sister wrote "Shady Side," which, nearly half a century ago, had a great run, so pathetically and eloquently did it tell the plain, unvarnished tale of a poor country minister obliged to support his family on a meagre salary that was always in arrears, with an occasional donation party thrown in. Not the least remarkable thing about Mr. Stone's long career as a journalist is, that he never allowed any Sunday-work to be done on the Monday morning edition; yet he never failed to have it out on time, thus demonstrating the fallacy of that argument, so generally employed by the patrons of the Sunday press—that the Monday morning paper necessitates as much Sabbath work as the regular Sunday issue.

She is a charming conversationalist, and enjoys, as is very natural, to talk about and indulge in reminiscences of her distinguished brother. The pastor of Park street church—"Brimstone Corner," as the irreverent used to style it, because of the pungent theology there preached—though much beloved by his people, scandalized not a few of the stricter sort by his unclerical liking for fast horses; and, apropos to this, I must give, for the readers of the Cynosure to smile over, an anecdote which she related with much appreciation of its comic side. A certain good old lady among his parishioners, a Puritan of the Puritans in her staunch regard for the Sabbath and general orthodoxy, both in creed and practice, was one of his most devoted admirers. As she resided on the old "Mill Dam road," as it was then called, a famous thoroughfare for Sunday driving, like Lot of old, her righteous soul was often vexed within her as she sat at her window, to see the sacred day thus desecrated. It happened, one Sabbath, that Dr. Stone was called to attend a funeral, and when the service was over he found that he would not be in time to preach his afternoon sermon unless he put his horses to the top of their speed—which he accordingly did. A son of the old lady recognized him as he came flying, Gilpin-like, down the street, and asked his mother waggishly if she knew who it was, to which she replied in the negative; adding, with a gentle sigh for human depravity, "Some godless man, without doubt." "Why, it is your pastor, Dr. Stone." "I don't believe it." "But I assure you it is." And as he came nearer, she saw that it was indeed her beloved pastor. Only for an instant was she staggered. "Poor, dear, good man;" she said, recovering herself; "I suppose he couldn't hold in his horses!" When did ever hero-worshiper, confronted with a failing in his idol, and driven to the last extremity to find an excuse, rise more sublimely to the occasion. No wonder the genial pastor of Park street enjoyed the joke to his dying day.

It may not be generally known that the velocity of the wind on Mount Washington is greater than has been recorded at any weather station in this country or in Europe, the reason being that it stands exactly in the storm-track of all the great winds that sweep over the St. Lawrence valley. The guests at the Summit House had a memorable experience in the last cyclone—for up there it was a veritable cyclone—when every part of the building, though bolted together with clamps of iron, trembled like a leaf, and the light-stands swayed as in a shock of earthquake. And now, to the great terror of many weak minds, as well as of a few people who claim to be sensible, some alarmist is predicting another cyclone between the 17th and 18th of September which will ravage Boston and its suburbs and throw into the shade even that of 1786. But faith in Him whose word the stormy winds fulfill is the surest panacea against unreasoning fear, even though our sins might well provoke such a visitation.

If Betsey Patterson Bonaparte had realized her ambition for a throne, her grandson, Col. Jerome Bonaparte, would not probably have died at Beverly Farms, the other day, a plain untitled American citizen, but would have passed his life, like the rest of his European relatives, aimless, useless hangers-on to the skirts of Fortune, vainly hoping for some lucky turn of her wheel that will invest them with the trappings of French royalty. The first American heiress to go into the silly business of marrying for a title certainly had a sorry time of it, which ought to have deterred her many successors from making a similar experiment.

The suicide of Dr. Graves, at Denver, was a surprise to the New England public, and comes like a confirmation of the general belief that he was guilty of Mrs. Barnaby's death. Those who can see in the doctor's Masonry reasons for the strange delays in his case will have their opinion only strengthened by his protestations of innocence in the paper which he left behind, "upon my solemn Masonic oath," remembering how the Masonic oath in the seventh degree is expressly framed to shield murderers.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 6, 1893.

If I were called upon to name the two professions which accomplish the most beneficial results for mankind I should unhesitatingly choose the clergymen, who devote their lives to preserving immortal souls, and the physicians, who strive to preserve mortal bodies. Therefore I consider the gathering of physicians from all parts of the American continent, which, under the name of the Pan-American Medical Congress, is now in session here, as second in importance only to a similar gathering of the Christian ministers of the continent. The object of this congress is a noble one—the dissemination of information gained by its members in successfully alleviating human suffering and preventing the spread of contagious diseases; and, as President Cleveland fittingly said in a short address opening the congress, "the protection of the public health and the prevention of contagious diseases are objects properly brought under consideration at the capital of a nation which appreciates fully the serious importance of everything which aids in making intercourse between civilized countries and commerce between them safe and easy."

The address of welcome to the congress on behalf of our municipal government, made by Commissioner Ross, contained some very happily-chosen language, a portion of which is herewith quoted: "And I cannot but believe that this extraordinary spectacle, this assemblage of physicians from all the great powers of the western hemisphere, has a deeper significance than even that most laudable purpose of the extension of medical knowledge among its constituents. Does it not indicate that benevolence and philanthropy are no longer limited by national boundaries, but that they are becoming as broad and universal as humanity itself? There will never be a time when there will be no clashing of interests among the nations of the earth. But when the poor of Ireland were suffering for the want of bread, when Chicago was desolated by fire, when Charleston and Johnstown were helpless, and when the peasantry of Russia were starving, the world's sympathy in the form of material aid ignored the ocean's barrier and the boundaries of States, directed only by the thought that the stricken and the suffering belonged to the same great human family. These bonds of human sympathy and the new swift means of intercommunication are bringing the nations into closer relationship. May we not be encouraged to believe that this Pan-American convention is a forerunner of successive congresses of all civilized states, whereby the common interests of the race may be fostered and maintained?" The enthusiastic applause which greeted the address of Mr. Ross was proof positive, to me, that the physicians in attendance realized the importance of the congress, not only to the physical welfare of the people of this continent, but also as a powerful factor in the great work of moral reform which is going on all the time, notwithstanding the belief of the uninitiated that it sometimes stops for a time. The opening of the congress was preceded by a prayer and invocation for divine blessing, by Bishop Paret, of Maryland.

So much has of late been said in the newspapers about the condition of President Cleveland's health that a word or two about his appearance, as he stood up to address the congress, may not be amiss. He was dressed in black, as he usually is upon all public occasions, and, if one can judge anything by appearance, was feeling particularly well. He walked easily and erect, his eyes were clear and bright, while his voice certainly sounded like that of a man in good physical condition. Unless the coat he wore was unusually tight, I think he has lost some flesh since I saw him last—late in June. But he still has more probably than he desires to keep. I have been told, but cannot vouch for the statement, that he has been, and is, dieting himself for the purpose of reducing his flesh.

Many of the physicians are accompanied by their families, who are having social attentions showered upon them by the Washington people. Particularly noticeable among the foreign ladies are the wives and daughters of a number of Mexican physicians.

It pleased many that in the speech made by the new Chinese minister, when he was this week formally presented to the President by Secretary Gresham, no reference whatever was made to retaliation on the part of his government because of the Geary act. The fact that he has leased a large double building for himself and legation for a term of years, with privilege of at any time purchasing it, is also regarded as an indication that he has no knowledge of any intention on the part of his government to break its diplomatic relations with the United States. *

—The death of Emin Pasha, the distinguished African explorer, is again reported—for the third or fourth time—and now with minute particulars, relating that his head was cut off and eaten by cannibals. This should not be regarded as indubitable evidence, for similar stories came from the interior about Mr. Stanley, and also Dr. Livingstone, previous to his decease. Dr. Peters, the eminent explorer, who is now in this city, discredits the whole story, and says that while he was in Africa he was repeatedly declared dead, and his demise was once officially proclaimed by the German government. Africans are both credulous and deceitful.

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Admitting that "variety is the spice of life," there is no lack of "pungent condiments" at the N. C. A. exhibit. Every secret order sends its representatives, from gray-haired sires to beardless youths, and every phase of religion and irreligion has its advocates among the callers. One class, however, seem most embarrassed in defending their position. Those who have given a pledge, or taken an oath, that they won't tell what they know often appear perplexed and escape from the unpleasant predicament in which the lodge puts them by a hasty and abrupt withdrawal. The advocate of Christian Science, the man who scoffs at the Bible and denies Christ, the man who believes in free rum and curses the Prohibitionists, and the broad and narrow-gauge advocates or opponents of every other sham or folly under heaven, speak freely, while the Mason and his ilk are tongue-tied and gagged so effectually that they often become objects of pity rather than contempt under the slavery imposed by their heartless tyrant master. If anyone questions the statement of A. T. C. Pierson: "If we would be Masons, we must yield private judgment," his doubts would be dispelled by a half-hour at our exhibit. A despotism more rigid than Russia, and a religion more pagan than that of Rome, usurps legislative, judicial and executive authority, and robs its subjects of their constitutional rights of private judgment, free speech and the liberty of the press. No foreign nation would be tolerated in the exercise of such barbarity within our borders, and why should a secret government be permitted to rob and enslave our citizens who ought to be free men? Is not such usurpation at least constructive treason?

I am often asked, What is the object of your exhibit? What are you trying to do? etc. My reply is, We are giving those who think of joining the orders an opportunity to examine the goods before investing their money. We believe money can be invested in an education, good books, and home comforts, to better advantage than in degrees, regalia and swords. We believe that home and church influences are better than lodge influence, and that our young men are safer in the family, and the Young Men's Christian Associations, and similar open associations, than in the tyled recesses of secret conclaves.

We seek to induce men to make home attractive, and to inspire young men with a zeal to obtain an education that shall incline them to spend their time at home, in cultured and Christian companionship, and with good books rather than in the promiscuous associations of the lodge, the frivolities of initiations, and the temptations of excursions, picnics and dances. Very many connected with the orders assent to such statements as perfectly reasonable, which makes the approach to grave and more pointed features of the secret system natural and easy. One gentleman, from California, said: "You are correct. I have been through the entire system of Odd-fellowship. I have a costly regalia, and have found the whole thing very expensive. My judgment is that time and money put into the lodge are worse than thrown away." Though a Christian man, he had never considered the anti-Christian facts of their worship until I called his attention to the denial of Christ. A pastor from Michigan said: "You are right, and my son has been induced to join a secret society in college, and I will contribute liberally to the support of your cause if you will induce him to withdraw from his lodge and adopt your principles on the subject." Of course I took the young man's address and sent him literature.

A company of interested listeners waited to hear the "lodge opened on the third degree for work". After listening to my closing remarks, a rather plain but intelligent-looking man said, as he walked away: "I am a Mason myself, and I always said that Jesus Christ wouldn't go into it." A bystander shouted: "That man may be a stone mason, but I'll bet a hundred dollars to one that he never saw the inside of a Freemasons' lodge." It is with such-like assertions that the craft seek to neutralize the testimony of truthful witnesses.

The highest compliment that I have received was from an elderly gentleman who will not, I am confident, object to my mentioning his name. I had been having a "set-to" of a half-hour or more with three wily Masons, in which I could see that this man took a lively interest. When the discussion ceased, he gave me his hand, saying, "This is the best thing I have found in the Fair. I like to see those fellows handled by a man who knows how to do it. You squeezed them until they were glad enough to escape. I want to order one of your books." I handed him a blank order, which he filled and returned, bearing the widely-known name of Miles Grant, Boston, Mass. Before leaving, he assured me of his hearty sympathy and his gratification at learning of the vigorous work being done by the N. C. A. This brother sails for India in a few days, and said that he should there use the book he had secured, and would be glad to obtain a chart for lectures.

A Roman Catholic priest, with two associates, appeared at our booth. He had understood that I was classing the "Society of Jesus" with the "Society of Freemasons," and he came to protest against associating such a "devout and holy brotherhood" as the "Jesuits" with the infidel and profane brotherhood of Masonry. I pleaded guilty to the charge, and attempted to establish the identity of the fundamental dogmas and doctrines of the systems. As he asked many direct questions regarding my religious views, as well as about the secret orders, he could not, and showed no disposition to, deny me the same liberty. Our conference continued for probably three-quarters of an hour, without a bitter word or apparently an unkind feeling. The frank, straightforward course taken by this priest was in such striking contrast with the evasive quibbling of lodge devotees that it was noted and spoken of with approval by some who have no admiration for the faith of Rome. We shook hands at parting, each wishing the other God-speed in all that Christ has authorized "us to do and teach". I asked: "Do you believe in Jesus Christ as the one and only Saviour of lost men?" "I do, most heartily." "Do you believe in the church of Christ?" to which he gave his assent, and asked: "Has Christ more than one church?" To which I replied: "There is but one body, with one Head. There is but one bride, and she has but one Husband." "Do you know the church who is Christ's bride?" he asked. "Yes," I replied; "for the dear Lord has told me that 'all who believe with the heart and confess with the mouth,' and have been 'born from above' are his own." "Do you know," said he, "who has been 'born from above'?" "No," I said, "but my Father knows his children, and my Elder Brother knows his kindred, and it is sufficient for me that 'the Holy Spirit witnesseth with my spirit' that I am a joint heir with Jesus Christ." "But this church must have a government." "Yes," I said; "very true; but the Head has made ample provision to govern the body. 'Where two or three are met in my name, there am I in the midst of them,' gives the assembly which Christ approves by his own presence, and then he says: 'One is your Master—even Christ, and all ye are brethren.' There are no priests, no bishops or popes in Christ's church, invested with high and holy functions to 'lord it over God's heritage'. 'I am the Door;' 'No man cometh to the Father but by me,' brings every man face to face, not with a man, but with Jesus Christ," etc.

In comparing the despotism of Masonry and Jesuitry, I asked: "If a Jesuit standing where you do should receive an order from his superior to go to a foreign country without returning to his lodging, would he obey?" "Most certainly he would," was the prompt reply. I then called his attention to this same rigid, unbending power in the Masonic hierarchy, and by the use of my chart showed the identity of the two systems in the Scottish Rite, which begins in the Blue Lodge, proceeds through a series of degrees invented by a Jesuit priest in Paris, and was topped out by Stephen Marine and a number of Jewish adventurers at Charleston, S. C. That is, the Scottish, or ruling rite in Masonry, is the pagan Blue Lodge at the bottom, the work of Hebrew adventurers at the top, and the invention of Jesuit priests between the two extremes.

I should like to report on some of our prohibition talks, but must forbear for the present.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

THE PACIFIC COAST WORK.

PHILOMATH, Ore., Sept. 5, 1893.

The anti-secrecy work on the coast is gaining in interest at the rate of 50 per cent annually. There is a general awakening here as to the evils of organized secrecy.

For years past the churches here have been virtually saying to the lodge, "You let us alone, and we will leave you alone." Recently a spirit of aggressive warfare has seized the reform churches of the coast, pushing them out into the front rank to do aggressive work against the institutions of darkness. I am more than ever convinced that this is the only consistent position to take—active opposition to these orders. The minister, or church, too cowardly to stand and fight in this reform work should step down and out, and give place to those who are valiant. Agitation is our only hope to arouse the slumbering churches, and wake up many of the now "dumb dogs" that cannot bark.

If ever there was a time when the world needed true men it is now; men who are not for sale, and whose consciences are as true as the "steel to the magnet". We have some of them here on the coast, such as Revs. S. Mathew, R. Loggan, W. H. Pruett, H. L. Barkley, J. C. Scott, T. H. Organ, E. C. Wyatt, A. Beers, Geo. Baker and hosts of others. Then we have such men as Hon. Reuben Grant, of Philomath, Ore.; S. C. Taylor, Leeds, Ore., and Dr. S. Simpson, of Garfield, Washington, and many others whose whole soul is fired with a desire to see the iniquity stamped out.

The Free Methodists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Radical United Brethren are among the churches here which entirely exclude the lodge from membership. There are local churches, and individual ministers and members, of many other denominations, who believe in and practice this exclusion. What we need is a closer relation of these—more organized effort—a standing up all along the line to be counted. We have in our mind now, while we write, men whose influence would be potent on these lines of reform would they but come out and join with us in the organized effort to withstand and oppose the lodges. They are men who are, in heart, as much opposed to secret societies as the writer, or any others who are at present standing practically enlisted. We hope to keep hammering away until all the friends of the cause will step in and help.

We claim that the cause is worthy and should command the respect of all true reformers. Our labor is not in vain. Already we have results that are commendable. A number of persons have been already induced to leave their lodges through the influence of our organization. Only this past week, after an address on the evils of the lodge, we read publicly our constitution, and called for men and women to sign it. A very

CORRESPONDENCE.

UNGODLY COUNSEL.

DEKALB, Iowa, Sept., 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It seems very strange that, in the light of the present, in a land of Bibles, churches and Christians, iniquity abounds and the love for the truth has waxed cold with so many. Why are the times so evil? Why are churches so worldly and proud, since a large per cent of the citizens are Christians? Is it not because many are walking "in the counsel of the ungodly"? "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly." If the man is blessed who does not thus walk, it follows that he is walking in "the whole counsel of God," as far as he is intelligent in Bible truth. But "the counsel of the ungodly" stealthily lures many to not walk in the light of what truth they have. And if we heed that silent (and at times roaring) but certain counsel, our deeds are already evil, and we "love darkness rather than light". And because many in the church "give heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils," i. e., "walk in the counsel of the ungodly," the church is crippled by those of whom we had expected better things. Though a church be in the minority, like Noah, and unpopular with the world, if she be right, she has a better influence than a score of big churches whose members progress toward lodge-religion. What profit can there be for a church or any individual to live in harmony with any religion other than the Bible kind? Why try to serve two masters? The words of Paul should ring in the ears of every one, again and again, to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness"; "for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret". My friend, if you do not "rather reprove them," then you are walking "in the counsel of the ungodly". "One with God," "in spirit and in truth," "is better than a thousand" in influence who walk "in the counsel of the ungodly" into lodge darkness or any other iniquity. May God help the people to love the truth and give them grace to stand by it, even when it is unpopular, that they may not believe a lie and be condemned. CYRUS SMITH.

COLORED ODD-FELLOWS AND THE CHURCH.

1332 FITZWATER ST., PHILADELPHIA, Pa., September 2, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This leaves me well and very busy, fighting the twin enemies of our beloved land—rum and secret societies. We are just now on the verge of a battle.

We came to this city two years ago and resumed pastoral relations again after spending five years on the lecture platform. Our church is the Union Baptist, on Twelfth street. The Lord has greatly blessed our labors. The first story of the house was built by Dr. Stamm, our predecessor. It became too small, and hundreds were turned away every Sabbath; so we began plans to build larger and finish. The good Lord blessed us, and the building is on the way to completion.

Our congregation is poor, and, to help raise money, we let the light-entrances to families as memorial windows. To our great surprise, the Odd-fellows held a meeting and appointed a committee to secure the largest window in front, costing about $90.00. We needed money badly, and a number of our brethren thought it a good opportunity to get the window given to us. Our position on the lodge question was known, owing to the funeral of a deacon, some time ago. We told the Odd-fellows that they could put it in if they desired to give it with any Bible quotation, but that no lodge initials should go on. One of our trustees and a deacon was on the lodge committee. We called the officers together and told them that we had no convictions for sale, and that the lodge must not advertise itself in the church, as it gave balls that were largely ruled by "blacklegs" and anti-Christians. Confusion reigned a little while; when a brother who is a leader in the lodge arose, saying that he would stand by Bro. Jordan. This, with the help of others, put a quietus on the matter, as we thought; but it seems that a storm is brewing. Ninety dollars, in these times, is quite a bribe to offer to poor people; but we believe that God will get to himself great victory out of this incident.

We do earnestly ask for the prayers of all who shall read these lines. We are fighting the saloon and the lodge; the Lord has blessed our efforts in the past, and we are willing to trust our future with him.

This city is the headquarters and stronghold of colored Odd-fellows. We hear that there is quite a little dissatisfaction at our position; and as the men meet and talk it over, we cannot say what the outcome may be. The Afro-American is more intolerant than his white brother on the lodge question. As our Lord stood by Paul, saying: "Fear not," we believe that he stands by us, and we shall fight, watch and pray.

We hope to enter our church-home on the eighth of October (second Sabbath of the month). It will be one of the best meeting-houses in the city, among our people. It is 45 by 85 feet on the ground, and will seat about 1,000 persons. We now have room for only 450. Some of our friends cannot understand the matter, and blame us for keeping them from getting the $90 from the Odd-fellows. We are praying that the Lord will open their eyes. Yours in Jesus,

(Rev.) L. G. JORDAN

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects.

By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

LODGE NOTES.

(From secret society papers.)

The Women's American Protective Association of Kansas City, Mo., the American Eagle says, "is a charitable institution organized especially for philanthropic purposes, and, considering the fact that the association is but very recently organized, bids fair to surpass all previous efforts in that direction. The women have declared that they mean to make their presence felt and that the association will be aggressive in every branch of its good work. All worthy ladies are eligible except Roman Catholics or ladies having Roman Catholic husbands."

To talk of "masterly inactivity" in the face of history, and the fact that Rome is infallible and consequently never errs and never changes, in the light of her present aggressive attitude in this country, is the baldest kind of impudence. Let us never forget that as Freemasons "we are expected to carry the divine principle of justice and that spirit of freedom we are taught in our lodges into our daily walks through life, and to have been made a true citizen, and whenever our country is assailed, openly or otherwise, the trowel of the Mason is to be lengthened into a sword whenever it shall be necessary."—American Tyler.

A prolonged and earnest discussion took place at the last quarterly communication of the Grand Lodge of England land over the rights of the minority. It was finally held to be the law of Masonry that the majority of brethren in a lodge bind the minority; and the minority have to submit to the will of the majority; yet in the matter of continuing to hold a warrant, no matter what the majority, if any three brethren of the lodge continue, the majority cannot surrender it.—Ibid.

At a late quarterly convocation of the Grand Chapter of England, a member moved for a revision of the chapter ritual for the removal of its defects. Another opposed the motion, saying: "The revision of the Royal Arch ritual was conducted under the personal superintendence of the Duke of Sussex, who, it is well known, was an accomplished Biblical student and Hebrew scholar, as well as an expert in Masonic work. The revised ritual was adopted in 1834. Seriously speaking, the whole dramatic story of the Royal Arch is a romantic fiction, founded on anachronisms and impossibilities. It would not bear rough handling, and judging from the numberless so-called improvements that had been suggested, it would be very roughly handled indeed by such a committee as that which had been proposed."

THERE'S A SHOCK to your system, with the usual pill. And there's weakness afterward, and caused by it. How can you expect any lasting benefit from such things?

The nearest to Nature's own way is with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. In every derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels—Sick and Bilious Headaches, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks—they promptly relieve and permanently cure. No disturbance, no griping, no reaction afterward. They regulate the system perfectly—one tiny, sugar-coated Pellet is a gentle laxative or corrective—three for a cathartic.

They're the smallest, the easiest to take—and the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

Buy of reliable dealers. With tricky ones, something else that pays them better will probably be offered as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be, for you.

Too well known to need lengthy advertisements—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. 50 cents.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1893.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

AT LAPORTE, MONDAY, SEPT. 28.

The exercises will consist of addresses and discussions on Secret Societies and their antagonism to the church of Christ, the family and the state.

The invitation to attend is general, but with special reference to Northern Indiana, with a warm welcome for all friends of the cause.

Those who cannot be present may add to the interest and profit of the occasion by sending WRITTEN QUESTIONS, to be answered at the Conference. These should be sent at once to this office.

Rev. C. Saunders, Rev. James P. Stoddard, the New England Secretary, and W. I. Phillips, General Secretary of the National Christian Association, it is expected, will be in attendance.

Laporte is in Northern Indiana, on the L. S. & M. S., the Wabash, St. L. & P., and the C. and W. Mich. railroads, and easily accessible. It is hoped, therefore, that many from neighboring districts will come and strengthen the hands of the workers in this reform.

TESTIMONY OF NORWEGIAN LUTHERANS.

A note from Rev. B. E. Bergesen, 88 Waltham street, Boston, informs us that Eau Claire congregation of the Norwegian Lutheran Synod has lately had several meetings for discussion of the secret lodge question. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Preuss, in a clear and earnest address, explained his views of the secret orders, declaring them anti-Christian, since they purposely (in order to admit persons of all religious beliefs) omit and conceal the name of the only Saviour of mankind, the Lord Jesus Christ. The meetings closed on the 18th of August, after adopting a declaration that the pastor shall not attend any funeral where the lodges gather as secret fraternities.

One thing that is very characteristic of all meetings in opposition to secret societies was noticeable in these. While the pastor proved his statements from the rituals and books of the lodges, the defenders of the lodge system almost exclusively used personal accusations, which seem to comprise a large proportion of their usual arguments (?) on such occasions.

We congratulate those churches, of whatever name and creed, that have the wisdom and the grace to oppose the evils of secret societies and to denounce them as unworthy of the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ.

WHAT NEED OF SECRECY?

What need is there of secrecy in the lodge?

"I once belonged to a secret society of great prominence," says a credible witness, "and held my membership for many years, and there I saw nothing of any value to myself or others that might not be exhibited like a Punch-and-Judy show at the street-corners, and with about as much edification. Why was I bound by useless solemnities to do that which Christ not only openly commended, but actually requires his followers to do—to love my neighbor as myself? All the concomitants of the initiation—the varied rites, the regalia, the paraphernalia, the lectures, or the penalties suggested, could not make my obligation to do good to all men any stronger than that which the Bible openly declares. Nothing in the lodge or its ceremonies bound me to love God with all my heart, mind and strength, or to trust in his Son for my salvation. Seemingly no one there cared for these requirements of the Bible; and I think that I never saw a confirmed lodge adherent who (outside of his ministerial functions in the church) spoke to me upon these topics. The secrecy was confined to the lodge-work—the dramatic exhibitions and the recognition by-play. Honest men, imbued with the spirit of Christianity, have no need of either. They say 'yea, yea,' when necessary for the transaction of everyday business, or 'nay, nay,' if they cannot endorse some specific proposition, believing that any further expression of assent or dissent might lead to evil speaking."

In view of this testimony, we ask, Is secrecy necessary for purposes of lodge recognition? No more than the lodge itself; and men who love God with all their hearts and their neighbors as themselves despise the lodge and its secret signs and passwords. The ratio of dishonesty in these institutions may be estimated as equal to the secrecy required relating to the work performed. Lodge tactics require secrecy and silence among the membership if one, perchance, is known to be injuring the interests of some one outside of the sacred precincts. The system is acute—the lodge training is excellent.

Secrecy becomes such men as Guy Fawkes, anarchists and robbers of every degree; and in no wise resembles the prudent privacy that distinguishes the affairs of the family, one's business (however honorable) and neighborly confidence. That which prefers a claim to be considered a public benefit need hide nothing from the public; and that which, perforce, destroys confidence between men, or men and their wives and children, like a lodge obligation, borders on criminality. That which shuts the mouth of a witness who can disclose matters that would fulfill the aims and ends of justice when crime lays waste the lives and property of deluded citizens, is itself criminal—as unrighteous as the withholding of stolen goods from their owner, knowing that they are his. That which will strive, by the lowest subterfuges, to ruin an honest man's reputation and business because he flees from the lodge for his soul's salvation, is also criminal—is as foul and despicable as that which prompts the assassin in his midnight work. Yet all these, it has been proven, are in the spirit, if not the practice, of the lodge.

MASONIC PERSECUTION, AGAIN.

Far out in the Indian Territory, at Gwenn Dale, as some of our readers may remember, is printed a small monthly paper, entitled John-Three-Sixteen, the motto of which, from John's Gospel 3: 16, sufficiently explains the aptitude of its name. The editors and proprietors of this paper are Mr. J. E. and Kate T. Wolfe, who devote its pages to "Bible testimony, and the evangelization of the Indian Territory of the United States".

From past knowledge of Mr. Wolfe and his paper for a considerable period we are persuaded that its general tone reflects very much of the spirit of Christ in its treatment of moral and religious questions, and that it is calculated to do excellent work in evangelization among the unconverted.

Bro. Wolfe is an uncompromising Anti-mason, as every true Christian must be, and has not hesitated to denounce, from time to time, the iniquities of the secret lodge system in unmistakable terms. Quite recently—indeed, in the current September issue of his paper—he printed a letter in German dialect, setting forth the initiation of one "Carl Schrooger" in a Masonic lodge, after the usual form and ritual made public in "Ecce Orienti" (a Masonic expose of the Blue Lodge rites and ceremonies), Ronayne's "Handbook of Masonry," Doesberg's "Freemasonry Illustrated," and other publications of the National Christian Association.

Bro. Wolfe has a composing room at Gwenn Dale, where his paper is put into type; but having no press of his own, he has hitherto hired his press-work done at the printing office of M. E Milford, publisher of the Indian Chieftain, at Vinita, I. T.

When the September issue of John-Three-Sixteen was ready for the pressmen, the "forms," as usual, were sent to Mr. Milford's office, where they were put upon the press. Mr. Milford is a Mason. "This issue of our paper," writes Mr. Wolfe, "which contains 'Carl Schrooger's' Dutch letter, setting forth the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry, proved too strong a dose of truth for Mr. M.'s Masonic stomach; and so when the forms were put on the press, and after some three or four hundred copies had been printed, his attention was called to the character of the Dutch letter. He at once stopped the press, destroyed, or made away, with those already printed, and sent for us to come and take away the forms, absolutely refusing to print any more of the papers. We then went to the Globe office, and the proprietor refused to do the work for us, fearing the loss of patronage, as he informed us. Our only recourse was to take the heavy forms to the train and accompany them to some town in Kansas, where the work would be done and no questions asked. Our good friend Cavannes, of the Chetopa Advance, gladly took hold of the job, and by the evening of August 29 a large edition was printed."

In explanation of these circumstances, Mr. Wolfe has issued a supplement, in which he says: "If our readers desire to know why he did not print the paper, let them carefully read and ponder the dreadful oath every candidate for Freemasonry must take before he can become a member of the order. The oath explains the WHY. For a long time we have, with God's help, spoken with no 'uncertain sound' on that topic; and now, having duly counted the cost, we purpose, under the guise of broken German, and otherwise, to let the light on this institution of secrecy and darkness. We are not afraid of the threats made against our life. We have a God who protects us, and who backs us in our feeble efforts to preach and print his truth, and we shall go on so to the end, no matter what the consequences. Will all true children of God pray that we may have the wisdom and grace to continue faithful in service to our Lord Jesus Christ?"

JACKSON PARK CANNOT BE CLOSED ON SABBATH.

About two months ago, Chas. Clingman, claiming his right as a stockholder in the Columbian Exposition, brought a suit to compel the Directory to keep open the gates of the Fair on the Sabbath. The case was tried before Judge Stein of the Chicago Superior Court, and an injunction was issued in accordance with the prayer of the complainant, forbidding the closing of the grounds to the public on Sunday. This action on the part of Clingman was taken at about the time when United States District Attorney Milchrist carried the question of Sunday opening into the Federal court, Judges Jenkins, Wood and Grosscup presiding.

Judge Stein's was a temporary injunction, the final hearing being continued pending the decision of the Federal court.

In the meantime, the decision of the latter tribunal for a closed Fair on Sunday had been appealed by the Directory, and the arguments under that appeal were heard by Chief Justice Fuller of the United States Supreme Court. His decision, in favor of Sunday opening (reversing the opinion of the lower Federal court), was obeyed by the Fair authorities, and the gates were thrown open to the public on the following Sabbath. But the attendance on that day was, comparatively, very small. No machinery was running, and a majority of the exhibits were covered from view.

This state of affairs was discussed, with the result that the directors finally decided in favor of Sunday closing, notwithstanding the fact that the temporary injunction issued by Judge Stein had not been dissolved.

The closing of the Fair Sunday, July 23, placed the directors in contempt of court, and when the case was called in Judge Stein's court on the following Wednesday, Lyman J. Gage, Charles L. Hutchinson, Charles Henrotin, Andrew McNally and W. D. Kerfoot were fined $1,000 each for contempt. In the case of Director Victor F. Lawson the court held that the officer had voted in belief that the injunction had lapsed and was not intentionally guilty. In view of this mitigating circumstance a fine of $100 was imposed. Director-General George R. Davis was held less directly responsible and was fined $250, with the same provision regarding payment. Messrs. Massey, Forbes, St. Clair and Higinbotham were regarded by Judge Stein as instruments for the execution of the directors' ruling and were discharged. Director Nathan was also discharged.

The directors at once appealed from the decision of the court, and their appeal was granted.

The case was taken before Judge Goggin on this appeal, and he invited Judges Brentano and Dunne to sit with him, as advisers (he says), but the three really sat in judgment upon the case.

After the arguments were all in, Judge Goggin, as presiding judge, postponed the decision of the court from time to time, until Thursday last. Judges Brentano and Dunne had prepared written opinions in the case that the Clingman injunction should be dissolved, the Fair grounds closed to the public on Sabbath, and the Directory absolved from all responsibility under the injunction.

Before these two judges were permitted to render their decisions from the bench, Judge Goggin rudely declared himself opposed to the opinions of his fellow-judges and said:

"The opinion of this court is that the only way that I can defeat the opinion of the other two judges is to enter a motion to continue this case for sixty days."

There were earnest protests against this unexpected action, from the associate judges and the counsel for the Fair Directory, but no amount of argument could prevail with Judge Goggin to change his course.

Judges Brentano and Dunne then withdrew from the case. The bitter wrangle between the attorneys and Judge Goggin has been fully reported. The result was a continuance of the suit until about the time the Fair shall close, and an appeal was taken to a higher tribunal.

We have thus calmly reviewed this case to its present status, as a matter of news of interest to Cynosure readers and the Christian public. The course of Judge Goggin has already been severely criticised by the press, and will continue to receive the condemnation which it deserves.

On this subject the Chicago Record of Sept. 1 makes the following comment:

> The local bench, once held in high honor, is made a thing for laughter. The ribald tongue of the ruffian and the leer of the loafer, sodden with liquor and swinish in his appetites, grow full of gravity by comparison. The Record has many times and in all solemnity warned the voters of Cook county against the frightful error of choosing judges by partisan methods. It now declares that the disgraceful exhibition of yesterday is the legitimate result of politics as applied to the judges of the courts.

In obedience to the injunction issued by Judge Stein, and perpetuated by Judge Goggin, the directors of the Fair will continue to keep open the gates of the Exposition seven days in the week until it ends.

IRISH HOME RULE.

The passage of the Irish Home-Rule bill by the British House of Commons, on the 1st instant, by a majority of 34, is not only a personal triumph for Mr. Gladstone, but a recognition of the right of self-government for the Irish people—a right long denied, and granted only after a most protracted and earnest struggle.

General expectation that the bill would encounter intense opposition and defeat in the House of Lords was realized last Friday night. The vote stood 419 against the measure to 41 in its favor. This event is as great a triumph for Lord Salisbury as was its success in the House for Mr. Gladstone.

Whatever may be our opinion of the wisdom or unwisdom of this measure, as seen from an American standpoint, there can be no doubt that the motives which have governed Mr. Gladstone in urging it have been most noble and patriotic. He undertook it for the pacification of Ireland, and to heal the great wrong which centuries of hatred and strife have inflicted on the people of Ireland and England. It will be regarded as the crowning glory of the long and eventful life of the Prime Minister; and, although it has met with rejection in the House of Lords, it will doubtless constitute the basis of a final settlement, and the establishment of better relations between the two islands than have ever before existed.

—As usual, in going to the annual national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Indianapolis, last week, the preceding Sabbath was made a holiday by numerous excursions of old soldiers to the place of meeting. It is nothing new, but none the less derogatory to the spirit of our American institutions, as well as in violation of the divine command. The G. A. R. should set a better example before the rising generation of patriots.

—Bro. S. C. Kimball's paper, the Christian Witness, for September, remarks that the place for holding the next annual meeting of the New Hampshire State Christian Association has not yet been determined. As soon as possible it will be duly announced in the Cynosure. New Hampshire is a terribly lodge-ridden commonwealth, and the friends of anti-secrecy have a great work before them there. Earnest prayer and sympathy are greatly needed in their behalf.

—The desertion of prohibition by the Republican party of Iowa was one of those events that in their coming cast their shadows before them. The party in the State must needs be in harmony with the party in the nation. But the action of the tried and true temperance men of all parties at the Des Moines convention of the 5th inst., when Mr. Coffin was nominated for governor, was an independent protest against the repudiation, by the Republicans, of the now time-honored principle of prohibition. The fight ought to be a warm one this fall. It is too soon to even guess at the result, but not too early to enlist earnest prayer and labor in behalf of prohibition.

—As a result of the Geary Chinese Exclusion law, requiring the non-admission of Chinese immigrants, the registry of Chinese residents, and their deportation to their native land,—a measure that neither Christianity nor common justice can endorse—a document is published, giving the alleged ultimatum of the government of China to our own. Briefly, it declares that in case the law is not repealed, all Americans will be expelled from that empire, and the diplomatic relations of the two countries will be severed. Our law-makers make many mistakes, but they have seldom made a greater one than in adopting this infamous Geary law. It is true that its operation has been temporarily suspended, because there is no money set apart to enforce it, and that but one Chinaman has been involuntarily returned to China under its provisions; yet as long as it cumbers our statute books it is a blot upon our boasted liberties. Let it be speedily repealed.

—Rev. William Fenton, who attended the Nebraska special anti-secrecy conference at Wausa, recently, and delivered an address there, writes thus in a private letter: "If this nation could not exist when part free and part slave territory, how can this world stand if it remains part rebel and part loyal to God? We look for a final separation, that WILL be a separation indeed, with a witness." Mr. Fenton spoke twice at the Wausa conference. The church in which it was held was too small to hold those who wished to hear the proceedings. To relieve the pressure of the crowd, seats were built up around the church, and windows were opened for the benefit of those outside. Mr. Fenton spoke also at Sioux City, Wakefield, Oakland, Mead, Wahoo, Malmo and Swedeborg, and twice at Omaha. Other opportunities are opening for his work. He has sent in a large order for anti-secrecy publications, and a lively fall campaign appears to have begun.

promising young Christian pastor came forward and said: "I am a member of three different secret orders, but I now renounce them all, and join this anti-association, and will let my light shine hereafter."

At another point, not long since, a man who serves four orders became offended at our plain way of putting matters and left the house; but, somehow, could not go home, but tarried at the door, still listening. At the close he accosted the pastor of a prominent church on the subject of our lecture, and spoke very warmly, when the pastor answered him thus: "What's the use to get angry, for you know the speaker told the truth." The poor fellow replied: "I know it is so, but a fellow hates to be told of it." They both agreed that night to leave their lodges and have nothing more to do with them. Others are "on the fence". Let prayer be constant that they may drop on the right side. Heaven help them! P. B. WILLIAMS.

REV WM. FENTON IN NEBRASKA.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Sept. 9, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Nebraska conference on secret societies, held at Wausa, Nebraska, was well-attended. It was found necessary to erect a gallery outside of the church upon which the people might sit and hear through the open windows.

On Friday, September 1, Rev. F. N. Swanberg, the moderator of the conference, delivered an address on the subject of Secret Societies, in the Swedish language; after which the theme was continued in the English language and questions were discussed. A great deal of interest was manifested, and all Christians seemed to see the importance of keeping lodge people out of the churches. One wolf in the fold can corrupt and defile the flock.

At Oakland, Nebraska, a large brick church edifice was to be dedicated on the 4th of September. After the adjournment at Wausa, a large number of pastors took the early morning train for Oakland to participate in the dedicatory services. Rev. F. N. Swanberg is the pastor at Oakland. On the evening preceding the dedication an anti-secret discourse was delivered in the church in the English language. All the pastors present were decidedly unanimous in their disapprobation of lodgism, and lodgeites may as well let their churches alone. But in this city (Sioux City, Iowa) the case is different. Here the false prophets with lying spirits abound and deceive the congregations shamefully. Last evening a lecture in the English language on "The Relation of the Bible to the Claims of Freemasonry" was delivered in St. John's Lutheran church of the Hauges Synod, Rev. L. Harrisville, pastor. Rev, J. A. McKirkahan, pastor of the United Presbyterian church, attended the lecture and expressed the well-known view of his denomination as antagonistic to secret societies. Other American pastors were conspicuous by their absence. "He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be discovered."

This is the city in which Haddock, the pastor of the First M. E. church, was murdered by the rum-sellers. His successor in the pulpit is a Freemason, and, from an interview with him, it may be inferred that his church is as much like a house of Rimmon as anything else.

The pastor of the First Baptist church is what, in Masonic slang, is called a "Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret"—a 32-degree Mason. He is true to his Masonic obligations, and therefore a lying spirit has got possession of him, and, of course, he admires the principles of devil-worship, known as Freemasonry; therefore he dare not allow the claims of Freemasonry to be stated in his pulpit as they stand in Masonic authors and are practiced in his lodges.

The thanks of the N. C. A. are due to the Swedish Lutheran pastors and brethren of Nebraska for their sympathy and practical kindness.

Appointments for lectures are made for Wakefield, Omaha, Mead, Wahoo, Malmo, and Swedeburg. Yours truly, W. FENTON.

MOVEMENTS OF THE EASTERN SECRETARY.

ON TRAIN BETWEEN PHILADELPHIA AND N. Y., Sept. 8, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One week ago last night I spoke to a full house gathered in the Swedish Lutheran church at Waltham, Mass. Tracts were distributed, and a few expositions sold. The pastor, Rev. Mr. Jacobsen, was detained at home on account of sickness. He was better on the following evening, and, in company with a student from the Seminary, attended the lecture which I gave in Christian Union Hall, Cambridgeport. Several questions were asked at this meeting. Remarks endorsing what I had said were made by pastor Jacobsen.

At midnight I took the train for New York. Saturday evening found me at home. No one can better appreciate the blessings of home than the weary traveler. There is always a welcome for "papa" at home.

We were sorry to see that the G. A. R. of Washington still persist in running their Sabbath desecrating excursions. As heretofore, those attending the encampment at Indianapolis started on the Lord's day.

I am notified by dispatch that arrangements are made for me to speak in Winchester, N. H., on Sabbath, and I am now en-route for that city. Sister Powers, known to many of our New England friends, has arranged for this meeting.

One day in Philadelphia is better than many days in some places. I spent yesterday in personal visitation in that city. Old acquaintances were renewed, and ten subscriptions secured to the Cynosure. Shall we not have the next Pennsylvania State convention in this city? What say you, friends? W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME.

HIMSELF.

"Himself hath done it."

Once it was the blessing,
Now it is the Lord.
Once it was the feeling,
Now it is his Word.
Once his gifts I wanted,
Now himself alone.
Once I sought for healing,
Now the Healer own.

Once 'twas painful trying,
Now 'tis perfect trust.
Once a half salvation,
Now the uttermost.
Once 'twas ceaseless holding,
Now he holds me fast.
Once 'twas constant drifting,
Now my anchor's cast.

Once 'twas busy planning,
Now 'tis trustful prayer.
Once 'twas anxious caring,
Now he has the care.
Once 'twas what I wanted,
Now what Jesus says.
Once 'twas constant asking,
Now 'tis ceaseless praise.

Once it was my working,
His it hence shall be.
Once I tried to use him,
Now he uses me.
Once the power I wanted,
Now the Mighty One.
Once I worked for glory,
Now his will alone.

Once I hoped in Jesus.
Now I know he's mine.
Once my lamps were dying,
Now they brightly shine.
Once for death I waited,
Now his coming hail;
And my hopes are anchored
Safe within the vail.

DOUGLAS LEONARD'S REMORSE.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

(Concluded.)

He had to pass a graveyard—a poor, mean, dismal place, raised a few feet above the level of the street, and separated from it by a low parapet wall and an iron railing—a rank, unwholesome spot, where ignorance and superstition had done what they could to add to the horrors of the Christian's last sleep. He stopped, leaned upon the wall and stood there in meditation. The afternoon sun sank behind the maple trees, and still Douglas Leonard stood there, a feeling of guilt and despair at his heart, which, struggle as he might, he could not overcome.

As he stood there he suddenly remembered that he had been one of a jury, long before, on the body of a man who, in a drunken fit, had cut his throat, and that the man was buried in this place. He could not tell how he came to recollect it now. The man seemed to lie before him; the head was covered: the upturned marble feet he remembered well; and then suddenly he straightened up, and looked, rubbed his eyes and looked again. Yes, there was no mistake. There beside his mother's grave was a new-made grave! The sods were fresh and green, and he fancied he could smell them. Whose could it be? It was not there when he went away.

Suddenly upon the still summer air came the sound of a gay, cheery whistle, and the sweet strains of "Cauld kail in Aberdeen" were borne to his listening ears. It was Frank Hardy, his intimate friend. "Now I shall know who is buried in that grave," he said to himself. "Hallo, Leonard!" cried Frank Hardy, as he came within hailing distance; "got back? had a good time?" "Yes," said Leonard, "splendid! wish you could have been with us." "Wish so, too," said Hardy; "think I will next time." "By the way Frank, who is buried in that grave? there was no grave there when I went away." "Don't you know?" "No, how should I? who is it?" "Gertrude, your sister." "But what caused her death?" said Leonard. "Hydrophobia," said Frank Hardy. "You see that very day you went away a couple of Italians went to her with a little Spitz dog which they persuaded her to buy. The dog was mad! It bit her that very day and had to be shot. She went mad herself and died last Thursday and was buried yesterday. And those rascally Italians! They must have known the dog was mad. We have searched the whole country for them, but cannot find them."

Down upon his knees dropped Douglas Leonard and flung his hands wildly upward, while the expression of agony on his face was such that Frank Hardy unconsciously removed his cap and stood regarding him reverently, as one would regard the dead.

"Frank Hardy," he gasped; "it was I who sent Gertrude that dog! I bought it of those Italians and sent it to her for a birth-day gift; and I was drunk when I did it!" He buried his face in his hands for an instant, and then, looking up, he smote the empty air with his fists. "Oh, those murderous Italians!" he cried, "their evil faces have haunted me ever since that day! and yet I alone am to blame. I was drunk and knew not what I did."

He rose dizzily to his feet, and reeling to the churchyard wall, leaned heavily upon it and buried his face in his hands. He remained thus for several moments; and when he finally raised his head, Frank Hardy was surprised at the expression of his face, for the weakness and unreliability which had always characterized it had given place to a fixed and stern expression, while the droop which curved his beautifully chiselled lips was gone forever.

Uncovering his head, he said: "Frank Hardy, you are my only earthly witness, but hear me! Standing here, beside this grave and where two generations of my ancestors lie buried, and in full view of the grave where my cherished sister, whom I unwittingly murdered, lies sleeping, I swear never, never, never to touch liquor again! So help me God!"

"Amen," said Frank Hardy.

Douglas Leonard kept his vow. He never drank again.

A GOOD NEIGHBOR.

I have just read a notice of the death of a man who had for many years lived a quiet and industrious life on a farm, in which it is said of him, "He was a most excellent friend to neighbor with!" It is strong testimony to the character of any man who has lived for a long time in one place that he was a good man to neighbor with. It suggests that he was given to hospitality; that in his tongue was the law of kindness; that he was helpful in times of sickness and sorrow.

Misunderstandings between neighbors are fruitful sources of trouble. Disputes about line fences often cause bitter feuds; trespassing cattle give rise to lawsuits; controversies about estates separate chief friends.

How pleasant it is to live beside a friendly neighbor. If we do not love our next-door neighbors, how can we love those who are farther away? "Love God" is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it, "Love thy neighbor". There is an intimate connection between these two commandments. One is the seed, the other is the fruit. Some one has said that when God comes to a man, the man looks around for his neighbor. We should add to our faith neighborly kindness.

The law sacredly guards our rights of property, but one of the foundation principles of the law is, "So use your own as not to injure another". If this principle of law was faithfully carried into all our dealings with others it would solve many of the perplexing questions that now distract society. A distinguished jurist in this State says that this rule is a most valuable one and must be maintained if our civilization is to be cherished and preserved.

How many wars and riots and strikes might be avoided if nations and corporations and individuals would carry out the gospel law of love that "worketh no ill to his neighbor"!

Some of the maxims of John the Baptist deserve frequent mention: "Exact no more than that which is appointed you." "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any man falsely." "Be content with your wages."

A good neighbor is an evangelist to the people among whom he dwells. Preaching by one's life is oftentimes effective in winning souls. Bishop Brooks once said that one of the best methods of meeting skepticism was not an argument, but a man. A returned missionary tells of a heathen man, who bore this testimony to the Christlike character of a converted Chinaman: "There is no difference between him and the Book!"

Charity has been defined to be "active goodness."

A man who is actively good in his own neighborhood will not limit his benevolence to those who live close by, but will open his hand for the relief of those who are his neighbors within the broader meaning of the Gospel.

He that loveth his neighbor as himself hath fulfilled the royal law!—N. Y. Observer.

KINDNESS WON HIM.

A compositor on the Philadelphia Ledger fell into the habit of neglecting his work on account of intoxication, and was discharged. His wife came and pleaded with the philanthropist to give him another trial, but Mr. Childs said that it was business, not sentiment, and he could not take him back. When she had gone, however, he sent a man to learn the circumstances of the family, and found that she was a hard-working milliner, struggling to keep up appearances. The next day a millinery establishment was offered for sale, and Mr. Childs bought it, and presented it to the compositor's wife, and told her that although he could not employ her husband he could give her the means of living. The husband was so overwhelmed that he signed a pledge and has kept it ever since, and is once more a faithful workman.—Selected.

HOW JESUS MADE A DARK HEART LIGHT.

"Some years ago," said Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, "an Indian stood at my door, and as I opened the door he knelt at my feet. Of course I bade him not to kneel. He said: 'My father, I only knelt because my heart is warm to a man that pitied the red man. My home is five hundred miles from here. I knew that all of the Indians east of the Mississippi had perished, and I never looked into the faces of my children that my heart was not sad. My father had told me of the Great Spirit, and I have often gone out in the woods and tried to talk to Him.' Then he said so sadly, as he looked in my face: 'You don't know what I mean. You never stood in the dark and reached out your hand and could not take hold of anything. And I heard one day that you had brought to the red man a wonderful story of the Son of the Great Spirit.' That man sat as a child, and he heard anew the story of the love of Jesus. And when we met again he said, as he laid his hand on his heart, 'It is not dark; it laughs all the while.'"

THE SISTERS OF SALEM COURT.

It was one of those dismal days, partly heavy fog and partly sticking cold, when, if there can ever be an excuse for cross despondency, one might be excused for feeling what some folks call "down in the dumps;" and it was in one of those comfortless-looking dwellings, happily becoming scarcer and scarcer in Old England, that two aged sisters sat together, cowering over so small a fire that both pair of hands could not be warmed at one time over it, so first one sister, then the other, applied her numbed fingers to the handful of heat. At last Meggy, the younger sister, pushed herself fretfully back from the fender, and said in a querulous voice to her elder and more infirm sister, who had just spread her poor trembling palms over the coals:

"There now, you may take all the good that's to be got out of the fire yourself. I shall go back; it's no use trying to get warm. I don't expect ever again to be warm!"

"Dear life! don't 'e now? Why, I am expecting to be as warm as toast when the dear Lord's summer sun shines down, if I can't manage to get a bit of comfort into these poor old bones before!" And Keturah first gave a beaming smile at Meggy, and then with her quivering fingers tried to create a momentary blaze by thrusting a half-charred stick between the bars.

"What be doing of, Keturah? That is well-nigh our last stick, and I don't expect no more this side of the week. 'Tisn't like it used to be, when one of us could totter about the lanes and pick up a little kindling." This was from Meggy, who, in spite of her grumble, gave the stick a still farther push into the grate, muttering as she did so, "There! go in; though I don't expect any more!"

"I do, then! When Elijah couldn't go out to get his victuals, the Lord sent his victuals to him; and so long as the trees of the Lord are full of sap, I don't expect to be left without a stick to light my fire with."

Meggy gave an impatient shrug, and said, "I believe you, and the likes of you, would live on expectations if you could."

"If I could! Why, Meggy, that's just and only what I do. I live on them, morning, noon, and night; and what is more, I feast on them!"

The joyful earnestness in Keturah's voice startled Meggy; she looked at her sister in silence for a moment, and then said, in a softened tone:

"I really believe you do, Ket; I wish I could bring my mind to the same way of thinking; it is a mighty deal happier than mine."

"We can never bring our own minds to it. It don't come of self to look up to God and say, 'My expectation is from him;' but as to being happier for expecting only from my heavenly Father, that isn't the case at all."

Meggy started, as well she might, at words so strangely inconsistent with her sister's usual cheerful, because truthful, disposition. Keturah laughed, and then said:

"Ah, I thought I'd make you jump!—what I mean is, that it is not a case for being happier; first, because I couldn't be happy at all if such a poor old body as I am had to expect from any one else than him. I could not be sure of a single stick, let alone my many mercies, if I hadn't David's 'truly' to pin my expectations to. He tells us that it is them as knows the Lord that puts their trust in him; and if his blessed Spirit has taught old Keturah this best of all knowings, what can she do but believe in him, and expect from him?"

Old Meggy's only reply was, "I do hope, please God, I shall die first."

Now, perhaps the reader may think it was Keturah's turn to start; but no; she knew what her sister meant, and only replied, as quietly as though she were speaking of some every-day arrangement:

"Please the Almighty, I hope so, too. But if it is not his blessed will to take you home first, then you may be sure that he will not forsake you. And perhaps, when you are left alone to trust him all by yourself and for yourself, you'll learn to expect more than you do now. You won't have my expectations to look to, instead of expecting for yourself—a bad trick we poor souls are apt to get into, when we can put one body's faith against the other's want of faith; a shocking bad trick!"

"I can't trust myself," dolefully said Meggy.

"And you are not wanted to, either; that's the beauty of it. If you was, you would only have rottenness to trust to; but now you've got what the Bible calls 'A sure word of promise' to depend on, and what can any poor sinner want more?"

Keturah well knew that, through all her poor sister's weak and peace-destroying despondency in temporal matters, her soul was safe and sound. Safe, because her feet were firmly fixed on the Rock. Sound, because, whatsoever her mistrustful thoughts about her poor perishing body, she could look to Christ alone for salvation, having been taught by the Holy Spirit to feel, as well as say, "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby I can be saved."—Friendly Greetings.

SEIZING OPPORTUNITIES.

The Word of Life suggests an opportunity to each one of us in the following incident:

A lady once writing to a young man in the navy who was almost a stranger, thought, "Shall I close as anybody would, or shall I say a word for my Master?" and lifting up her heart for a moment she wrote, telling him that his constant change of scene and place was an apt illustration of the words, "Here we have no continuing city," and asked if he could say, "I seek one to come". Tremblingly she folded it and sent it off. Back came the answer, "Thank you so much for those kind words. I am an orphan, and no one has spoken to me like that since my mother died, long years ago." The arrow, shot at a venture, hit home, and the young man shortly after rejoiced in the fullness of the Gospel of peace. How often do we, as Christians, close a letter to those who we know have no hope, "as anybody would," when we might say a word for Jesus? Shall we not embrace each opportunity in the future?—Selected.

REPRODUCTIVE POWER OF MEMORY.

As the child, flashing about him a bit of burning stick, may seem to make a circle of flame, because the flame point moves so quickly, so memory, though it does go from point to point, and dwells for some inconceivably minute instant on each part of the remembrance, may yet be gifted with such lightning speed, with such rapidity and awful quickness of glance, as that to the man himself the effect shall be that his whole life is spread out there before him in one instant, and that he, God-like, sees the end and the beginning side by side.—Maclaren.

ALL IN THE DAY'S WORK.

All in the day's work—tired heart,
Lift the load bravely, and do thy part.
God will do his:
"And be the day weary, or be the day long,
At length it ringeth to evensong."

All in the day's work--straight from thee
Comes the right task—love sets for me:
I will attempt it;
"For be the day weary or be the day long,
At length it ringeth to evensong."

All in the day's work--let it be;
Or long or short, 'tis all for thee!
Singing I'll do it;
"And be the day weary, or be the day long,
I shall sleep to awake with the angel's song."

TEMPERANCE.

ALCOHOL AND HEALTH.

The Westminster Review, one of the leading great English magazines, contained a prominent article in a recent number on "Alcohol and Health." It is not often that the old school English monthlies discuss the temperance question at all, and such an article appearing in "Westminster" is sure to open the eyes of some of its readers. Dr. A. E. T. Longhurst, a well-known English authority, is the writer. The following extracts from the article may be of interest to many readers:

Intimately associated with the subject of health of both mind and body, is that of temperance, and the use and abuse of intoxicating drinks; and the wise physician, in his endeavor to solve the problem for the benefit of himself and mankind generally, will calmly and studiously try to understand the human organism, together with the nature and action of the fruits of the earth upon it, as well as that of alcohol and its compounds; so that his conclusions may be scientific, so far as present knowledge permits, and not merely popular or general.

Now the human body is composed of both solids and fluids, the former receiving their support from the latter, or from the blood itself, as the product of the various "food stuffs" which are received into the stomach for the purpose of nutrition, there to be liquefied for assimilation and the healthy maintenance of the organs and tissues, and the performance of their several functions in the animal economy. Looking back to the primitive condition of human life, before even the use of the "still" had become known, we see the importance of, and necessity for, "fruits" in the human system, while their abundant provision, especially in all hot countries, is a proof that they were given to us as both real food and drink in themselves, and not for conversion by the agency of the "still" into alcohol, wine and malt liquors, to disturb healthy functional activity, and by their abuse or excess to brutalize our nature. Before, then, we advocate the use of alcohol, let us ascertain if it is a natural product, and as such provided for our consumption like other fruits of the earth; and, if not, the sources from which it is derived, its properties and actions in the system. In this way, and this only, we may hope to arrive at something like accuracy of judgment in regard to it.

Does alcohol exist ready-made in nature, or is it formed within the body as the result of changes in the food taken for nutrition? The only scientific answer to these questions must be, No. It is not found ready-made in nature, nor is it formed in the body as the result of decomposition of the food-stuffs taken; on the contrary, nature would seem to have especially guarded herself against such a possibility, for any sugar formed in the process of digestion is not converted into alcohol, but passed out of the system through the usual channels. If we look to the properties of alcohol we find scientists, both home and foreign, agreeing that in large doses it is a narcotic poison, killing by suffocation through its paralyzing influence on the respiratory nerve-centres; and in smaller but continuous doses, by the structural changes which it exerts in the several organs and tissues of the body. Chemically, it is a hydrocarbon, devoid of nitrogen, hence can give no real or permanent strength. By its action on the blood-cells it checks oxidation by limiting their power of absorbing oxygen and eliminating carbonic acid, and by its strong affinity for water it dries up the tissues, causing thirst; hence, its own renewed and repeated consumption. Alcohol, therefore, in any quantity, interferes more or less with the purification of the blood and the healthy oxidation of the tissues. Such an action cannot but be a cause of disease, and injurious in many diseased conditions. Now food is that which nourishes, repairs waste and builds up tissue, and must therefore contain products or elements allied to those of the body that it is intended to nourish; our bodies and our foods consisting essentially of the same materials. By the oxidation of alcohol in the body, it is without doubt a source of energy, but it does not therefore follow that it is a source of food. To establish such proposition, it must be shown that the energy thus liberated is used to aid the performance of a normal function. It is not enough that chemical potential energy is transformed into kinetic energy; the transformation must occur at the right time, in the right place, and in definite parts of the tissues, which themselves are not so constituted that they can be fed with any and every combustible material.

It is a common idea that alcohol produces a warming effect in cold weather; this feeling of warmth depends, in the first place, on the fact that the paralysis of the central nervous system causes an increased blood supply to the surface of the body; and, secondly, in all probability, on the blunting of the sensibility of the central organs which are concerned in the sensation of cold. The stimulating action which alcohol appears to exert on the physical functions is also only a paralytic action. Again, there is a strong belief that alcohol gives new strength and energy after fatigue has set in; the sensation of fatigue is one of the safety-valves of our machine. To stifle the feeling of fatigue in order to be able to work on, is like forcibly closing the safety-valve so that the boiler may be over-heated and explosion result. The belief that alcohol gives strength to the weary is particularly dangerous to the class of people whose income is already insufficient to procure subsistence and who are misled by this prejudice into spending a large part of their earnings on alcoholic drinks, instead of purchasing good and palatable food, especially meal, cheese, milk, meat and other nitrogenous food-stuffs, which alone can give them strength for their hard work. It is commonly thought that alcoholic drinks aid digestion, but in reality the contrary would appear to be the case, for it has been proved that a meal without alcohol is more quickly followed by hunger than when it is taken.

A PROHIBITION TOWN.

Harriman, Tenn., is a town founded on prohibition principles by the East Tennessee Land Company. It has made a rapid growth, but at the present time, like many other places, it is feeling the effect of a general prostration of business. Many of the settlers there have been young men, whose families have sent them to be out of the way of temptation to drink spirituous liquors—for no saloons are permitted. About half of the work-shops have suspended operations—the rolling mill is in the hands of a receiver and working but a portion of its usual hands. The foundation of the large hotel, commenced at the inception of the place, has been given, together with thirteen acres of land, for a university.

BIBLE LESSON.

THIRD QUARTER—QUARTERLY REVIEW.

LESSON XIII.—SUBJECT.—Events in the Life of Paul.—September 24, 1893.

GOLDEN TEXT.—So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.—Romans 10: 17.

Open the Bible and read the lesson.

DAILY READINGS.—M.—Acts 16: 19-34 T.—Acts 17: 22-31. W.—Acts 19: 1-12. T.—Acts 20: 22-35. F.—Acts 26: 19-32. S.—Acts 27: 30-44. S.—Acts 28: 20-31.

LESSON I.—Paul Called to Europe.—Acts 16: 6-15. Golden Text.—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.—Matt. 28: 19. Principal Points.—How to settle difficulties; how God guides us; how a woman was converted, and how she showed that she was a Christian. Central Truth.—That there is ever "something more to follow" in Christian work.

LESSON II.—Paul at Philippi.—Acts 16: 19-34. Golden Text.—Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.—Acts 16: 31. Principal Points.—Why bad men hate the Gospel; how good men act in a time of trouble; an answer to prayer; the great question of life; the true answer; the change wrought by believing. Central Truth.—The first great question for all to answer is, "What shall I do to be saved?"

LESSON III.—Paul at Athens.—Acts 17: 22-31. Golden Text.—God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.—John 4: 24. Principal Points.—The effect of the Gospel; the benefit of studying the Bible; the character of God explained; our duty to him; the day of judgment. Central Truth.—This is eternal life, to know the only true God, and Jesus Christ his Son.

LESSON IV.—Paul at Corinth.—Acts 18: 1-11. Golden Text.—The preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved, it is the power of God.—1 Cor. 1: 18. Principal Points.—Seven good persons named; what good each one did, and how God comforted Paul. Central Truth.—The Gospel makes progress through daily labor, by burden for souls amid discouragements, with God's help, by patient continuance in well-doing.

LESSON V.—Paul at Ephesus.—Acts 10: 1-12. Golden Text.—When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth.—John 16: 13. Principal Points.—A gift we all need; a faithful minister and some things that he did; two ways in which the religion of Jesus was proved. Central Truth.—To the earnest Christian God gives new light, new life and new power.

LESSON VI.—Paul at Miletus.—Acts 20: 22-35. Golden Text.—Remember them which have the rule over you, who have spoken unto you the word of God.—Heb. 13: 7. Principal Points.—Four things to do—take heed, guard against enemies, abide in the grace of God, follow Paul's example; what God is able to do for us; "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Central Truth.—The faithful teacher warns and counsels his flock.

LESSON VII.—Paul at Jerusalem.—Acts 21: 27-39. Golden Text.—For unto you it is given, in the behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake.—Phil. 1: 29. Principal Points.—An example of courage and faith; how to answer slanders; an example of misunderstanding others; how good came out of evil. Central Truth.—Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all.

LESSON VIII.—Paul Before Felix.—Acts 24: 10-25. Golden Text.—Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong.—1 Cor. 16: 13. Principal Points.—God overrules even bad men and bad actions, so that they help the Gospel; something (vs. 15, 25) which is a comfort to Christians and a terror to sinners; a right and a wrong way) vs. 16, 25) of treating conscience. Central Truth.—All things work together for the advancement of the Gospel.

LESSON IX.—Paul Before Agrippa.—Acts 26: 19-32. Golden Text.—Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God.—1 Cor. 1: 24. Principal Points.—The right way to treat the Gospel; two wrong ways of treating it; the first duty of all; one who knew and believed the Bible, but did not obey. Central Truth.—When God calls us, we should obey him.

LESSON X.—Paul Shipwrecked.—Acts 27: 30-44. Golden Text.—God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Psalm 46: 1. Principal Points.—How God's promises are fulfilled; some examples of selfishness; some examples of helpfulness; our help in time of trouble; wherever a good man may be, he tries to do good. Central Truth.—The Lord is our deliverer from trouble and danger.

LESSON XI.—Paul at Rome.—Acts 28: 20-31. Golden Text.—I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.—Rom. 1: 16. Principal Points.—Our trials may help to do us good; we should be Christians everywhere; we should speak kindly of our enemies, but rebuke their sins; we should learn what God requires of us and do it. Central Truth.—Paul fought a good fight, finished his course, and kept his faith to the end.

LESSON XII.—Personal Responsibility.—Rom. 14: 12-23.—A Temperance Lesson. Golden Text.—It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor anything whereby thy brother stumbleth.—Rom. 14: 21. Principal Points.—Difficult questions in the early church discussed; how to settle them; something about the kingdom of God; the things which we should follow after in our daily life. Central Truth.—One central pillar of the temperance cause is self-denial for the good of others.

THE CONCLUSION OF THE WHOLE MATTER.

What have we learned in these lessons that we should especially remember? What for the guidance of our own lives? What have we learned to avoid? What elements of the Christian life have been made clear and beneficial to us?

Persecution spread the Gospel of Christ, and faith, courage, hope and forbearance won victories over sin, trial and death.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

In the September number of the Century Magazine Bret Harte begins his two-part novelette—The Heir of McHulishes. Articles beautifully illustrated are as follows; Sights at the Fair, by Gustav Kobbe; Wm. James Stillman, by Wendell P. Garrison; Six Bulls to Die, by Mrs. Norman Cutter; The Taormina Note-Books, by Geo. E. Woodbury; The Angel with the Flaming Sword, by E. A. Blashfield; A Glance at Daniel Webster, with a portrait, by Mellen Chamberlain; A Woman in the African Diggings, by Annie Russell; When Polly Takes the Air, by Lizette W. Reese; Balcony Stories, by Grace King; In Her First Youth, by Lydia F. Emmet; DeFoe, the Author of "Robinson Crusœ," by M. O. W. Oliphant. Benefits Forgot, by Wolcott Balistier, is continued, and the White Islander, by Mary H. Catherwood, is concluded. Other papers of interest are: The Horizon Line, by Thos. W. Higginson; The Census and Immigration, by Henry Cabot Lodge; Phillips Brooks' Letters from India; The Hilton's Holiday, by Sarah Orne Jewett, and Leaves from the Autobiography of Salvini. There are also several poems, editorial comments on Topics of the Time; several Open Letters, and lighter sketches by various writers. New York City: The Century Co. Price 35 cents.

The Preacher's Magazine for September is edited by the Revs. Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory. The leading sermon of this number is by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, and is entitled St. Paul's Gospel. Prof. George G. Findlay, the noted English commentator, contributes the first part of an able article on The Study of the Bible, which will be concluded in the next number. The Rev. R. A. Watson writes on the Progress of Doctrine, being his third article on the Apostolic Churches. The senior editor continues his most helpful papers on Moses; His Life and its Lessons. The Homiletical department, which consists of outlines of sermons, for various occasions, is full and complete. Among the contributors are Rev. Messrs. Gregory, Watt, Hyde and Cowell. Among the other departments in the usual able style which the editors give to every department of this magazine, are the Notes and Illustrations, Notes on the International Sunday-school Lessons, Outline Addresses on the Golden Text and About Books. This magazine is highly commended by the religious press and by noted clergymen of all evangelical denominations. A sample copy will be sent for 15 cents. The yearly subscription is $1.50. Wilbur B. Ketchum, Publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

The Review of Reviews for September is a number of great variety and timeliness. It epitomizes the events and opinions of the whole planet for the month of August, 1893. It discusses the monetary crisis, the silver debate, the tariff outlook, the Bering Sea decision, the French attack on Siam, the progress of the Home Rule bill, the politics of the European continent, various matters at Chicago and the World's Fair, and a hundred other current subjects, the whole number being profusely illustrated with portraits and pictures. A sketch of Engineer Ferris and his great wheel is a singularly readable and attractive article, and Mr. Stead contributes a most noteworthy character sketch of Henry Somerset. There is an illustrated review of the fascinating story of Joan of Arc, the inspired Maid of Orleans, and a group of papers on the silver question by professors in the University of Chicago. The "Leading Articles of the Month" are notably well-selected, while the Record of Current Events gives one a summary day by day of the remarkable course of the recent monetary crisis, and the cartoon reproductions in the Current History in Caricature are uncommonly entertaining. New York: 13 Astor Place. 25 cents.

Eighty-three pages of the September issue of the Cosmopolitan are devoted to the following features of the World's Fair at Chicago, which are artistically illustrated with nearly one hundred fine engravings: A First Impression, by Walter Besant; The Foreign Buildings, by Price Collier; Notes on Industrial Art in the Manufactures Building, by Geo. F. Kunz; An Outsider's View of the Woman's Exhibit, by Ellen M. Henrotin; Foreign Folk at the Fair, by Julian Hawthorne; Electricity at the Fair. by Murat Halstead; Transportation, Old and New, by J. Brisben Walker; Mines and Metallurgy, by Chief F. J. V. Skiff; Chicago's Entertainment of Distinguished Visitors, by H. C. Chatfield-Taylor; The Government Exhibit, by Chief F. T. Bickford; Ethnology at the Exposition, by Chief Franz Boas, and Points of Interest, by Ex-Pres. Benj. F. Harrison. The first installment of Mark Twain's new illustrated story—Is He Living, or Is He Dead?—is printed in this issue, with several other matters of interest. Published in New York City. Price 12½ cents.

Dr. Holbrook's excellent Journal of Hygiene for September, as usual, is rich in medical and household lore. The editor has a sterling paper on Vegetarianism and Agriculture, several additions to his trustworthy Notes Concerning Health in everyday life, and some very readable comments on Topics of the Month. Mental Healing is defended by Mrs. A. E. Denning; Helen L. Manning finds Danger in the Communion Cup, and Jennie Chandler ably treats of Woman's Reserve Force. Few magazines contain so much of valuable intelligence in so limited a space as this. Published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York City. Price 10 cents.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—The American Home Missionary Society has been formally authorized by the New York Supreme Court to change its corporate name to "Congregational Home Missionary Society," and will be legally known by this title after Oct. 1.

—The Swedish churches, of which there are fourteen in Connecticut, have for the past few months enjoyed a good degree of prosperity. Zion church, Hartford, has added during the year twenty-nine members on confession. Emmanuel church, New Haven, dedicated a house of worship costing about $16,000; Portland added nineteen on confession; Deep River dedicated a house of worship and added sixteen on confession; Thomaston dedicated a house of worship and added fifteen on confession; Washington, composed of members who had belonged to the First church, was received into fellowship, and Woodstock dedicated a house of worship.

EVANGELISTIC.

—Dr. Stoecker, the famous ex-court preacher, is holding special meetings in the Chicago Avenue church. He speaks especially for Germans and the meetings will continue as long as the doctor remains in Chicago. The course will be part of the work of Mr. Moody.

—Mr. Moody on Monday week began a two months' series of meetings at Central Music Hall. The hall has been secured for that period and religious gatherings will be held daily. Dr. Stoecker was one of the assistant preachers introduced at the initial meeting. He made a short speech, in which he emphasized the fact that he came here to help Mr. Moody to preach the Gospel and not to make any attack on the Jews.

—At these meetings the Rev. John McNeill occupies the noon hour and speaks to business men on the same lines that he spoke on in Glasgow, Edinburgh, Belfast, Dublin, and other cities.

FREE METHODIST.

—The annual meeting of the General Missionary Board of the Free Methodist church will be held in Chicago, Illinois, commencing Tuesday evening, October 17, 1893, at 7 o'clock.

—The annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Free Methodist church, and also the Publishing Committee, will be held in Chicago, Illinois, on Wednesday evening, October 18, at 7 o'clock.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—At the International Sabbath-school Convention at St. Louis, recently, E. Payson Porter presented his report, which shows that there are in the United States 121,797 Sabbath-schools, with 1,303,254 officers and teachers and 9,688,506 scholars.

—The Presbyterian exhibit at the Columbian Exposition has not been opened to the public on account of the Sabbath opening. It will remain covered until the gates are closed or the Fair is over.

HOME AND HEALTH.

IRONING DAY.

Iron the starched clothes first, then the bulky articles. The hand will become tired in time, and if the light pieces were taken first there would be no strength or spirit left to attack the rest. The secret of rapid and successful ironing is to have the clothes thoroughly dampened and the irons very hot. The dampness prevents scorching, and with the hot iron one can make every pass tell and do away with that muscle-wearying and clothes-destroying rub, rub, rub, which is necessary to produce even an unsatisfactory result with dry clothes and chilled irons. Table napery especially should be very wet, in order to bring out the pattern and result in gloss. Pillow cases and similar articles should be ironed from the seam, in order to fold even. Handkerchiefs should be pulled out so as to lie square, and then be ironed flat. Never iron a handkerchief in creases, and always iron it on both sides. Properly speaking, a handkerchief is an article with no wrong side. Embroidery and embroidered ruffles should be ironed on the wrong side, and a strip of thick blanket provided to press them on. This brings out the pattern and is another labor saver, making unnecessary the olden "bearing-down" process. In the labor-saving line, also, is placing sheets, neatly and evenly folded, under other articles which are being ironed. Sheets treated in this way will be found quite smooth enough to use, after a little additional pressing on the hems.—Good Housekeeping.

THE BLESSING OF REST.

Every person, no matter how strong either in body or mind, needs rest. It is one of the strictest of nature's laws. There must be a period of relaxation after severe labor. This is met in various ways by the merciful and wise provisions of the Creator and Father of mankind. Even the plants and trees do not grow all the year.

Man has his night for rest. Then comes the Sabbath, which so many would gladly destroy, but cannot without peril to humanity. But even these are not enough. Those who labor as hard as they ought to labor during the rest of the year, should have a vacation.

Thin or gray hair and bald heads, so displeasing to many people as marks of age, may be averted for a long time by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.
BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wan'ed one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' said 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: 'A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. .... The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each.

General Washington Opposed to SECRET SOCIETIES. This is a re-publication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10cts each.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction AND MURDER, AND OATHS OF 33 DEGREES. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 300 pages; cloth, $1.00.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and law of the Union and of the States. By Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15cts each.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Templars of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor. By a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25cts each.

The Anti-mason's Scrap-Book, consisting of 53 "Cynosure" tracts. In this book are the views of more than a score of men, many of them of distinguished ability, on the subject of secret societies. Postpaid. 25 cts.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents connected with Bernard's Revelation of Freemasonry 10 cents each.

Secrecy vs. the Family, State and CHURCH. By Rev. M. S. Dury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church, is clearly shown. 10cts each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disfellowship secret societies. 10cts each.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor United Presbyterian church. 5 cents each.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational church Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear area of the objections to all secret societies, and to Masonry especially, that are apparent to all. 5cts each.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." 25cts each.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of his sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have.

FARM NOTES.

STOCK AND DAIRY.

If you have no silo you can have green food late, if not all winter. Sow rye.

The pastures with us are dried up, so that cows are fed hay and grain as in winter. The looked-for rains may give us fall feed; otherwise the supply of feed will run short before the spring of 1894.

In some neighborhoods corn is drying up so badly that it is being cut for fodder, with no show of there being any grown worth the husking. But better have fodder than nothing, or run the risk of nothing, by present appearances.

If short of hay or fodder, sow rye. It will give abundance of pasturage late in the fall, and during winter, if not covered with snow. If not in condition next spring for a paying crop as grain, it may be turned under and help out the corn. Some claim the winter feeding betters it for a crop of grain—causes it to stool out more than it otherwise would. Be that as it may, it makes good pasturage. Sow some.

The books of the DeCamp dairy, Willets, Cal., show that since the 6th day of last March up to and including August 5th, it had manufactured 3,544 pounds of cheese, and 3,894 pounds of butter. The start was made last March with twenty-six cows, but the herd was gradually increased until it now numbers forty-four. The average make of cheese per day is ninety pounds, ranging from seventy-five to 120 pounds. Besides the 7,438 pounds of butter and cheese made from these forty-four cows, forty-four calves have been raised and food furnished for eighteen head of hogs, which will average 175 pounds each by Christmas.

A farmer in Somerset county, Mo., finds that his straw is worth more than his wheat. He produced 630 bushels of wheat on thirty-five acres, or about eighteen bushels to the acre, which at the price ruling when the calculation was made indicated for the crop a value of $12 per acre. His straw weighed two tons per acre, and was worth $8 per ton, or $16 per acre. The aggregate value of the grain was $403, of the straw, $528. —Farm, Field and Fireside.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

Mrs. Rev. W. M. Howie, of 3557 Prairie avenue, is giving rooms, breakfast and evening dinner for $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75 per day, according to rooms occupied. By the week, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00. Parlors and bedrooms are all convenient, and furnished for rest and comfort. The residence is four miles from business center, and three from Fair grounds. The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

Talks to S. S. Teachers.

After a long and unavoidable delay, the author,

Rev. J. G. Terrill,

is ready to issue the above-named book. This book is the result of twenty years of experience in the practical work of the Sunday-school, the Teachers' Meeting, Conventions, and Lectures to Teachers. The work will be of 200 pages or more, divided into five departments:

I. The Sunday-school Organization and Management.
II. Methods of Work.
III. Studies in Human Nature.
IV. Rules of Interpretation as Applied to the Bible.
V. Illustrative Exercises, for Primary Classes and Children's Meetings.

As to the subject matter, the manner of treatment, and the price of the book, the author has kept in view the wants of the officer and teacher of ordinary talent and attainments.

Its price after February 1, 1891, will be 50 cents per copy.

All orders received before that time will be filled at 40 cents per copy, postpaid.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT
of the Holy Ghost,
BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested ,and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by persuing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

We are now planning for the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies. It will be held, God willing, in the Fine Art building, Lake Front, Chicago, October 5. The sessions will be at 2 and 7:30 P. M. Papers are promised by Rev. Joseph Cook, Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Bishop H. J. Becker, and Rev. M. A. Gault. Other gentlemen will be on the program, and there will be opportunity for others interested to speak. This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend. The program will be announced in the near future.

INDIANA CONFERENCE.

AT LAPORTE, MONDAY, SEPT. 28.

The exercises will consist of addresses and discussions on Secret Societies and their antagonism to the church of Christ, the family and the state.

The invitation to attend is general, but with special reference to Northern Indiana, with a warm welcome for all friends of the cause.

Those who cannot be present may add to the interest and profit of the occasion by sending WRITTEN QUESTIONS, to be answered at the Conference. These should be sent at once to this office.

Rev. C. Saunders, Rev. James P. Stoddard, the New England Secretary, and W. I. Phillips, General Secretary of the National Christian Association, it is expected, will be in attendance.

Laporte is in Northern Indiana, on the L. S. & M. S., the Wabash, St. L. & P., and the C. and W. Mich. railroads, and easily accessible. It is hoped, therefore, that many from neighboring districts will come and strengthen the hands of the workers in this reform.

ATTENTION, IOWA!

The annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November. Where shall we meet? The Executive Committee desire to locate the meeting where the largest measure of good may be accomplished. Invitations are solicited, and they will be carefully considered. Address all communications to T. P. ROBB.

Linton, Ia.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CALL FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19–22, commencing on Thursday at 2 P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath.

Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, Pastor A. L. Smith of South Newmarket, Pastor George L. Kibbee, of Manchester, Ezra T. McIntire of Boston, Pastor J. Q. Adams of Gilford Village, and others have been invited to speak. Barnstead Parade is on the Suncook Valley R. R., about 20 miles from Manchester. Reduced railroad rates expected.

We should be glad to have our friends in neighboring States, who desire to see the church delivered from lodge rule, meet with us. The Gospel will be preached in its purity, and the various reforms presented from a Christian standpoint.

We expect the Lord to be with us in mighty power, to bless and save. S. C. KIMBALL,

Secretary N. H. C. A.

In our Washington letter, this week, will be found an interesting statement of the present standing of the Geary Chinese-exclusion law, and our relations with China, growing out of this unjust measure. That China should resent this injustice is very reasonable, and to be expected.

Late mail advices from Vienna expose a deep-laid scheme in Europe to elect a German successor to Pope Leo XIII. Political reasons for such a step are said to exist, and a conference between the Emperor of Austro-Hungary, the Emperor of Germany, and the King of Italy, at Buda-Pesth will soon be held, with this object in view. It is deemed a severe blow at French and Italian Catholics, over whom the Vatican now holds supreme sway.

The Voice of Masonry objects to this declaration of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod as "grossly uncharitable and treasonable". "We testify not only against secret societies themselves, but also against the civil authority which gives to them a corporate being, and against the churches which permit their members to be connected with them." That is a good testimony, even if it is "treasonable" to the lodge power in the civil government, and "uncharitable" towards the evils of the lodge system, which is the foe of the church, the home and the state.

Concerning the recent Swedish Lutheran Conference at Wausa, Neb., and the anti-secrecy work performed there, Bro. Fenton writes: "The convention was a very busy one for the denomination, and was conducted mainly in their language. They gave me, however, the audience for about two and a half hours after they had just listened to a sermon, in their own language, one hour long. So they kept their seats without, I think, even rising to sing, for three and a half hours, showing that they are a zealous people." Indeed they are, even in their good works.

From our exchanges and personal correspondence we are apprised of a strong opposition to the World's Fair Congress of Religions, which is now in session here. One kind and level-headed friend writes: "It seems to me that it must work evil and be an instrument in the power of Satan for that purpose. Is it not antagonistic to the call for separation of God's people from the world, and subversive of 'taking forth the precious from the vile?'" So it must undoubtedly seem to those who "have obtained like precious faith" with Peter and the other apostles, "through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 1: 1.)

Roman Catholic Cardinal Vaughn, who succeeds Cardinal Manning in England, "has set before himself and the church no less an achievement than the restoration of the papal power in England. He has recently placed that country under the 'special patronage of the Virgin Mary and the Apostle Peter,'" in these prayers: "O immaculate Virgin mother of our Lord Jesus Christ, and queen of the kingdom of thy Son, humbly kneeling before thee, we offer thee this country in which we live. Before it was robbed of the holy faith, all its children were thy children," etc., etc. Peter he thus addressed: "O blessed prince of apostles, vicar of Christ, shepherd of the whole flock, rock on whom the church is built," etc. Sending supplications to such addresses is quite as absurd as mailing letters to obsolete business houses through the Dead-Letter Office.

THE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH AND REFORMS.

[Its position as stated by Rev. J. M. Foster, pastor of the Second Reformed Presbyterian church of Boston, Mass.]

In the Roman Pantheon a place was found for the gods of all nations. But when they offered space for Christ, the Christians scornfully repelled the suggestion that Christ could stand on an equality with idols. He must reign and all must bow to him. In the World's Congress of Religions at Chicago a hearing is accorded to every religious faith upon earth. With shame we note the fact that the professed followers of Christ have consented to stand on that platform, along with the defenders of every form of false religion. Christ is betrayed by his friends. The mission of Christianity is to overthrow and drive out every false and wicked thing. That Christianity is an aggressive force in the world is evident.

I. It is strikingly taught in the Scriptures. God gave the land of Canaan to Abraham in covenant. But the enemies of God occupied the land until the appointed time came. Then the armies of Israel went in and conquered them and took possession of the promised inheritance. And Caleb said: "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." This world has been given to Christ in covenant But his enemies still possess it. "We see not yet all things put under him." He is enlisting his soldiers. He is preparing to overthrow the strongholds of evil. "These made war with the Lamb, and prevailed not, for he is Lord of lords and King of kings." "I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more."

The king of Babylon saw in vision a great image, representing the world-powers. He beheld, until a little stone, cut out without hands, smote the image on its feet and it became as chaff of the summer's threshing-floor, and was carried away by a rushing mighty wind. And the little stone became a mountain and filled the earth. Christianity is the kingdom of the Stone and is ultimately to become universal. The kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal until the whole was leavened. Christ's kingdom will go on assimilating and incorporating the children of men until the race, with its social and political order, has been leavened with Christianity. The sun advances from twilight to the noon-tide, and from the equator to the tropics, being to both North and South "the perfect day". "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." All these Scripture facts confirm the truth that Christianity is an aggressive power, driving out and subduing the evil, and establishing the good everywhere.

II. The nature of Christianity makes this inevitable. Right is opposed to wrong. Truth must eliminate error. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?" Wendell Phillips said, in 1837, in Faneuil Hall: "This land is not large enough to contain slavery and freedom." In 1852 Seward declared in the United States Senate: "There is an irrepressible conflict between slavery and freedom." In 1858 Abraham Lincoln said: "This land cannot exist half-slave, half-free." In 1861 these two principles came into collision and freedom triumphed. This world is not large enough to contain the kingdom of darkness and the kingdom of light. The Saviour said: "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace; but when a stronger than he shall come upon him, and overcome him, he taketh from him all his armour wherein he trusted, and divideth his spoils." The strong man is Satan, the god of this world. The stronger than he is Christ. Christ has met Satan on the field of law and conquered him. He is now meeting him on the field of fact, and he will overcome him. "Satan shall be bruised under your feet shortly."

III. The history of Christianity confirms this. The promise recorded in the third chapter of Genesis is called the protevangelium. It was the germ out of which grew the perfect system of divine truth which we have in God's Word, which is the power of God and the wisdom of God in them that believe; which is the light that scatters the darkness of ignorance and error and depravity and superstition before it; and which is the sharp sword with two edges, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.

When the Saviour ascended the disciples numbered 120. But very soon they occupied Judea, Samaria, Egypt, Syria, Greece and Italy. Within three centuries they had so leavened the Roman Empire with Christian principles that paganism went down and Christianity ascended the throne of the Cæsars. Wherever the Gospel went it destroyed polytheism and idolatry, elevated women, exalted men and moulded human society. Military men have three maxims: "Seize the enemy's strong centers," "Occupy the enemy's important outposts," "Keep open communications between the strong centers and important outposts." Christ is conducting the conquest of this world. He has seized the great centers of modern civilization. Germany, England and America are controlled by Christianity. He is seizing the outposts. India, China, Japan, and the islands of the sea are yielding to the Gospel. Open and swift communication is kept up between these centers and outposts. This campaign will soon end in complete victory.

IV. The experience of the believer establishes it. When we are born into the kingdom as newborn babes we desire the sincere milk of the Word, that we may grow thereby. But when we have grown strong we must have the great doctrines of God's Word. Hence Paul said: "For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskillful in the word of righteousness: for he is a babe. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." The believer dies daily unto sin and lives unto righteousness. The house of Saul waxes weaker and weaker, and the house of David waxes stronger and stronger.

The National Christian Association protests against the lodge and calls upon God's people to separate from the wicked system. That is well. The Reformed Presbyterian church refuses to fellowship the members of the lodge. That is better. The National Christian Association protested against the opening of the gates of the World's Fair on Sabbath and the selling of liquor on the grounds. That was good. But the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church voted not to go to the Fair at all, because of these evils. That was better still. The National Christian Association protests against the influence of the "secret empire" in our civil and political life, and bears testimony to the fact that the society of the Jesuits and the lodge are a standing menace to the Republic. That is well. But the Reformed Presbyterian church enters its political dissent against the government that accepts authority under a compact that admits these secret plotters to places of power and trust, and refuses to exercise her political privileges in the political body, so long as the evil remains unremoved. This is much higher ground.

The ten tribes protested against the injustice and wrong which they had suffered under Solomon's reign, and required his son Rehoboam to lighten their burdens. But he refused. Then they separated and formed another government. That was their political dissent against the maladministration of government. But there was a greater evil, which was the fruitful cause of all the other evils which they suffered, and that was the idolatry which Solomon's strange wives had introduced. For this sin the hand of God was upon the whole nation, and hence the division. But the ten tribes did not protest against this evil. Their dissent did not reach the real cause of their trouble. That is a type of too much of the dissenting to-day on the part of God's people.

The Prohibitionists separated from the Republican party because it advocated taxing and licensing the liquor traffic, and from the Democratic party because it believes in low license and free whisky. But they do not separate from the political body which has adopted a compact of political atheism for its Constitution. This is the greater evil. The idolatry of Israel is unrebuked. The National Christian Association has lifted up its testimony against the lodge. This is well. But the great tap-root of the evil has not been cut. Is it not time to enter our ecclesiastical dissent against the churches that fellowship the lodge and our political dissent against the government that charters and sustains the lodge, and refuse to commune in the one, or exercise our political privileges in the other, until they repudiate and drive out the lodge? "Consider this, take advice, and speak your minds."

Boston, Sept. 4, 1893.

ISLAM IN AMERICA.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

The Moslem World, a large, finely executed 16-page monthly newspaper, and having an embellished cover, is published in New York City by the Moslem Publishing Company, and is devoted to the promotion of Mohammedism in America. Its editor is Alex. Russell Webb, formerly a United States Consul in Turkey, and a convert to the Moslem faith.

We have looked over its pages with some care and, we trust, with candor, to discover, if we could, anything to commend it to the friends of humanity, to say nothing of Christians, as such. It is earnest in vindication of Mohammedism, and bitter in its opposition to organized Christianity, which it holds up to ridicule, in about the spirit manifested by Robert G. Ingersoll and the distinctively anti-Christian papers.

It is remarkable that a system of religious faith which is but one grade above paganism, and which has never produced a true civilization, and has, everywhere and always, been allied with slavery, the slave-trade, polygamy, and wars of conquest and aggression, should find defenders and advocates in our land.

We believe, however, that this movement is one of the events prophesied to occur during the last days; that three unclean spirits like frogs should come out of the mouths of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, and gather their forces for a great and final conflict with Christianity. "For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and the whole world to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty." (Rev. 16: 14) Whatever may be our interpretation of "the dragon" and "the beast," there can be no doubt that "the false prophet," at least, includes Mohammed, who has done more to deceive and to scourge the nations of the earth than any other religious teacher.

We would not be unjust to Moslemism. We would hold it only responsible for what it is, and what it does. That a large share of the Moslems (though by no means all of them) abstain from the use of alcoholic drinks, is much to their credit. It is better than paganism, and has done something for the Negro tribes of the Soudan. But it has only raised them in a degree. They make no further advancement. Christian nations always make progress. Not so with those nations where the influence of the false prophet prevails. A religion that can show no higher civilization than that of Arabia, where the Moslem faith is oldest, and no better government than that of Turkey, where it is the strongest, has no special claims on the friends of humanity.

CATHOLICIZING THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Baffled for the time being in her attempt to secure government school funds to support sectarian or parochial schools, the catholicizing of our splendid and powerful public school system is a shrewd papal scheme. Romish control of public schools actually converts them into Catholic church schools—instance introduction of Romish text-books and the Pope's picture on every school desk. Is this desirable? Is it safe for the popular government? That most popular American lecturer, Rev. Joseph Cook, in one of his world-read lectures says of Romanized schools: "1. It is historically true and notorious that Romish priests, when they had their way, never gave their parochial primary schools sufficient instruction to fit a population for the responsibilities of free government. 2. Roman Catholic parochial schools are avowedly intended to destroy the American public school system. 3. The instruction given in them is always sectarian, generally mutilated and sometimes thoroughly misleading. [Examples were given from Romish text-books.] 4. The Roman Catholic authorities wholly deny to civil government the right to conduct the secular education of the people. 5. The church denies to the parent the right of private judgment in the matter of education. Refusal to send the children to the priest's school is followed by a denial of the rites of the church."

Two prominent business men of West Chester, Pa., were thus denied the Catholic church sacraments for persisting in sending their children to the public schools, and Archbishop Ryan sustained the priest in his despotic action. Bismarck, the greatest German statesman, declared that the saddest sight he ever saw was the mutilated text-books used in the French parochial schools. The learned Mr. Froude found this systematic mutilation both in America and Europe. But it is not necessary to chase over other States and Continental Europe to find Catholic influence in school matters. In Gentry county, as a religious matter Romanists would drive our American Protestantism from the public school or withdraw their children. And in an adjoining district, as a concession to Romanists, Catholic teachers designated as such are to be employed half the time. The Protestants of this community are face to face with the question and the issue must be met. The influence that is driving our American Protestantism from the public schools and institutes and is filling the schools with Romish instructors, in the end would dismiss every Protestant teacher, outlaw the Holy Bible, and give our sons and daughters an insufficient, defective and erroneous education, wholly unfitting them for Christian liberty, free government and personal independence.

The writer attended a public school where Catholic readers were used, telling the wonderful miracles performed by Saint Patrick, and the most ridiculous and ghostly superstition. He heard enough ghost stories to make any Catholic child afraid of the dark. They were such wild tales as are now being systematically and successfully run by Catholic legerdemain in so many dailies and patent sheets. It is such silly nonsense that goes to make up a pious, superstitious papist; and it is such twaddle they would instill in the minds of Protestant children everywhere.

The Catholic schools are tyrannical. The papers report the escape of two sisters from Ursuline convent, Pittsburgh, Pa. The Southern Evangelist says: "The bishop had been consulted, and his orders were emphatic that they must be found at any cost and taken back to their Oakland home. Is it possible that any religious order will be allowed to exercise such tyrannical power as this in America? If inmates of a church prison rebel against their incarceration and escape, what right has any bishop to bring them back against their will? Evidently the bishop has forgotten in what country and in what century he lives. The account reads like a chapter out of the history of the Middle Ages."

Roman Catholicism believes in coercion and force in education, in temporal, and in spiritual affairs. The great battle-ground between Protestantism and the papal power in this country will be the public school and the family circle.

Darlington, Mo.

THEY KILLED FOREIGNERS.

At the abduction and murder of Morgan, in 1826, all concerned were Masons, except a coachman, and he was immediately taken into a lodge and initiated, to secure secrecy. This would have been impossible had he belonged to the prohibited classes, or had he been a cripple, fool, young man in nonage, old man in dotage, or female, excluded by the landmarks or constitutional laws of the order, and murder would have been necessary to ensure silence. It would have been the sole alternative, as is evident to all who will carefully consider the matter, for Masonic law is as inexorable as that of the Medes and Persians.

In the Eleusinian mysteries of ancient Greece, foreigners constituted the prohibited classes, and under similar circumstances would have been put to death to secure secrecy. It is true that uninitiated citizens were sometimes killed for intruding into the temple at the initiations, but it is evident that secrecy could have been preserved by initiation, if desired. But in the case of foreigners this could not have been done, for they were debarred by a fundamental law. They were incapacitated, like the old and young men, cripples and females, in Masonry.

But why were foreigners excluded? Was it due to the superiority in which the Greeks held themselves above all other nations, like the white inhabitants of the South above the colored people? or to their inability to give guarantee of secrecy from absence of permanent interest?

The modern mysteries are a copy of the ancient, and the resemblance is so great in many other particulars that questions of the one may be answered by the analogies of the other. The books of Masonic authors are written on this plan, for they are filled with descriptions of the ancient mysteries to elucidate the modern. In the "Master's Carpet," Ronayne has classified and forcibly presented these for the ready reference and comprehension of the fraternity and the public. In the same manner the ancient mysteries may be illustrated by Robinson's "Proofs of a Conspiracy," Levington's "Key to Masonry," and the last edition of "My Experiences with Secret Societies." But light may be thrown upon both by the Bible, from the twenty-fifth chapter of Numbers, where (in the language of the book) the Israelites first went whoring with the daughters of Moab, to their overthrow, which speedily followed their complete corruption in Ahab's time by the votaries of the same religion.

VERITAS.

A LETTER TO A MASONIC FRIEND.

DEAR BROTHER IN CHRIST:—I was a little surprised to find that you are a Royal Arch Mason; but as the "Masonic religion" has become so common I was not much disappointed, for, as our Sabbath-school lesson, last Sabbath, shewed us, even Solomon himself was a supporter of more than one religion—and Solomon is great authority in Masonry!

But was Solomon right in doing so? Nay, "his heart was not perfect towards the Lord his God," and hence his departure from the strict obedience which he otherwise would have rendered in the Temple only, and not also at the altars of Ashteroth, Chemosh, etc., to please his magnificent harem. What is the defect among the bishops, reverend doctors, deacons and members of Christian temples now, that they go after the strange gods which are unknown to the Scriptures, except as representatives of idolatry? Why do so many church members, in our day, seek thus to be wise above what is written? Why do they ignore what is written for our reproof, instruction, correction, in righteousness, and, instead of being warned, conform to the present form, or forms, of idolatrous usages which have been preserved among the people?

The answer must be found in the fact that man inherits the same nature which led him astray in Eden, to the golden calf at Mt. Sinai, led by Aaron and 3,000 slaves; and when misled by Jereboam—the same nature as led Judas to sell Christ for gold, and led some of the churches to hold "fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," instead of reproving them. So divine wisdom foreshadowed the historical character of Christendom in the picture given of the seven churches of Asia, only one of which was fully approved, and she was in great poverty, and rich in faith, but the other six churches were far more popular! They tolerated Balaams and Jezebels and the Nicolaitans, and other sins which the Lord condemns; but one, otherwise censured, is approved for hating the deeds of the Nicolaitans.

Which of the churches thus enumerated would we, as members of Christ, prefer to be like? If our hearts are as true as David's and not like Solomon's, we would prefer to be like those who were poor, and persecuted, and imprisoned, but rich in faith, though thus "despised and rejected of men." To "come out and be separate" from Royal Arch Masonry, or any other such "brotherhood," would necessarily expose you to their censure; and it is trying to mortals thus to incur the displeasure of their fellows. But in the face of the scribes and Pharisees of our day, it is the duty of the true Christian to follow the true Christ, and to heed his warning against the false teachers and false Christs who would appear—those who would invite them to go forth to the desert—as the Mormons—and worship while enjoying polygamy; or those who invite us to the secret chamber—as the Masons—where our Christ tells us to believe not that he is there. (Matt. 24: 26.)

On looking at the Royal Arch degree in Mackey's "Ritualist," you may see the profanation of a professedly correct extract from 2 Thessalonians 3: 6–16, by the omissions of "the name of our Lord Jesus Christ," and "by our Lord Jesus Christ," the effect being to substitute Masonic authority for Christ's, and this by acting and making Freemasonry a "deceiver and anti-Christ."

Look also at the prayers of this degree, and say if, as a Christian, you can unite in such petitions as omit our Lord's name as the only way to the Father. These prayers, and all strictly Masonic prayers and rituals, regard our Lord as no more to Masonry then Mohammed or any other religious teacher.

There is much more presents itself that is so contrary to Christ and the New Testament, that I merely say now—if you desire to know more—there are some true-hearted men and women who are sufficiently aware of the errors of Masonry to show you wherein this modern Diana (or Baal, rather) is inimical to Christianity.

There may be points of inquiry you would like to have answered, and there are answers by many writers who, like Finney of Oberlin, were snared, but withdrew and exposed the errors which had seduced them. Hoping deliverance for you in due time, I am Yours for Christ, T. H.

CHINESE HIGHBINDERS IN CALIFORNIA.

The Highbinder is as much a product of San Francisco as is the hoodlum. The difference between them, according to the Kansas City Times, is less in kind than in degree. Both are wantonly cruel and given to excesses of many sorts, but the white congener does not so generally resort to extremes in his assaults upon respectable citizens, who are invariably his victims. The Chinese hoodlum rarely meddles with any respectable man of his race. The gambling establishments and the houses in which women are gathered are his chosen places for blackmailing, and in enforcing his demands the pistol is used, or the hatchet, or "fighting bar," as may be most handy. His fighting, when plying his trade among those whom he blackmails, endangers no lives but such as are already beyond the pale; but when the various Highbinder societies settle differences their fighting men meet on the streets and use firearms. Very often non-participants are shot, and at all times there is danger, because the fierce wretches become utterly reckless and send their bullets flying promiscuously. They have learned the capacity for harm which lies in the revolver, and always use that weapon when assassinating or fighting other "Binders."

When a Chinaman buys a pair of boots he selects the largest to be had, because he gets more leather for his money. In buying pistols only those of the largest caliber suit him, and of those he purchases the most superior. No cheap affair can be sold to a Highbinder. A Colt six-shooter of 44 or 45 caliber divides with the Smith & Wesson, the Remington and the Merwin & Hurlbert his esteem, but all must shoot the cartridges ordinarily prepared for use in rifles. As a rule the "double-action" pistols are preferred for the reason that Highbinder shootings are always hurriedly done, so that police interference may be avoided and the fighters get under cover in the labyrinths of Chinatown. The weapons are never bought directly by the men who will use them. Several gun stores are located almost within the bounds of Chinatown, San Francisco. In Baker alley there is a curious "department store," which is partly given up to hardware and firearms and the rest to pawnbroking. It is a tumble-down shop presided over by a weazened old Chinaman, who remains strictly neutral as to the warring Highbinder societies. They can all buy pistols from him and pawn them at his place when the immediate occasion for use has passed.

The arms are rarely purchased until a man has been doomed to death or a fight between "tongs" has been decided upon. Then some respectable-looking Chinaman, perhaps a merchant, visits a gun shop and with the utmost care selects one or more revolvers of the largest size. The pistols are critically examined as to "pull," certainty of action in the cylinders and the length of the point on the hammer which strikes the primer and discharges the shell. Nearly all of those purchased have long barrels, seven and one-half inches, and are arms intended for navy or army use and to be carried in holsters. But the Highbinder has no use for a holster. When he takes up the pistol it is to kill some man within a few minutes and mayhap on short notice, so he must have his weapon where it can be gripped and put into action instantly. The peculiar dress of the Chinese especially favors the murderous "Binder" in concealing the pistol and yet having it under command. The long, flowing sleeves of the outer garment worn on the street by all Chinese serve a double purpose on the Highbinder.

Often the assassin detailed to kill some fanciful enemy or opponent of a "tong" straps his revolver to his forearm by a rubber band or other fastening, from which the weapon can be instantaneously disengaged. The pistol lies along the inner portion of the arm, where it can be carried without attracting attention. If one of the Chinatown detectives chances on purpose to brush strongly against the "Binder" in passing nothing is felt of the weapon that is ready for use as soon as the man marked for death appears. At other times, when waiting about for a street fight to begin, or when walking from a tonghouse to some battleground, the pistol is carried in the waistband of the trousers, where it can be quickly reached by lifting the blouse. In cold weather it sometimes becomes necessary under the High-binder code to put a man to death, and then the assassin may take his six-shooter in the hand and conceal it by turning down his sleeves. That way of carrying the pistol is considered equally as desirable with the manner also affected in cold seasons when the "Binder" covers the hands by hiding them in his sleeves, as the ladies use a muff. One hand holds the pistol, and when the victim can be stolen upon the pistol is merely pushed against the cloth and fired through it. No one sees the pistol and it is easy for the murderer to escape in the excitement which always follows a gun-fire in Chinatown.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A problem of nature.—"Purifying the stage."—The Evangelical Alliance.—A nunnery at Wellesley.—Anglomaniaism.—A Morgan case among the Knights of Labor.

Why doesn't nature keep her bright colors for the old age of the year? In the early spring she gives us the pale blue of the forget-me-not, the virgin white of the snow-drop, and the delicate flush like that of the conch-shell in the trailing arbutus and the petals of the apple blossom. Certainly she shows a fine sense of the fitness of things according to our human view; for don't we call these "baby colors," and consign them by common consent to those who are still in the dewy glamour of life's young morn? Later she dons the deeper, richer hues, suited to a matron in her prime; but, later still, how she riots in color, upsetting all analogy, and making us wonder if, after all, the popular taste has not been mistaken in delegating all the more somber tints to age and middle life. Maroon, and carmine, and madder, mixed in with russet and vandyck brown; deepest orange and palest gold, with every possible shade between; dreamy blues that would do for the trimming of some celestial robe, and Tyrian purple, royal enough and earthly enough for Helen of Troy;—she wears them, every one. In this grand carnival of beauty with which the season closes is there not a lesson which should not be lost through lack of eyes to see and ears to hear?—a lesson of cheerful hope and confident expectation that life's autumn days will be like these;—holding the best wine until the last. Didn't wise old Bunyan place his Beulah Land, not at the beginning or the middle, but the very close of Christian's pilgrimage? Not least among the things that should make us rejoice as an omen of good for humanity is the sight now so common of men and women who, fifty years ago, would have been dubbed "old" and relegated to the chimney-corner as their proper place, standing at the front and filling up their days with such gracious and beneficent activities that when death at last cuts them down we feel as we do when the autumn frosts sweep away in a night all this rare glory and beauty;—that it is right and best, the inevitable thing, and yet—we are not prepared for the stroke. If it could only have been delayed a while longer!

Apropos to the talk about "purifying the stage," how does this paragraph sound, from a Boston daily, in relation to a new dramatic entertainment: "We do not know what kind of a play 'Venus' is, but the name of it is likely to draw a crowd to see, anyway. Boston has gone the way of all the rest of the country on light plays and singing, as witness the attractions now on. People are going to the theaters, in these days, to be amused, and for not much else. They get it, too." Here is an admission that the general run of theater-goers are attracted by a name which naturally brings up sensuous images to the mind. Further comment is unnecessary.

The Evangelical Alliance recently held an interesting meeting in the Bromfield M. E. church. Rev. E. D. Burr gave a good opening address, in which he pointed out very forcibly the radical difference between "influence" and "power"; the former being a human and the latter a supernatural force. Power with God, not influence with man, is what the Christian pastor should seek. This view of the subject can be seen to have an important bearing, although Dr. Burr did not allude to it, on the attitude of pastors in relation to reform. Who has not known the minister as afraid of hurting his influence, as if it was a kind of fetich?—who, for this reason, never rebukes any popular evil, or is willing, even though conscious that the lodge is hurting the spiritual life of his church, to let his pulpit be used by an anti-secret lecturer? Power with God will make a reform ministry and nothing else.

Dr. Lorimer was the closing speaker, and said some good things, as he generally does. But there was also the usual "fly in the pot of ointment". Perhaps it is only natural, he having taken all the higher Masonic degrees which had their origin in French Jesuitry, that he should speak kindly of the Romish priesthood; otherwise we might lay it to a well-intentioned but mistaken liberalism when he said: "God bless the Roman Catholic church in trying to succor everybody that is needy." Dr. Lorimer ought to know, if he doesn't, that the subjects of that church form the majority of the inmates in our alms-houses; while, if we confine the question to private charity, here again we find her poor the largest recipients of Protestant bounty; but who ever heard of our Protestant poor being helped by Roman Catholic funds? In fact, the remark is common from Romanists, when asked why they do not appeal to the priest: "Oh, the priest will not do anything for us." Dr. Lorimer was right, however, in saying that the grandest work can be done in little churches and neighborhood meetings, and also in hitting Back Bay Sunday-dinner parties and wine-drinking. "The miserable rich," to quote Moody, need evangelizing as much as "the miserable poor".

Wellesley is to be the location of a nunnery, in the not-very-distant future, if all reports are true, the land on which Dr. Cullis intended to rear his new Consumptives' Home having been bought for that purpose by a Montreal agent. A great-grandfather of the writer used formerly to own these broad acres which are now to pass into the hands of aliens, both in blood and religion. What he would say, could he come back to earth and witness the change, one can only imagine. Nobody surely would have had the temerity to make such a prophecy, or the credulity to believe it, at the opening of this century, when Romanism seemed as little likely to gain a foothold here in New England as Buddhism. I wonder how many foolish Protestant parents will send their daughters to the school that is to be attached to the nunnery, to be educated. Rome sees the value of New England as a strategic point, and appreciate to the full the sweetness of a triumph gained in the very stronghold of her ancient foes. She has lately captured two of our minor literary lights—George P. Lathrop, and his wife, who was a daughter of Hawthorne; but she does not care so much to make converts to her communion as to chloroform press and pulpit, and keep them from sounding any note of alarm at her steady encroachments.

Fashion assures us that combinations of black and white are to be most in favor the coming season; not on artistic grounds, but because the half-mourning worn in English court circles, the past summer, has just crossed the Atlantic and become "the style". This is Anglo-maniaism gone to seed. This aping of a foreign fashion after it has gone by on the other side of the water is too much like Bridget copying her fashionable mistress. It is time that self-respecting American women set their own styles.

The Knights of Labor at Charlestown, Mass., are having an experience, on a small scale, which is a faint reminder of Morgan times. One member accused another of betraying the secrets, whereupon the latter promptly sued the former for $5,000 damage. This is a rather high valuation to put on secrets which the members of these organizations generally claim are no secrets, or at least "don't amount to anything, anyway". If the society declares the accused to be guilty of the charge, "it will be almost an impossibility for him to secure work at his trade;"—so says a Boston paper; adding that "he has a large family to support". The K. of L. will hardly dare to Morganize him; but why is a process of slow starvation and boycotting any better?

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

President Eliot, of Harvard University, is reported as expressing the opinion that there is a great diminution in drinking in all colleges, and that great progress is being made in that direction, especially in the colleges of England. The effect on colleges here and abroad, he thinks, has been brought about, to a large degree, by the decrease in drinking in society.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13, 1893.

The much-talked-of Geary anti-Chinese law was within the last few days very near to being the cause of a rupture of the diplomatic relations between China and the United States—just how near will probably never be generally known—which would have endangered the life of every American residing in China, and might have resulted in a costly and bloody war between the two countries. No official statement of the matter has been made, and it is not probable that any will be made, but the main facts, which are well known to many persons in Washington, were about as follows: The administration—whether as a result of political influence, or to forcibly bring the matter to the attention of Congress, your correspondent cannot positively state—had determined to enforce the Geary law, which has practically been a dead letter since it was enacted, and the statement was made officially that Secretary Carlisle was engaged in preparing instructions for minor U. S. officials to guide them in enforcing the law. As soon as that fact was published, the new Chinese minister called upon Secretary Gresham and filed a strong protest from his government against the enforcement of the law, which he claimed to be a violation of treaties existing between the two countries. He also informed Secretary Gresham that if the law was enforced his government would not be responsible for the lives or property of Americans in China. That brought about a reconsideration, and the result was the announcement that the law would be suspended pending Congressional legislation.

Meanwhile several bills have been introduced in Congress bearing on the subject—one of them, which is understood to be favored by the administration, extending the time for the registration of Chinese residing in this country, under the Geary law, until October 1894, and another prepared by Rev. Gilbert Reed, who has been for some years a missionary in China. Mr. Reed, who is now in Washington for the express purpose of trying to show members of Congress how the matter is regarded in China, has strong and vigorous opinions on the subject. He thinks the Geary law an unjust one, and that its enforcement would do the United States much more harm than China; it would lessen the respect of the Chinese for our Christianity and civilization and undo much of the good that has been accomplished in China by American missionaries. Representative Geary, the author of the law, wants it enforced whatever the consequences, and he goes so far as to say that American missionaries are as little wanted in China as Anarchists are in the United States. The general impression among Congressmen with whom I have talked is that some more satisfactory legislation than the Geary law will be passed by this Congress, as many who voted for the Geary law are opposed to forcibly deporting the Chinese already here while willing to keep others from coming. They supposed when the bill was before Congress that the Chinese already here would register, as they probably would have done if allowed to follow their own inclinations.

On Monday Rev. I. N. Canter, who is acting as chaplain of the House of Representatives during the illness of Chaplain Haddaway, in his opening prayer mentioned the child which has "gladdened the nation and the home and heart of the chief magistrate of the country." He prayed that divine protection be given to both mother and child, and that the little one might grow up with every grace and womanly virtue.

The saloon-keepers of Washington are getting alarmed as the time approaches for them to procure licenses under the new law, which goes into effect November 1. They are just beginning to realize that the temperance people are united, and determined that no licenses shall be issued except in accordance with law, without the full facts being made public. If the temperance people can hold the commissioners up to the duty which they have sworn to perform without fear or favor, the national capital will soon have fewer saloons than it has had for many years.

Three important conventions of colored Baptists are about to convene in Washington—Foreign Missions, Home Missions, and Education—the first meeting to-morrow, and the last remaining in session until the 21st inst. Although three separate bodies, the delegates will be in many instances the same in all three. Among the important matters to be taken up are propositions for the establishment of a publishing house and for the building up of a summer school on the Chautauqua plan, on property in Maryland which has been offered as a gift for that purpose. In view of these two subjects, to say nothing of other important business to be transacted by them, who will say that the colored people are not making rapid educational progress? What would have been thought of the man who would, twenty years ago, have seriously proposed a Chautauqua school for colored people? *

THE N. C. A. EXHIBIT AND SUNDAY OPENING.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

That the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday is a great outrage, and that the action of the World's Fair management in defying our national Congress and public sentiment, and lawlessly opening the Fair on Sunday, was anarchistic and wicked in the extreme, was and still is the unanimous opinion of the Directors of the National Christian Association. Could they have foreseen such action, or had there been reason to expect it, they would have had no exhibit at the World's Fair.

When it seemed probable that Sunday opening would prevail, we, the committee having this exhibit in charge, were instructed by a unanimous vote to remove the exhibit, if allowed to, provided Sunday opening was established. While this fight was going on we were not idle spectators. With other exhibitors, who believe in Sabbath observance, we daily uttered our testimony against Sabbath-breaking and united in the effort to get exhibitors throughout the Fair to cover their exhibits on Sunday, and, as far as they would, to put up Scripture quotations rebuking and forbidding Sabbath desecration.

That effort was crowned by Almighty God with remarkable success; and the few thousands who attend the Fair on Sunday go away cursing the almost universally hidden exhibits, and wishing they had staid at home; while hundreds, if not thousands, who had forgotten God, finding his rebuking word everywhere, are, we have reason to believe, later found among the vast crowds that throng the great tents, theaters and halls where Moody, McNeill and other evangelists of world-wide celebrity proclaim the glorious Gospel of the Son of God. And the power of God is daily manifested in the salvation of multitudes. The following, from the Union Signal of September 7, is not an overdrawn statement:

"This is the happiest summer of my life," said Dwight L. Moody, the other day, in speaking of the Christian work which he and his colleagues are accomplishing in Chicago. It will be remembered that one of the strongest reasons assigned for Sunday opening of the Fair was that the visitors would not attend divine services on the Sabbath, and so be at the mercy of the open saloon and theater. This statement has proved as false as the one that the "laboring man" wanted an open Sunday Fair. The churches of Chicago were never so crowded as during this season, and never were so many halls and theaters turned into places of worship. Audiences of fifty thousand people is a small average for these extra meetings. It is expected that September will be a very active month with Christian workers and that thousands of World's Fair visitors will return to their homes with a spiritual blessing infinitely more uplifting than any intellectual good that may have come by way of the beauties of the Exposition. Mr. Moody and his noble co-laborers are reaping a harvest of souls for the Master, and should have the heartiest assistance of every Christian of whatever creed or nation. May God bless the "people's preacher".

By still keeping up the good fight for the observance of the Fourth Commandment, aided by non-exhibitors, like-minded, Christian exhibitors who "stood by their goods," have forced a complete change of front on the part of the Fair management, and now only the fear of being jailed for disobeying the order of a drunken excuse for a judge, prevents closing the gates on Sunday. Shall we now surrender all that we have gained to Christ-hating, vagabond Jews and infidels? or shall we continue to daily preach the pure Gospel to the people of every land at our N. C. A. stand, and by our example and teachings encourage other exhibitors to still let covered exhibits and the precepts of God's Word rebuke the few visitors who enter gates, that Satan, through a drunken judge, has decreed shall remain open on the Lord's day? The World's Fair management will not allow the removal of our or any other exhibit now installed. We are charged with patronizing a Sabbath-breaking institution, and Jonah may as truthfully be said to have been a patron of Nineveh. We are furnished with two free exhibitors' passes, and no charge was or is made for space occupied. Central Music Hall and two great theaters are hired by D. L. Moody for evangelistic services; and of course the rent paid for these theaters goes to the owners of these ungodly amusement houses, which is certainly patronage. And Moody and McNeill preached in the great circus tent of the Barnum & Bailey show. God owns and blesses all of this work in a remarkable manner.

If Christians bid these evangelists God-speed in their work, under the circumstances stated, can they withhold the same benediction from our World's Fair work?

ACTION OF THE DIRECTORS.

The Board of Directors of the National Christian Association met at the Association rooms September 14. In the absence of the chairman, Ezra A. Cook presided.

Prof. Elliot Whipple opened the session with prayer.

There were present the following members of the Board: T. B. Arnold, C. A. Blanchard, E. A. Cook, J. M. Hitchcock, J. P. Richards, Elliot Whipple, and E. B. Wylie. W. I. Phillips and J. P. Stoddard added the cheer of their presence to the meeting.

A telegram from Rev. A. G. Johnson, and a letter from Prof. H. F. Kletzing, both members of the Board, gave sickness and pressure of opening school work respectively as the reasons for their absence.

The meeting was called to consider the advisability of continuing the work being done at the exhibit booth at the World's Fair, and of preparing for a congress on the anti-secrecy reform to be he held in the Art Palace on Lake Front.

The following is the preamble of the resolutions adopted:

WHEREAS, The vote of this Board that the National Christian Association should not take part in the World's Congress Auxiliary, as previously planned, provided the gates of the World's Fair are not closed on Sunday, was passed at a time when the Fair management were fighting to open said gates on Sunday, in defiance of the act of Congress and the moral sentiment of the nation. but

WHEREAS, The World's Directorate have since reconsidered their action, and have voted to close the gates on Sunday, and are prevented from doing so by an injunction which they have in vain sought to have dissolved, but which by a judicial trick was virtually made perpetual against the protest of the Directorate, etc.

In view of the facts stated above, it was voted that the work Rev. J. P. Stoddard has so successfully carried on thus far be continued by him to the close of the Exposition; and also that the congress be held as planned.

An urgent request of the Board being made to Pres. C. A. Blanchard that he prepare an address to be given at the congress, and which he has taken under consideration, he asked to be relieved from the chairmanship of the Committee on the Congress.

Ezra A. Cook was elected to the chairmanship.

At the last meeting of the Board, the General Secretary was requested to communicate with Rev. M. A. Gault with reference to the Corresponding Secretaryship of the Association. Mr. Phillips reported that owing to previous engagements, Mr. Gault would not be able to assume the office.

General Secretary Phillips made a cheering report of some recent bequests to the work of the Association.

Adjourned with prayer by President Blanchard.

EZRA A. COOK, Chairman pro tem,
EDGAR B. WYLIE, Secretary.

In the report of the Massachusetts State board of charities it is stated that the proportion of crime traceable to intemperance must be set down, as heretofore, at not less than four-fifths.

REFORM NEWS.

ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE IN NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

WINCHESTER, N. H., Sept. 13, 1893.

REV. W. I. PHILLIPS—Dear Brother in Christ:—I want to thank you heartily for the literature which you so kindly sent me, for use in the Ashuelot Valley. It was just what I needed, and has borne good fruit.

After three weeks' hard work on entirely fallow ground, I judged the field ripe for a convention in the Town Hall. So after making sure of the mind of the Lord, I invited Bros. W. B. Stoddard and E. T. McIntire, with Boston's sweet singer—Sister Carter, to come up to the help of the Lord against the secret empire in this lodge-infested State.

The solos of our sister, sung in the Spirit, were greatly enjoyed, and deeply impressed the truth upon all who heard them. She absolutely won the hearts of all with whom she came in contact.

Bro. McIntire, as usual, was filled with the Spirit, and spoke in his own convincing and convicting manner, until eyes were seen to weep, while his weapons—the sword of the Spirit and Masonic text-books—did most effective work in routing the enemy. His testimony brought confessions from a number of honest Masons, who said that they would not advise young men to join this system that covered up iniquity. It is evident that this brother's calling is in the great army of the N. C. A. Knowing, as I did, how God uses him, I was unwilling to call a meeting without him.

Bro. W. B. Stoddard was completely led out of himself, and surprised those that knew him best by his eloquence. He has fairly earned his honored father's Boston title of the "Prince of the Platform". But we have named him "Our Wendell Phillips". It is my opinion that these two men of God, with Sister Carter, can take the

ECHOES OF THE PACIFIC COAST CONVENTION.

LETTERS FROM ABSENT FRIENDS.

PHILOMATH, Ore., Sept. 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Among those who could not attend the recent convention at Canby, we glean the following:

"I regret very much that my wife and I cannot attend the reform convention to be held at Canby, Ore. We would like to assure the convention of hearty sympathy."—J. C. COZIER, Oaksdale, Washington.

"It will be impossible for me to attend the convention, on account of a district camp meeting. I regret that I cannot come. May God bless you in your work, and help you to pour out vials of wrath upon the secret beast."—REV. C. E. MCREYNOLDS, Latona, Washington.

"I regret that I cannot be present at your coming convention. I would be glad to join you in your good work were it in my power."—S. H. PHILLIPS, Galer Creek, Ore.

"I will be in sunny Kansas, at that time, striking hard blows on another line of reform—equal franchise. Enter every open door. Strike the enemy everywhere. Strike hard blows, straight from the shoulder. Never let an opportunity pass. Consecrate self, position, pocket-book—all to the work."—MRS. ADA W. UNRUH, McMinnville, Ore

"Am pleased to learn of the convention. If expenses are not too heavy, I will be there. Have heard of your grand work for Jesus in the anti-secret cause, and trust you may be greatly prospered."—F. M. SALISBURY, Pendleton, Ore.

"I wish I could possibly attend. If you come into Curry county, lecturing, be sure and come here. This country needs your labors. Rum, Romanism and lodgery run riot here. May you have success beyond your most sanguine expectations."—J. A. HAINES, Eckley, Curry Co., Ore.

"Whether I can or cannot be with you, I shall pray that God may abundantly bless your efforts in 'opening the eyes of the blind,' and leading them out of darkness into God's marvellous light. Down with the secret empire. It is a system of darkness, extortion, and hypocrisy, and consequently is a menace to every good word and work. I am with you heart and soul in your efforts to overthrow the monster evil."—REV. GEO. BAKER, Congregational minister, Kalamo, Wash.

"I greatly rejoice in the progress of your work. Have taken the Cynosure from the first. I pray that God may abundantly bless all that are engaged in this good cause."—S. M. NEFF, Concon-nully, Wash.

"I should be pleased to be present. May the blessing of God be on the meeting, and grant success to your efforts to let the light shine, and establish liberty throughout the land."—REV. W. J. FEEMSTER, Monmouth, Ore.

"I am in sympathy with the N. C. A., and wish to encourage you all I can. 'Be of good cheer, be strong,' as the Lord said to Joshua, and I believe the time will come when 'the knowledge of the glory of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.' "—J. H. CONE, Troutdale, Ore.

"I am an invalid—confined to my room nearly a year, and cannot accept your kind invitation. I had a very pleasant visit from Bishop Becker. I heartily endorse his views on secret societies." —REV. DR. S. G. IRVINE, pastor United Presbyterian church, Albany, Ore.

"I regret that circumstances will make it impossible to be with you at that time. Trusting you may have a pleasant and profitable convention, I am yours, etc."—REV. G. E. HAWES, pastor U. P. church, Portland.

"The work is a great and necessary one. May God grant you much success."—E. F. WARING, Baker City, Ore.

"I would be pleased to co-operate with you in trying to keep this terrible evil of secrecy out of the churches. You will need patience, much consecration, endurance and love, much firmness and prayer, and endure as seeing him who is invisible. I would be glad to help you along in many ways, but my income has been very scant these last two years. Wishing you a good convention with the divine approbation resting upon the work, I am your brother in Christ".—REV. HENRY COGSWELL, Puyallup, Wash.

"I am pleased to see a notice of your good work on the coast. I pray the Lord may prosper you, and the cause you represent. I am opposed to lodgery and am strongly in favor of prohibition and woman suffrage."—R. W. KIRKWOOD, Vernonia, Ore.

These are but a few extracts from the many letters received. It will suffice to show the reader how sentiment is rising here on the coast. Pray for us and help us what you can.

MILITARY DESPOTISM.

CHICAGO, September 13, 1893.

The Hughes court-martial handed down a verdict of guilty this morning, and Col. Hughes is dishonorably discharged from the military service of the State. He is found guilty on all charges but two, these being "carrying news to the enemy" and "speaking words of encouragement to the enemy," the "enemy" mentioned in these charges being the lawful House of Representatives. The verdict of guilty is based on the main charge of refusing to obey the governor's order to go into Representative Hall and eject the Douglas or Republican House. The court sets up that there would not be any discipline maintained in the national guard if officers were protected in the open refusal to execute the orders of the commander-in-chief.—Dispatch from Topeka, Kan., Sept. 11.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The foregoing military decision most clearly illustrates the intrinsic wickedness of the military system even in times of peace. An officer is "dishonorably discharged" for not obeying a command to disperse a peaceful and legal legislative body. In other words, for not doing what he believes to be a crime.

Had he obeyed the command of the officer (the governor), he would have possibly been obliged to shed the blood of his inoffending fellow-citizens, and perhaps have involved the people of the State in a fraticidal strife.

He certainly would have been liable to indictment by the civil courts for treason in levying war against the State. He and others might have expiated that crime with their lives. Had he been but a common soldier, his punishment for disobedience to an unrighteous command would have been something worse than a dishonorable discharge.

There is no such thing as the right of private judgment for the soldier. Col. Hughes is to be congratulated. There can be no greater honor than to suffer for a refusal to commit crime.

The New Volume of Pen and Pencil Series.

By D. Lewis Jones, Morris Jones, Edward Ffoulkes, H. Elvet Lewis, D. Tyssil Evans, D. Davies and O. M. Edwards. Edited by Richard Lovett, M. A. With many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, boxed..... 3.20

"'Welsh pictures' is the work of ten Welshmen, among whom illustrating the beauties of Wales has been parcelled out according to the special familiarity of each. The result is a pleasing volume."—London Times.

THE EARTHLY FOOTPRINTS OF OUR RISEN LORD, Illumined.

A continuous narrative of the Four Gospels according to The Revised Version, with introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Illustrated by 113 full-page half tone re-productions. Small 4to, cloth.....net 1.50
Gilt edge, with silk book mark, boxed.....net 2.00
Full morocco, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, boxed.....net 3.75

Pictures reflecting the best in sacred art from Raphael to the present day are scattered profusely through the book.

"To many the life of the Christ will be a new book in this form. Though beyond the introduction it contains no word except what is found in the four Gospels, yet when read continuously, without the breaks necessarily made by the different stories of the four evangelists, the narrative takes on new force and lifelikeness. The very fact that this is not our usual method of reading the Word will give it a new reality."—Golden Rule.

A GIFT OF LOVE, and Loving Greetings for 365 Days.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Parti-cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, containing CHRISTIAN LIVING, THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE, AND THE SHEPHERD PSALM. 3 vols. in box. 18mo, cloth..... 1.50
White vellum cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.75

D. L. Moody says: "Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man mighty in the scriptures, saturated with Bible facts and truths."

PRAYERS FROM THE POETS.

By Martha Harger. 16mo, two colored cloth, gilt top..... 1.00
Leatherette, boxed..... 1.50

"This volume is admirable. The Prayer are better suited to some of our moods than formal Litanies and are selected from excellent sources. The bock will be a dear treasure to many hearts."—The Churchman.

KIN-DA-SHON'S WIFE.

An Alaskan Story. By Mrs. Eugene S. Willard, Home Missionary of the Presbyterian Board of America to Alaska. With illustrations. 8vo, cloth..... 1.50

"Being a close observer and in deep sympathy with the native population in their struggles towards a Christian Civilization, Mrs. Willard has gained a more intelligent knowledge of their character, of their needs and hindrances, than perhaps any other person."—Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

HEROES OF THE GOODWIN SANDS.

By Rev. Thomas Stanley Treanor. With many illustrations. 8vo, Cloth..... 1.50

"It is a book of most engrossing interest, and as stimulating as it is readable."—The Record.
"The deeds of daring are thrilling in the extreme. Suitable for the public library or for the home."—Times.

THE GREAT LONDON DAILIES.

By H. W. Massingham. Profusely illustrated. 12mo, cloth..... 1.00

Very welcome to all who like to look behind the scenes and see how the great London dailies are worked.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By Rev. LEWIS O. THOMPSON. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master."—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects.

By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers.

Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical – valuable because time saving —the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

LODGE NOTES.

(From secret society papers.)

The order of the Eastern Star now numbers upwards of 64,000 members. The Grand Chapter of Illinois will meet in Chicago, October 4.

The Illinois Freemason says that "the chaplain of an O. E. S. chapter at a picnic made the announcement that 'dancing would now begin in the Sanitarium,' he meant pavilion. Which is about as bad as the chaplain of a Masonic lodge, who, at the close of the burial service at the grave of a deceased brother, called on a brother divine to 'please return thanks.' He meant benediction."

The New York Dispatch says: "We quite agree with our friends of the Masonic Home Journal in the warning against the 'hit back' principle respecting Roman Catholic attacks: 'That the Catholic church is the foe of Masonry is true, but it does not follow that Masonry is the foe of the Catholic church.' The Mallet says: 'Masterly inactivity is Masonry's best policy in this connection. Rome's senseless fulminations never make anybody one penny the worse, and life is too short for war in return.' Amen! If the Pope enjoys his anathemas against Masonry let him enjoy them all alone. He does not hurt Masonry, and why deprive him of his imagined luxury?"

Odd-fellows' day at the World's Fair will be September 26. A special circular gives a program of the exercises, which include a coach ride to the Victoria Hotel; a "whaleback" boat ride to Van Buren street pier, thence by steamer to the pier in front of the Exposition grounds, and at 12 M. will assemble in Festival Hall, where reception exercises will take place. In the afternoon a session of the S. G. L., in the N. C. A. building, is contemplated, followed at 7 P. M. by a promenade concert, complimentary reception and dinner to the S. G. L., etc., etc. There will also be prize drills of Patriarchs, Rebekah meetings, a ball, banquet, etc.—The Companion, Columbus, Ohio.

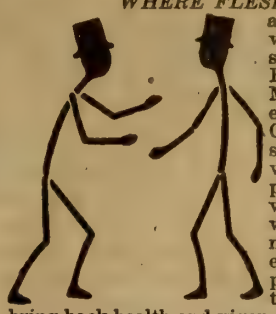
WHERE FLESH IS NEEDED, and the system's weakened, you should take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. After "the Grip," for instance, or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, and other wasting diseases, nothing can equal it as an appetizing, restorative tonic to bring back health and vigor. For pale, puny, scrofulous children, it does wonders. It builds up both their flesh and their strength, thoroughly purifies the blood, and makes effective every natural means of cleansing, repairing, and nourishing the system.



It starts the torpid liver into healthy action and promotes all the bodily functions.

For the most stubborn Scrofulous, Skin, and Scalp Diseases, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, and kindred ailments, the "Discovery" is the only remedy that's guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1893.

THE WORLD'S FAIR PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS.

The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord, and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance. (Ps. 33: 10–12.)

FAILURE OF CO-EDUCATION.

The notorious "Faribault system" of educating Protestant and Roman Catholic children together under the joint tuition of Protestant and Roman Catholic teachers, which originated with Archbishop Ireland, and had the approval of the Pope, has been declared a failure at the place of its inauguration, after a trial of about eighteen months.

Last week a priest appeared before the Faribault board of education with a demand from the archbishop that the two Protestant teachers employed in the Hill school (which, before the archbishops' interference, was a Romish institution) must be removed. In consequence of this action of the Catholics, all Protestant children have been withdrawn from the school and the board of education will provide a new schoolhouse and engage Protestant teachers for Protestant children. Co-education under the iniquitious system of the archbishop, has now been fairly tried and failed. Let us have no more of it. The parochial school and the public school have little in harmony, and the latter, as an educator, is far superior to the former, and less misleading.

THE SABBATH CONGRESS.

The International Congress on Sunday Rest will meet in the Memorial Art Palace, in this city, September 28, 29 and 30. The Sabbath (literally rest-day) will be amply discussed in its physiological, economic, social, moral, political and religious relations, by prominent Christians and prelates, together with the objections which unbelievers oppose to the observance of the Christian Sabbath.

This congress will be in the line of similar congresses heretofore held in Europe, and especially of the International Sunday Rest Congress at Paris in 1889, of which the eminent French publicist, Leon Say, was president, and which has been followed by important results in securing Sunday rest to large classes in France and other countries.

While the congress will pass no resolution or take any action, and while each writer or speaker will alone be responsible for the views he may advance, the congress will aim to present to the world in some measure the results of the wisest thought and largest experience on a subject which sustains most important relation to the well-being of society, and especially of the great multitude of wage-earners everywhere.

THE RIGHT OF PRIVATE JUDGMENT.

A marked characteristic of our Protestant Christianity is, that it insists on the right of the individual to interpret the Scriptures, and to determine his duty to God and to his fellow-men, without the intervention of any priest, potentate or power. Romanism denies this right, and perhaps this is the most distinguishing feature of the two systems of faith. Shall the individual Christian decide as to his duty to God, or shall the church determine it?

But Romanism is not alone in this denial of the right of private judgment. Freemasonry, and the entire secret lodge system also, deny this sacred right. When the candidate for initiation into the fraternity is about to take his obligations, he is assured that it will not interfere with the duties which he owes to God, his neighbor, or himself. Now, if he finds that this assurance is false, and that it does interfere with his sense of duty, then the covenant is void by its very terms.

Very many have so understood their Masonic oaths, and have repudiated them as having been obtained by fraud. But this is not the understanding of Masonry, or any other secret order. They all assume that the lodge, and not the individual, must interpret his covenant. They do not hesitate to denounce the man who refuses to accept their interpretation rather than his own, as a "perjured villain". "If we would be Masons," says Pierson, the eminent Masonic author, "we must give up our private judgment."

Between the bigotry of Romanism and the tyranny of the lodge system, there is little to choose.

SECRET SOCIETIES APPROVED.

The tenor of the "World's Parliament of Religions," now in session in this city, is not conducive to the best interests of society or Christianity. As a sample of the doctrines promulgated in this heterogeneous gathering, we quote this extract from the report of last Thursday's proceedings:

> Bishop Weaver, Liberal bishop of the church, presided over the United Brethren congress. Rev. J. L. Kephart, editor of the Religious Telescope, showed that the secrecy question had been a disturbing element for a great while, until 1885, when steps were taken to throw off the restrictive rules which had kept persons belonging to such societies out of the church. To-day a man who loves God and sincerely follows the Lord Jesus Christ may be received into fellowship irrespective of his relations to such organizations.

These, however, are not the sentiments of the original United Brethren in Christ, from whom Bishop Weaver and his adherents are seceders. Their secession was based largely upon this anti-secrecy question; and while they favor the lodge, the original church remains faithful to its early and strong testimony against this and all other works of darkness.

AN EXPLANATION.

Should any regular reader of the Cynosure wonder why Rev. J. P. Stoddard's portrait has recently appeared so frequently in these columns, let him think for a moment that while Mr. Stoddard is in charge of the N. C. A.'s exhibit at the World's Fair, he occupies the position of a standard-bearer in the front of the battle that we are waging against the secret powers of darkness. There he daily, hourly, encounters hosts of strangers, including many friends but many more persistent, falsifying enemies of Christianity, whose religion is that of the Christless lodges, who have no argument to sustain their pretensions to public esteem, and whose opposition to our reform has to be met calmly and intelligently, but earnestly, not once but many times each day, with the plain truths of the Bible and the revelations of seceding lodge-men and lodge literature.

In maintaining himself so strongly against the many who oppose him, he excites the curiosity and interest of both friends and foes, to most of whom he is a total stranger. To introduce himself effectually, he distributes to these inquirers copies of the Cynosure containing his portrait and principles, not caring in the least whether his features will adorn the albums of those who indorse him, or grace a "rogue's gallery" in some police station. It matters little to him, so long as those interested in him find out his name and purpose. For he is engaged in wholesome and arduous work for our Lord, and is permitted to see something of the good fruit of his labors.

His position is no sinecure. The wrath of man and the wiles of the devil meet him constantly at the booth, where nothing but the grace of God can enable him to win victories for the Master. But we thank God that he has the grace, and that God gives him the victory.

WANTED.—$300 for the purpose of sending the Cynosure to college reading rooms. $500 for sending the Cynosure to ministers who would gladly receive it if they could get it. When they become able they pay for it. One pastor writes as follows, from Selma, Ala.: "The Cynosure has been given to me up to this time. It is the best paper I get. I now feel able to pay for it myself, and think I ought to."

—The Faculty of Muskingum College, at New Concord, Ohio, will celebrate the inauguration of Jesse Johnson, A. M., Professor of Greek and Hebrew, as its new president on the 21st inst., with attractive exercises. Muskingum College is now more than fifty years old, and during its honorable existence as a religious and literary institution has sent out 313 graduates—245 men and 68 women. Of the former 143 are ministers of the Gospel, and among the five who have become heads of colleges and universities is the present President of Chicago University. Eighteen of its graduates became professors in educational institutions. But the proudest record of Muskingum is that it has sent out a dozen men and women who are active missionaries in foreign lands.

strongholds of Satan for Jesus, if we could keep them all in the field.

"Our Daniel" was there as one who never filed his tongue to silence, and believes that ignorance is sin. He has not needed a cable-tow and hoodwink to teach him something about the lodge.

I think you will agree with me that the workers were wisely chosen. Give God the praise. They were of his own selection, and he prepared the way before them and smiled upon the work by giving us the four most delightful days of the season. The fruitage is very encouraging. One two-degree minister refuses farther to bear the system's yoke of bondage.

This is the way we talk and sing to them. They cannot reject it, since it is God's word and not ours. HATTIE EUNICE POWERS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

"Sharp shooting" is more effective at the World's Fair booth than heavy artillery. When necessary for me to be absent, Mrs. Stoddard takes my place, and the "craft" are not a little perplexed to maintain the credit of their pets in presence of attentive listeners who are sure to stop when a woman talks about Freemasonry. The "Sublime Prince" finds it a trifle more humiliating to be unmasked by a woman than by one of his own sex; and when she wraps the body of the "widow's son" in the shroud of poor "Hiram Abiff," and consigns it to the traditional grave, "six feet deep" and "due east and west," for fourteen days, and then raises the putrid carcass to the "sublime degree of a Master Mason on the five points of fellowship," in due and ancient form, it is evidently quite distasteful to the royal brotherhood. One thing is settled in these encounters, viz.: If a woman can't be made a Mason, or work in the lodge, she can work the Masons, in open daylight, until they become extremely nervous and enjoy getting beyond the range of sharp shooting much better than standing up like brave men and returning the fire.

Banks ask for the patronage of the people, and to protect depositors against loss they are required by law to make an exhibit of assets and liabilities. The secret lodges ask for choice young men and a portion of their time and money, promising secrets and succor in return. If to protect depositors against fraud, banks are required to make exhibits at stated periods and to admit the proper officers to inspect their accounts at any time, why should the lodge be exempt from the same or a similar showing? I am told that the lodge is a confidential brotherhood, into which a man enters and voluntarily obligates himself of his own free will and accord. But are not banking institutions voluntary associations, in which the depositor and the receiver of his money have mutual and confidential interests? No one compels the man to make his deposit. It is his free act, as truly as when he enters the lodge. It is claimed that money has a value, and the depositor becomes a party in interest and has a right to know how the affairs of the bank are conducted. Grant it; but are our young men of no value, and have parents, wives and children, who are personally interested and often dependent for support upon the means of those whose bodies and souls are immured in the vaults of secret conclaves, no right to know what transpires and what is stored in those vaults? Are they not parties in interest, and entitled to protection? When the father, the wife or the child cares more for money than for those who are near of kin, they cease to be human and approximate the sordid charity which characterizes the Masonic system in classing the wife with lunatics and fools, and denominates all outside their secret pale as "cowans," which means dogs. It should be noted that the lodge demands far more than the bank, and that the investment, once made, shall be perpetual. "Once a Mason, always a Mason," meets the student of ancient or modern mysteries in every treatise on obligations. It is a life-long investment; and of what? Certainly of very much more than the depositor puts into the bank, and which he may draw out at any time.

Let me catalogue some of the valuables contained in the lodge-man's deposit: 1. He deposits the money required as an initiation fee, which is increased by regular dues and special assessments from time to time. 2. He deposits his right of private judgment; for "if we would be Masons, we must yield private judgment". 3. He deposits his free citizenship. Every citizen is entitled to the rights of free speech and liberty of the press under the United States Constitution. These he resigns when he becomes a subject of the secret empire, and swears ever to "conceal and never to reveal," and not to "print, stain or inscribe any character or design" disclosing the business of his oath-bound firm. 4. He deposits his self-respect when he submits to the debasing ceremonies of his initiation, by allowing himself to be stripped and blindfolded and conducted through performances characterized by the disgusting indecencies of their pagan origin. 5. He deposits his influence for good with every member of the firm who has witnessed his humiliation and disgrace, and very seriously impairs his standing among those who know the "work" of the "orders," but have never been regularly initiated into their "mysteries." 6. With his free-will he deposits his conscience, by swearing allegiance to an absolute despotism and all the "ancient usages and customs" of a religious system whose written history begins at Cain's altar and ends in a "lake of fire prepared for the devil and his angels." 7. He gives his assent to the denial and rejection of Christ and the atonement, when, "of his own free-will and accord," he deposits his offering of soul, body and spirit upon the altar of a false worship, that deadens his sensibilities, sears his conscience, and damns the soul, if persisted in to the end.

To me it seems preposterous and criminal, beyond comparison, to claim for such an institution the shield of protection under either law or tolerance, and then not require a thorough exhibit of its work, assets and liabilities. Public sentiment and the lawful authorities should demand such an exhibit, and make no concession or compromise until it is given. Since the secret orders refuse, and the civil authorities do not compel them to make adequate reports, the National Christian Association has undertaken the task of giving this "exhibit" at the World's Fair and through the coming years, hoping to warn and protect, as far as possible, our fellow-citizens against that which by careful investigation we have found to be a gigantic swindle and imposition.

J. P. STODDARD.

A dear, kind friend of our reform, residing at a distance, whose bounty has been cheerfully and liberally bestowed upon it, has been at the N. C. A. booth in the World's Fair and writes to Mrs. Stoddard, giving this testimony in approval of the work already accomplished there, and its possibilities for the future: "It seems to me that you are doing more good there to the cause than you can do anywhere else, because you are enlightening the people all over the world....I pray that God will give you health and strength to do his work until the Fair ends." This is but a single specimen of the opinions of outsiders who visit the N. C. A. booth, where the seed daily sown is bringing forth, "some thirty, some fifty, and some a hundred-fold" for the welfare of souls, to the glory of God.—EDITOR CYNOSURE.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 14, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The weather in New England has been delightful for the past week.

I have enjoyed my travels very much. Enroute for New Hampshire, I stopped off a few hours at New Haven, Conn. Here I found a subscriber for our paper in the Swedish Lutheran pastor. He will be glad to arrange for me to address his people at an opportune time. I was kindly entertained at the home of a promising young business man whom I found interested in our work. I hope to comply with the request for a lecture at New Haven ere long.

I shall not here attempt to describe the beautiful scenery that met my eye as I traveled for the first time through the valley along the Connecticut river. It was grand. The farms are evidently fertile, and well-cultivated; very different from many of the New England farms.

On arriving at Winchester, N. H., I was given a royal welcome and surprise. Brother and Sister Powers had arranged for a local convention, and invited Brother E. T. McIntire and Miss Ella Carter of Boston to come and assist. All were at the depot when I arrived. We had four services—Sabbath afternoon and evening and Monday afternoon and evening.

At these meetings our various objections to secret societies were given so far as time would permit, and I am sure a good impression was made. In short, we stormed the stronghold of the secret society foe which we found controlling church and state in that community. The three pastors of the town were all claimed as lodge members, the Congregational pastor being chaplain of the Masonic lodge. This man, at a recent Masonic funeral, went through a service in which the deceased, a notoriously licentious drunkard, was claimed to have passed from the lodge on earth to "the grand lodge above". When I spoke of this to the M. E. minister, who had taken two degrees of Masonic degradation, he replied: "You know we ministers all do that. If the person has lived a wicked life we are expected to say good things about God and heaven."

Is it not shocking that professed ministers of Christ will so degrade themselves and their calling?

Brother McIntire did grand service. His testimonies not only held the attention of the people, but, we are confident, brought conviction to many in lodge bondage, By putting on a number of badges secured when in the lodge he won the attention of a crowd on the street, many of whom listened to the truths presented. Some of the baser sort talked of rotten eggs, etc.

Miss Carter's singing added much to the success of the meetings. She is a consecrated Christian reformer, and a beautiful singer.

Sister Powers, who arranged and largely bore the expense of these meetings, led the Monday afternoon service. She spoke especially to mothers. Her subject was, "The relation of the lodge to the liquor traffic". Her arguments were clear and conclusive.

I regretted that time did not permit a visit to Northfield, where Mr. Moody has his "school of the prophets," as I was so near. I learned from friends that Mr. Moody's mother, now 88 years of age, still lives in the old homestead. She is much opposed to the lodge. Her husband was a Mason. When he died, the Masons came and took what little property she had, saying they would care for her. They did not fulfill this promise, but left her to care for herself. It would seem as if it were bad enough for the lodge to rob the home by taking the man's money while he lived, without robbing his widow and children.

REV. WM. FENTON IN IOWA AND NEBRASKA.

IN IOWA.

SIOUX CITY, Iowa, Sept. 11, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After a five days' visit to this city your agent takes his departure this afternoon for Wakefield, Nebraska.

A Sioux City policeman was asked why he did not arrest the saloon-keepers. He replied: "Because all the people want the saloons;" which answer is far from the truth.

But the moral influence of prohibition is immense, even in this large city of 40,000 people. There is, comparatively, but little for the policemen to do. No signs of drunkenness were visible to a visitor to the city prison yesterday; and the nearest approach to drunkenness seen by your agent was that of a young man who had lost the control of his tongue, and he was trying to enter the Salvation Army hall.

Yes, prohibition in Iowa has crippled the devil, by destroying one of his mightiest weapons for ruining souls and bodies of men. But there remains his demon-worship of the lodge, whereby the churches are depraved and the pastors made like Ahab's false prophets, with lying spirits. One pastor of an M. E. church says that he likes secret societies; that he belongs to one or more, but will not tell which; that he has formed a good opinion of Masonry, and that he intends to join the Masons. He would not allow your agent to tell him the secrets of Masonry, and bade him depart from his house, which he did, of course, at the same time remarking: "No doubt, sir, you are truly prepared by the devil to be made a Mason, and will join, and so be a false prophet with a lying spirit. Good bye." That pastor wants to go into the lodge blind, clearly manifesting the spirit that he is of, loving darkness rather than light. So he will fulfill the words of Jesus: "If the blind lead the blind, both will fall into the ditch."

Some here call for the sympathy and prayers of true Christians. One, a member of an M. E. church, whose pastor is a sworn, lying, devil-worshiper of the Masonic lodge, has a distressed spirit and an aching heart because her husband follows his pastor into the lodge. She is a woman, too, of large influence and great zeal for religion.

It is said here that the saloon business is so dull that the saloon-keepers are indebted to the city for the fines imposed upon them for violating the prohibition law.

IN NEBRASKA.

OMAHA, Neb., Sept. 13.—The Swedish Lutheran church (Augustana Synod), of Wakefield, Neb, Rev. J. P. Aurelius, pastor, made the truth welcome on Monday evening, the 11th inst. The Freemasons and other secretists were in attendance at the meeting in full numbers. The interest was kept up until a late hour. The most noticeable event of the meeting was the disgrace which the pastor of the Presbyterian church brought upon himself and his denomination, by standing up and publicly accusing the lecturer of scandalizing the Masons, showing that he was blind and oblivious to the fact set plainly before the audience, to-wit: That it is essential to the very existence of Masonry that every Freemason must have incorporated into his very life and existence a most scandalous and infamous lie about the Bible; and that lie not only insulting to the Holy Ghost, who inspired the Bible, but libelling the characters of worthy men of the Bible.

Of course, the lecturer, with his hand upon Masonic authors, could and did very easily refute the false charge of this Jack-Mason—this Presbyterian pastor.

Pastor Aurelius, of the Swedish Lutheran church, is vigilant, and determined to keep his church pure from the darkness and corruption of lodgery; and the prosperity of his church is the result of his wise efforts and the blessing of God.

Leaving Bro. Aurelius to continue the battle and win the victory over lodgery in Wakefield, your correspondent took the morning train for Omaha and arrived here yesterday in time to speak in the Salem church. Swedish Lutheran, (Augustana Synod), Rev. Carl E. Elving, pastor. In this meeting I had the pleasure of greeting our old friend, Bro. Helin, formerly of Brooklyn, New York, for many years a subscriber for the Christian Cynosure, and now a successful business man of Omaha.

The noticeable event of this meeting was that of a young man who belongs to the "Ancient Order of United Workmen." He arose to defend his society and wanted the opinion of the lecturer about it. The lecturer asked him to produce his ritual, and the opinion should then be given; but, alas for the young man, he did not dare to let us see it. Hence the words of Christ: "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil; for every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light lest his deeds should be reproved." John 3:19, 20.

When will people learn that it is better to trust God in time of adversity than to put themselves under the power of the prince of darkness, who rules the secret lodges?

"And the Levites shall speak, and say unto all the men of Israel, with a loud voice, cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and putteth it in a secret place. And all the people shall answer and say, Amen." Deuteronomy 27:15.

W. FENTON.

THE HOME.

"FRET NOT THYSELF."

So wearily the feet must move
When the heart is not at rest;
God keeps his children in his love,
And he knows best.

So tedious is the path of life
When the care is borne alone;
But God, amid the greatest strife,
Quiets his own.

No road is sunny all along,
But the shadows thickly lie;
Yet reason is there for a song
Since God is nigh.

No heart but has to bear its pain,
Yet the trouble goes at length;
The fading hope is bright again
When God gives strength.

Oh, child of God, be calm, be still,
Let the past be what it may;
Live now as for the Father's will,
And him obey!

And let the tumult and the rush
And the doubts and questions cease;
Give God thy care, and know the hush
Of perfect peace.

"TAKE THE ANCHORS AND GO TO SEA."

"They that go down to the sea in ships, who do business in great waters, these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." They have opportunities for witnessing the manifestations of divine majesty, and they have necessities which require the exercise of wisdom which cometh from above. The master of a vessel, to whose care is entrusted the property of the owners and the lives of those under his command, needs to be not only responsible and trustworthy, but also endowed with wisdom beyond the wisdom of man.

Riding one day with Capt. J. H. S., who had for years followed the sea, he related the following incident in his own experience.

In August, 1879, I was in command of a whaling bark, and we touched at Vavo, one of the Friendly Islands. Standing on the bow of the vessel, chart in hand, we worked our way in against the wind, and anchored in twenty-five fathoms of water close to the shore. We remained there a few days, laying in supplies and fitting the vessel for the prosecution of our voyage. Some of the men were repainting the ship. We got out water casks on shore sufficient to hold 115 barrels of water, and were procuring such other things as we needed.

There were several foreign traders on the island, men of little principle; and one day a native trader named Timothy, a trusty worthy man, came to me and told me that these foreign traders had persuaded half my men to desert and leave the vessel, thinking if they could keep them on shore till the ship was gone, they could then compel them to work for them at their own price. Sailors are frequently thus entrapped. It has been a saying among captains that if a vessel was bound for heaven and touched at hell, half the crew would leave the ship. Many men are thus beguiled away from their duty, and suffer all sorts of troubles for months and years until they can beg some passing vessel to take them away.

This news was not very agreeable. It meant the failure of the voyage; for if the men deserted, what could the captain do? and it might require many months before another crew could be secured to man the ship. I retired to bed at night feeling anxious. Along in the night I awoke and was restless and unable to sleep. I arose and knelt down by my chest and asked the Lord what I should do. At once the answer came:

I do not know how soon the men had planned to desert, but my direction was sufficiently plain, and in the morning I told my mate to get the ship ready to move, and get the water casks on board partly filled as they were, as I was intending to "move the ship". It was a wet, dismal day. The men were mad and ugly, but they went to work, though unwillingly.

We needed some broom stuff, which is made from the central stem of the palm-leaf, and is used for sweeping and scrubbing decks. I took a boat and some men, and went in pursuit of some. We went four or five miles up a stream to a native village where Timothy lived, but he was not there, and we could not buy anything whatever in his absence. They would not sell without he was on the spot, and he had gone. We obtained a guide and went after him, traveling a mile or two, until at last we got where we could call him; and he came, and then the natives were ready to trade. I had my cloth ready, and he made the bargains, decided what was right, and I cut off the cloth. Broom stuff came from every quarter and every cabin, and in a little while we had enough. I cut the last piece of cloth, dropped my knife, forgot it and have never seen it since. I called to the men to hustle the stuff on board the boat, and we pulled away to the vessel. We reached it. The mate had got one of the anchors up. It went hard, as the water was deep, but we worked away; we got the other anchor up; Timothy had come on board, and there were scores of the natives there, but he understood what was up, and as the anchor was hove up I said, "We are going to sea," and at a word from him the natives tumbled overboard in haste, took to their canoes and swam for the shore. Sails were hoisted; and at night the vessel stood out to sea, half-painted, everything left as it was, but every man on board.

When we got to sea some of the men were thoroughly ashamed of the part they had acted, especially those in positions of responsibility, and they then confessed what their plan was. That night they intended to have deserted the vessel, left me in the lurch, and made themselves no doubt much more trouble than they would have made me. The warning voice, "Take the anchors and go to sea," prevented the desertion, held back the men from unknown troubles, saved the voyage from being a disastrous failure, and enabled us to make it a success.

This is one of many instances where the wisdom of man was insufficient, but a higher wisdom has guided the way, and enabled the trusting ones who know the heavenly voice, to escape from many troubles through the guiding and prospering hand of the Lord.—The Christian, Boston.

WAYS OF DOING GOOD.

"Little influences, apparently insignificant, such as words, examples, books, tracts, visits, contributions, warnings, letters, songs, prayers, etc., have resulted in the conversion and consequent usefulness of thousands. Especially is this true of tract and book circulation."

Tracts did good service in the great reformation in Germany. Huss and Baxter were converted by reading tracts. The late Rev. Dr. Fish of Newark says that "he can safely say that he has known of hundreds of conversions that could be traced to tracts and books."—Manual of Revivals.

Visiting from house to house and talking personally with all classes and inviting them to Christ is one of the best means of doing good. An invitation to church has been the means of salvation to many. A young lady was once induced, after much persuasion, to attend church. Arriving early, she took up an American Messenger which she found in the pew, intending to pass the interval previous to the commencement of the service in reading. The first words read resulted in overwhelming conviction, and she found no peace until she found it at the "foot of the cross."

"The use of tract envelopes and tract postals or letter envelopes and postal cards neatly printed with appropriate Gospel truth is a cheap and very successful way of doing good; they reach various classes and are read and re-read many times."

A tract converted a fallen woman who afterwards lived a consistent Christian life and died a triumphant death. A lady in a railway car, while it was passing near some laborers, with a silent prayer to God for his blessing, threw some tracts out of the window for the laborers. She afterwards learned that the workmen found the tracts and were converted. A revival followed, and a flourishing church was the result.

Rev. A. McMahan says: "Lending a book, giving a tract, an earnest entreaty, a silent prayer, an affectionate letter, singing a song, visiting the sick, a consistent example, or a convincing argument, may appear of little consequence; but feeble as such instrumentalities seem, they have resulted in the salvation of thousands."

Christian reader, have you ever done anything to promote the cause of God? Have you done all you could do?

Look upon the vast throng of perishing souls by whom you are surrounded, and in view of a coming eternity, ask yourself if there is not something more than you can do. Watch for opportunities. Be instant in season, out of season; and by the blessing of God you may be instrumental in saving many souls from death.—Sel.

LONELY LABORERS.

Many Christians have to endure the solitude of unnoticed labor. They are serving God in a way which is exceedingly useful, but not at all noticeable. How very sweet to many workers are those little corners of the newspapers and magazines which describe their labors and successes; yet some who are doing what God will think a great deal more of at the last, never saw their names in print.

Yonder beloved brother is plodding away in a country village; nobody knows anything about him, but he is bringing souls to God. Unknown to fame, the angels are acquainted with him, and a few precious ones whom he has led to Jesus know him well.

Perhaps yonder sister has a class in the Sunday-school; nothing striking in her or in her class; nobody thinks of her as a remarkable worker. She is a flower that blooms almost unseen, but she is none the less fragrant.

There is a Bible woman; she is mentioned in the report as making so many visits a week, but nobody discovers all she is doing for the poor and needy, and how many are saved in the Lord through her instrumentality. Hundreds of God's dear servants are serving him without the encouragement of man's approving eye, yet they are not alone; the Father is with them.

Never mind where you work; care more how you work; never mind who sees if God approves. If he smiles, be content. We cannot always be sure when we are most useful. It is not the acreage you sow, it is the multiplication which God gives the seed, which makes the harvest. You have less to do with being successful than with being faithful. Your main comfort is that in your labor you are not alone, for God, the Eternal Father, who guides the marches of the stars, is with you.—C. H. Spurgeon.

BROUGHT TO TERMS.

"Take care, there, or I will draw my seven-shooter on you," said an angry voice.

Mrs. Houston entered the room, and found her boy, Lane, standing on one of the chairs brandishing a loaded revolver, and pointing it at his sisters' heads. He had sold the watch which his grandfather had given him, and bought one of those pocket revolvers which are so temptingly advertised, and now, in a fit of rage, he was exercising his authority in the family.

He did so, holding on to his murderous weapon and saying:

"I have got the best of this family, now, and will bring them to terms before I get through."

The mother listened in constant terror, fearing that he would shoot himself or some member of the family; and when her husband came, met him in tears and told the story, and begged him not to go near the desperate child until his anger had subsided.

"We shall have to send him to the reform school," said the father; and he started on the noonday train to Meriden, humiliated to be obliged to own that he had a son who was so uncontrollable. He came back in time for the six o'clock dinner, and his wife followed him to his room to learn the results. He looked distressed and could hardly speak, and then told the story of his visit to the reform school.

He had talked with the superintendent before about his son, and he now agreed that it was needful to bring the boy there.

"But," said he, "before definite arrangements are made, I want to ask you one question. You say you have tried every way to effect his reformation, by love, fear and force. And now I want to know whether you have tried praying?"

"No," said the father, very much taken by surprise; "I have never thought of doing that."

"Well," said the superintendent, "you must go home and pray with him. I don't feel as if I could receive him here or have anything to do with the case until the power of prayer at his home and in his presence has been tried."

"I cannot pray before my family."

"What! you a church member, and do not have family prayers?" he replied.

"No, sir," was the humbling answer.

"Go home and set up a family altar to-night."

"I cannot," said the father. "I have not the courage to broach the matter, even to my wife. We never speak upon the subject of religion."

"It is high time you take up this cross, if cross it is," he urged. "How can you expect that son to submit his will to yours when you do not submit your will to the Master's? To-night at nine o'clock call your family together, read a chapter of the Word of God, and lead in prayer.

"At that time my wife and I will go into our closets and pray for you all, especially for Lane. Let us now take the Lord Jesus Christ into our counsel."

He came away upon that. "But," said he, "what am I going to do about it? I don't know. I can never pray aloud in the presence of my family."

"Dear husband," replied Mrs. Houston, sobbing, "I have been thinking for a long time that we are shirking our duty in this direction. Do not have any more misgivings about it; do not hesitate another moment. I will arrange everything this evening; never fear. The Lord will pardon us, let us hope, and give us strength when the hour arrives."

"Has Lane been down stairs since?" asked the father.

"No; and he has had nothing to eat, and no one has spoken to him since breakfast," replied the mother.

"What if he should start to go down town to spend the evening?"

"I have a plan which I think will keep him at home to-night."

On his way down stairs Mr. Houston went to his son's door, and called in a pleasant voice: "Come, my son; dinner is waiting."

Lane quickly opened the door, neatly attired, and his hair freshly brushed. He had dressed for dinner, although expecting, should he try the door, he would find it still locked upon the outside, and fearing again he was to be put upon a diet of bread and water.

He came down stairs, wondering whether it was possible that his father had taken his part against his mother; whether the little pistol had, indeed, brought them all "to terms".

Lane was given to stealing out of the house evenings to spend them with the boys who were nearly as wayward as himself; but to-night Mrs. Houston said as dinner was over: "I wish, children, you would make two or three panfuls of popcorn balls to carry to the charity festival to-morrow. The materials are all ready, and, Lane, you must superintend the popping of the corn and the preparation of the molasses and sugar."

This was one of Lane's favorite pastimes, and he went about the business with a will, his brothers and sisters obeying his many orders, glad to have things "blow over," without developing into a regular warfare between him and his father.

At half-past eight Mrs. Houston was called out into the kitchen to see the result of the evening's labor.

"Thank you, my good children," she said. "They are as nice and white and shapely as any that could be made by the confectioners themselves. Now wash up so as to be in the parlor when the clock strikes nine; there is something else pleasant in store for you."

The young people obeyed, wondering what was coming. At nine o'clock their mother folded up the day's newspapers, put them in the wall pocket, and brought a large Bible and placed it upon the reading table.

Mr. Houston's voice trembled a little as he said, "It has been brought very forcibly to my mind to-day that I have been shamefully neglecting my duty and the highest welfare of you, my children, in not joining with you in the study of this blessed Word and in family prayer. To-night we will begin a different course, and see whether we will not all be made happier and better by following it." He read a chapter and then knelt down. His wife and children followed his example, all except Lane. He sat upright, stern, pale, and perturbed, now and then glancing toward the door as if meditating an escape.

The poor father at first could find no words to express his thoughts and desires; but as he called to mind his friends—the superintendent and his wife, on their knees for him at that very moment, his tongue was unloosed, and his unburdened soul found boldness at the throne of grace; and as he was closing a most tender and pathetic appeal in behalf of his erring son, and that all might submit their rebellious wills to Christ's loving sovereignty, Lane rose from his chair, crossed the room, and kneeling by his father's side, threw his arms around his neck, sobbing:

"Pray on, father! pray on! I have tried to ask God to cleanse my wicked heart, but I could not get to him at all myself; I know he will hear me now, when you are all willing to pray with me."

The whole family rose from their knees with melted hearts and tearful faces. The two older daughters had been in the habit of praying in secret, and they declared this to be the happiest hour of their lives. Lane was completely subdued. He stepped up to the table and laid the loaded revolver upon it, near his father's side, and said:

"It is I who have been brought to terms. Forgive, oh, forgive me, my father and mother, and brothers and sisters, as I hope for the forgiveness of Jesus Christ."—Evangelist.

GIVE A KIND WORD WHEN YOU CAN.

Do you know a heart that hungers
For a word of love and cheer?
There are many such about us;
It may be that one is near.
Look around you. If you find it,
Speak the word that's needed so,
And your own heart may be strengthened
By the help that you bestow.

It may be that some one falters
On the brink of sin and wrong,
And a word from you might save him—
Help to make the tempted strong.
Look about you, O my brother!
What a sin is yours and mine
If we see that help is needed
And we give no friendly sign!

Never think kind words are wasted—
Bread on waters cast are they,
And it may be we shall find them
Coming back to us some day.
Coming back when sorely needed
In a time of sharp distress;
So, my friend, let's give them freely;
Gift and giver God will bless.

Could the youth, to whom the flavor of the first wine is delicious, look upon my desolation; could he but feel the body of death with which I cry hourly, it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation.—Chas. Lamb.

Drink is the parent of crime. It would not be too much to say that if all drinking of fermented liquors could be done away, crime of every kind would fall to a fourth of its present amount, and the whole tone of moral feeling in the lower orders might be indefinitely raised.—Chas. Buxton, M. P.

A SAD SCENE IN COURT.

What pathetic incidents occur almost daily in our police courts! One morning, a short time ago, a woman was arrested before a justice on a charge of having been found drunk in the street the previous night. When asked if she had anything to say for herself, she flushed and trembled, but looked the judge steadily in the face as she replied: "I forgot myself and must bear the consequences." She was fined five dollars, and was not able to pay; was about to be conducted to prison when a man, having the appearance of a hard-working mechanic and accompanied by a pretty little girl, rose in the audience and offered to pay it for her. It was her husband. Hearing his voice, she hid her face in her hands and said hastily: "You must not pay it."

"But we want you at home," replied the man, smiling pleasantly at her. "No, you must not pay it," insisted his wife. "Don't waste the money on me. Use it at home. Buy a new pair of shoes for baby with it." "Please come home, mamma," said the little girl; and the father silently drew money from his pocket and handed it to the clerk of the court. But the woman still protested, declared that she would not go to prison, and it was not until the little girl began to cry and the judge begged her to think of her children that she consented to return. Her husband at length took her by one hand, the child by the other, and between them she was led slowly from the court. Oh, the curse of intemperance!—Work at Home.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The wide-reaching power of true faith.—vs. 8–10. This epistle is addressed "to all that be in Rome, called to be saints." There was no distinction made in the early church, as if one class ought, by virtue of their occupation or surrounding circumstances, to be holier than another. The humblest convert was as much called to be a saint—that is, to be sanctified and live a holy life, as Paul or Peter. "I thank my God"—for what? That they were increasing in numbers, or wealth, or even that they abounded in Christian activities? No; but "that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world". It was faith that could not be hid. Some light from it had penetrated every part of that vast empire. It was an intelligent faith. Romans is by far the profoundest of Paul's epistles. It grapples with problems, the solution of which has baffled the deepest-thinking theologians of this and every age; which shows that they were not babes in the faith but advanced Christians, capable of understanding him. It was a missionary faith, which began at home but did not end at home. Let us also notice the corresponding faith of the great apostle himself, as shown in his longing desire to visit them, and his constant prayers in their behalf. We have here two important suggestions. (1) The church which is celebrated, not for its wealth, fine music, or other attractions, or even the amount of its benevolent work, but for its faith, is sure to be a missionary church, whose light will penetrate far beyond its own vicinity. (2) The pastor who prays without ceasing for his people will be sure to be a successful pastor.

2. Why Paul longed to visit Rome.—vs. 11, 12. "For I long to see you." Why? Not that he might receive, but that he might give. "That I may impart unto you some spiritual gift." In spite of their faith and zeal, no apostle had yet visited them, and it might well be that they were behind other churches, where Paul and others had personally labored, in the knowledge and exercise of spiritual gifts. Apollos, though "mighty in the Scriptures," needed Priscilla and Aquilla to "show him the way of God more perfectly". So they also needed to receive these gifts of the Holy Spirit, which Paul had imparted to the Ephesian disciples, who with all their devoutness of life had not heard of, much less received, the Pentecostal blessing in which they, as well as all other true believers, had a right to share. The pastor whose chief aim is to give forth spiritually to his flock, rather than to receive great financial reward, is of the Pauline type. "To the end ye may be established"—strengthened and confirmed in the faith. Spiritual gifts are never to be desired as a mere vainglorious exhibit, but every new power which we develop, whether for teaching or in any way helping others, is a medium through which we ourselves receive more than we give. "That I may be comforted together with you." The greatest souls are the humblest. What a difference between Paul in thus placing himself on a level with the humblest believer to whom he wrote and the arrogant pretensions of the Pope, cardinals and other ecclesiastical dignitaries of Rome, who claim to exercise their power by right of apostolic succession! There is nothing so cheering or so strengthening among Christians as this "mutual faith;" and one of the chief objects of prayer meetings and religious gatherings is, or should be, the bringing out of each other's experience for common comforting.

3. The Christian a debtor to the world.—vs. 13–15. The Christian's debt to humanity is a subject too little thought of, but Paul had the right idea of it. He was debtor both to the Greek and to the barbarian, the wise and the unwise. He owed it to them to spread the Gospel of Him who appeared to him in blinding splendor on the road to Damascus, and made him, as it were, his knight-errant without fear and without reproach, to smite with his sword of truth the monster of paganism and bear light and deliverance to the Gentiles. We can never pay the debt we owe to Christ, but we can in some measure pay our debt to humanity. Social conditions or the color of a man's skin was nothing to Paul. How would his righteous contempt and indignation be stirred to see caste lines as they are drawn in some of our churches to-day! Not how much does the world owe us, but how much do we owe the world? is the question we should each ask ourselves.

4. Justifying faith.—vs. 15–17. He was ready to preach the Gospel "at Rome also," where the cross was only thought of as the instrument of a shameful death only inflicted on slaves. "For I am not ashamed of the cross of Christ." We cannot at this day, when the cross is an emblem held in the highest honor, worn as an ornament, and seen daily in some form, have any adequate understanding of the heroism such an assertion involved. "For therein is the righteousness of God revealed." Without the Gospel the world would seem a chaos, where wrong and injustice held full sway; and if we believed in a God at all we could not think of him as righteous. "From faith to faith," in ever-increasing ratio. Through faith we are justified—not by the works of the law, and our life is hid with Christ in God.

LITERATURE.

MONEY FOUND: Recovered from its Hiding-places, and Put into Circulation through Confidence in Government Banks. By Thomas E. Hill, author of "Hill's Manual of Social and Business Forms," "Hill's Album of Biography and Art," etc. One volume, paper, pp. 105. Published by Charles H. Kerr & Co., 175 Monroe street, Chicago. Price, 25 cents.

A few years ago Mr. Hill had printed, in the Inter Ocean, a synopsis of a new banking system of his own invention, that presented many striking features, distinguished for their simplicity and universal application to the needs of the people. Among the principal of these characteristics was the formation of banks, so completely owned and controlled by the general government as to place their safety and integrity beyond a doubt.

In this little volume Mr. Hill's plan is elaborated in detail, showing its importance as a government measure, and one calculated to inspire public confidence of the highest degree in its security and adaptation to all classes, with the result of inducing the people to co-operate in it by placing their money where it at once goes into general circulation. The nature of money and the workings of various financial systems are clearly explained, as is, also, the plan by which the government can become every man's banker. It is likewise plainly shown how three per cent interest may be realized on long-time deposits, and how the government may be enabled to loan money for business purposes at four per cent, and thus reap a yearly revenue for itself of nearly $400,000,000.

The advantages to accrue from this system of government banking, as set forth by Mr. Hill, are as follows: Absolute safety to depositors; complete confidence in the banks, inspired by a sense of perfect security; abundance of money in all the banks; interest distributed among the common people, and money loaned at the cheapest rates yet known; an immense income accruing to the government, providing revenue for the making of great internal improvements, and thus giving employment to large numbers of artisans and laborers; the establishment of banks for the benefit of the entire people, instead of a few stockholders, and a general circulation of money among all classes for the promotion of profitable enterprises.

Mr. Hill's book will be found to possess much of interest for intelligent readers, based on the importance of the subject of which it so ably treats. Especially does it address itself to those of the prudent middle and laboring classes, whose savings are at present jeopardized by the uncertainty of our banking laws. When money is plentiful and safe, as Mr. Hill believes it always would be under his system, labor is in demand at fair wages, the prices of agricultural and mechanical products are usually very remunerative, and "times" are at their best.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

McClure's Magazine for September contains a good variety and is replete with interest for home or travel. The illustrated papers include Among the Gorillas, by R. L. Garner; E. E. Hale—the Man with a Country, by Herbert D. Ward; How Cassie Saved the Spoons, by Annie H. Frechette; Human Documents—portraits of the Emperor of Germany, Eugene Field and Col. A. A. Pope, at different periods of their lives; Dreams Go by Contraries, by Geo. H. Jessop; Pasteur at Home, by Ida M. Tarbell; The Legend of the Elephant and the Lion by Henry M. Stanley; At the Throttle—life and experiences of a Limited Express engineer. There is also an interesting sketch, Stranger than Fiction, relating to the Bronte family, and verses by Gertrude Hall and Thos. Carew. Published monthly by S. S. McClure, Ltd., 743 Broadway, New York City. Price, 15 cents.

Our Day for September opens with a fine portrait of Wilbur F. Crafts and The Divine Program in the Dark Continent, by Joseph Cook, who also contributes the following other articles: The Boston Hymn, Dawn and Sunset, and his Monday Lecture on Satolli and the Public Schools. The Papal Encyclical on the Public, and The Pope on the Public Schools are given a prominent insertion. James H. Ross contributes a paper on Hymns of Foreign Missions. Other papers of interest are included in the departments of Vital Points of Public Opinion, Questions to Specialists and Editorial Notes. Miss Willard's sketch of the Origin and Purposes of the W. C. T. U. is not the least readable of these. Published at the W. C. T. U. Temple, Chicago. Price, 25 cents.

Historia, devoted to historical stories, in its September issue, presents the following events in pleasant guise: Rhampsinitus, the Persian dog, by Fred M. Colby; Napoleon's Syrian Expedition, by H. T. Rhodes; The Dreamship; The Baron of Pentagoet, a narrative of New England; Sergeant William Jasper, by Joseph Chancred; Benedict Arnold's Treason, by Charles Stuart; Henry Bernard, a tale of the French Revolution, by Joseph Masters, and Literary Notes. Published at Room 20, Times Building, Chicago. Price, 10 cents.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Congregationalists in New Hampshire have gained in membership less than 7 per cent since 1872; the Methodists in the same State have gained 7 per cent in twenty years, and the Baptists have gained 14 per cent since 1872, though they have lost 12 per cent in 1844. On the other hand, the Episcopalians have more than doubled in numbers in New Hampshire during the last two decades.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—San Francisco Methodist Chinese mission has had over 400 conversions since it was started.

—Secretary Hartzell in his recent address before the African Congress said: "In 1786 Asbury started the first Sunday-school in America, in the house of David Crenshaw, Maryland. Both Negro and white youth attended. One of the first converts in that school was a Negro, John Charleston, who afterwards became a noted preacher. Four years later the conference provided for Sunday-schools for white and black children, with text books and volunteer teachers, and all ministers were directed to use diligence in gathering the sons and daughters of Ham into societies, and administer among them the full discipline of the church. In 1800 the ordination of Negroes was authorized."

—The university senate of the Methodist Episcopal church, created by the last General conference, will hold its first session in Syracuse, N. Y., on Monday, Sept. 25. Time and place have been chosen for the convenience of members of the senate who will be present at Syracuse university on the preceding Friday and Saturday at the annual meeting of the Association of Methodist Episcopal College Presidents, and who may desire to be in Chicago the following Wednesday, the date announced as the presentation day of Methodism at the Columbian Exposition.

—The general committee of Church Extension will meet in St. Paul, Minn., Thursday, Nov. 2, at 9 o'clock A. M.

—The twelfth annual meeting of the board of lady managers of the Woman's Home Missionary society of the M. E. church will be held in Toledo, Ohio, Thursday, Oct. 26, and continue in session one week.

—A Chicago Methodist, whose business transactions in the course of a year amount to millions of dollars, was in great need of $80,000. Under ordinary conditions the banks would have loaned him any amount he desired, but they would not assist him at this time. In his great need a business friend placed a million dollars at his disposal, and he was safe.

—Sunday afternoon, Oct. 1, 1893, Christ Chapel Sunday-school, corner of Center and Orchard streets, will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the first M. E. Sunday-school in Chicago. This school was organized in October, 1843, by Maurice A. Wurts, Benjamin W. Thomas, and S. Lockwood Brown. Of these Mr. Brown is still identified with the Sunday-school.

—Lord Salisbury recently refused to sell land for the purpose of building a dissenting place of worship.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

Judge Collins has appointed Richard D. Walsh receiver of the Total Abstinence Association of America.

Steps will be taken by the board of education to provide necessary facilities for the increased number of pupils.

John Wierzleicki, a South Chicago grocer, tried to remove a loose wire from the Calumet Electric's track and was killed.

An adjourned meeting of the Supreme Council of the Catholic Benevolent legion opened in one of the halls of the Memorial Art palace. There were twenty States represented and 31,580 members.

Last week the Spanish caravel Santa Maria (duplicate of one of Columbus' fleet of discovery), on exhibition at the World's Fair, was formally presented by representatives of the Spanish government to the United States government "to have and to hold forever," as a memento.

Three dry-houses and lumber valued at $400,000 were burned at Pullman, Ill.—loss of the Pullman Car Co.

Deposits in the Chicago banks continue to increase. Gains in some instances within thirty days are unprecedented.

Mrs. Henry Snyder, 118 South Green street, was fatally burned by the explosion of a lighted lamp she was filling.

Real estate men met and appointed a committee of arrangements for the international real estate congress in October.

At the request of State's Attorney Kern, the case against F. W. Smith, indicted for attempted bribery of Cronin jurors, was reinstated.

Pennsylvania's building has been sold to the Chicago Naval Academy, and will be moved to the lake front after the fair.

Talk of continuing the fair after Oct. 31 has again revived.

COUNTRY.

Yellow fever appeared at Brunswick, Ga., last week. Deaths occurred and citizens fled.

John Swope, of Philadelphia, has brought suit against former Northern Pacific directors for restitution of $11,000,000 fraudulently obtained.

Many of the boomers awaiting registration at the Cherokee strip were prostrated by the intense heat. Several deaths occurred.

Fifty-four convicts who mutinied at Tracy City, Tenn., surrendered. Powder and dynamite bombs were found in the mine.

A committee has been appointed by the Catholic archbishops to procure a site in Washington for a home for Mgr. Satolli.

A scheme to establish a State silver bullion depository, on which certificates are to be issued, is under discussion in Colorado.

At the meeting of the northwest Swedish Methodist conference it was decided to divide into three smaller bodies.

Seven bandits stopped a L. S. & M. S. express train near Kendallville, Ind., and secured the contents of the express company's safe, estimated at from $10,000 to $19,000. The latter is the company's statement.

A scarcity of sugar is announced, with the salvo that "the price will not be increased." We shall see.

Residents of Stevens county, Kansas, report that the crops are a failure and help must be given.

Milwaukee county, Wis., has $300,000 locked in the failed Commercial Bank, and is in a financial strait.

Secretary Smith has issued orders to relax restrictions at the Cherokee Strip. One thousand women filed their notices.

With Supervising Architect O'Rourke's report as a text, Chicago congressmen will urge evacuation of the Federal building.

At the meeting of the officers of the Great Tent Knights of the Maccabees, at Grand Rapids, Mich., last week, reports show that the order has 837 tents and 53,173 members, a net increase of 93 tents and 11,050 members during the year. Death and disability benefits were paid to the amount of $344,816, and the expenditures for all purposes, aside from benefits, were $75,233.22. The receipts for the year were $420,908; disbursements, $424,133; and remaining on hand, $47,392.57.

Smoke still fills the air at Stevens Point, Wis., making life miserable not only in rendering respiration difficult, but in obscuring the sun. Reports constantly come in of the horrible havoc made by the flames in the forest during the windstorm of Saturday in the district to the north and west of that city. No loss of life has been reported, but the destruction of property in the shape of houses, barns, granaries, fences, and even of growing crops and stock has been enormous.

HOME AND HEALTH.

The mother who cannot get through a washday without getting impatient and sour needs a clean heart.

The husband who grumbles instead of going about to help his wife if dinner is not ready when he comes home does not obey the great command of love to others.

Grass stains on white goods can usually be removed in the following way: Wet the fabric, rub in some soft soap and as much baking soda as will adhere; let stand half an hour, wash out in the usual manner and the stain will generally be gone.

A housekeeper sensibly advises that every ounce of suet, fat, cold meat, and bones should be saved and utilized for making croquettes, hash, soup, drippings, or soap grease. Break the bones before stewing them for soup, so that the marrow may escape.

Five dollars is a small capital with which to start in any business. But if you have the land, it is quite enough to enable you to make a start at poultry keeping. And the chances are, that if you start on such a scale you will make a better success than if you had a hundred dollars to experiment with.

The following statistics kept for one year by a woman, who with her husband, two servants and two children, lived in a house of nine rooms, show the home-life of one woman at least, and help to answer the oft repeated question, "How do women occupy themselves?" Number of lunches put up, 1,157; meals ordered, 963; desserts made, 172; lamps filled, 328; rooms dusted, 2,057; times dressed children, 786; visits received, 879; visits paid, 167; books read, 88; papers read, 553; stories read aloud, 234; games played, 329: church services attended, 125; articles mended, 1,236; articles of clothing made, 120; fancy articles made, 56; letters written, 429; hours in music, 20½; hours in Sunday-school work, 208; hours in gardening, 49; sick days, 44; amusements attended, 10. Besides the above I nursed two children through measles, twice cleaned every nook and corner of my house, put up seventy-five jars of pickles and preserves, made seven trips to the dentist's, polished silver, and spent seven days in helping to nurse a sick friend who was ill, besides the thousand and one duties too small to be mentioned, yet taking time to perform.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY, Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Soirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested ,and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by persuing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'orgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 491 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

BIBLE SERIES. 3 vols. in box, 12mo., cloth.....$3.00

Containing the following which may be had separately:

Bible Warnings	$1.00
Bible Blessings	1.00
Best Things	1.00

While they are called sermons, and each passage is expository of some passage of Scripture, they are so simple, so full of striking and apposite illustrations, that a child will read them with as much curiosity as he would a narrative of travel or adventure, and certainly with far more profit.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the written word, and preaches it with an earnestness born of conviction.

Talks to S. S. Teachers.

After a long and unavoidable delay, the author,

Rev. J. G. Terrill,

is ready to issue the above-named book. This book is the result of twenty years of experience in the practical work of the Sunday-school, the Teachers' Meeting, Conventions, and Lectures to Teachers. The work will be of 200 pages or more, divided into five departments:

I. The Sunday-school Organization and Management.
II. Methods of Work.
III. Studies in Human Nature.
IV. Rules of Interpretation as Applied to the Bible.
V. Illustrative Exercises, for Primary Classes and Children's Meetings.

As to the subject matter, the manner of treatment, and the price of the book, the author has kept in view the wants of the officer and teacher of ordinary talent and attainments.

Its price after February 1, 1891, will be 50 cents per copy.

All orders received before that time will be filled at 40 cents per copy, postpaid.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

Examination of Treasurer McBride's accounts show that the Knights and Ladies of Honor at Indianapolis have been swindled.

Four Negro prisoners, one of them a woman, were killed in the county jail at Carrollton, Ala., by a mob.

Marshfield and Junction City, Wis., were reported to be in flames from forest fires. Settlers thereabouts were driven from their homes.

Forest fires threatened Deadwood, S. D., and the city in the Black Hills was in imminent danger.

Twelve men, stealing their way to the World's Fair in a freight car, were held up with pistols and robbed by four men at Winslow, Ind.

Chairman Wilson, of the ways and means committee, says a new tariff bill will be presented without delay.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland have decided, it is announced, upon the name "Esther" for the new baby.

Two thousand textile workers held a meeting in Philadelphia and declared for tariff reform and against protection.

On Saturday last, when the Cherokee Strip was opened to settlers, 300,000 persons began the race for homesteads.

Four children of William Stager, living near Logansport, Ind., took poison because they were not permitted to see a parade.

Five thousand ounces of gold, worth $134,000, have been stolen from the Philadelphia mint.

According to Dun's review, decided improvement in business is shown by returns from every part of the country.

Mr. Cullom presented in the Senate a petition from old soldiers asking protection from those who seek to brand pensioners as criminals.

Smallpox is likely to spread throughout Indiana, as residents of infected Muncie are fleeing to neighboring places.

Forest fires threatened several cities in northern Wisconsin. Near Merrill two children were suffocated.

Fire in the business center of Emporia, Kan., did $100,000 damage. Thirty-five horses were cremated.

Four masked men held up a train on the Mineral Range Road, in Michigan, and secured $70,000 from the express safe.

While placing a Negro under arrest near Southport, La., Judge Estopinal was killed.

Fifteen of the soldiers who guard the stockade at Coal Creek, Tenn., have been arrested for lynching Richard Drummond.

Bank clearing totals at seventy-three cities show a decrease of 28.6 per cent in comparison with same week last year.

One hundred thousand people settled upon the Cherokee Strip Saturday. At noon the signal was given announcing the passing of the title of the land from the United States government to the boomers, and a race such as was never witnessed before, and will probably never be seen again, was begun. In the race many were injured and some killed. Of the latter some met death by accident and two were murdered. The details of the crimes are not known, but the dead bodies, one stabbed and the other shot through the head, tell the manner of death. Many dead horses have been found on the prairie. Some died of overexertion, some were killed by falling in the race, and others receiving broken limbs in the rough prairie were shot by their owners.

Ashland, Wis., was on Sunday in great danger of destruction by forest fires. Citizens were called out of church to fight fire. The water gave out, after a desperate struggle of the firemen to save the town, and the hospitals were filled with victims of the flames and smoke. The damage to standing timber is immense.

FOREIGN.

In a manifesto of the British National Liberal Federation the lords are threatened with political annihilation if they continue to oppose the popular will.

Of 9,000 pilgrims who left Tunis for Mecca in May, fully one-half have died from cholera.

Edgar Mix, an American, was arrested at Przemysl, Austria-Galicia, on suspicion of being a Russian spy.

Prague, Bohemia, is practically in a state of siege. This is the result of the agitation of the young czecks.

Rebel war ships under Admiral Tello bombarded Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Little damage was done. Cruisers are hastening to Brazil.

Villa-Canas, Spain, was devastated by a cloudburst. Sixty persons are known to have been drowned.

Riots continue in Spain over the fiscal reforms adopted by the government. At Mont Blanche three rioters were killed.

Damage inflicted by the rebel warships at Rio Janeiro is now admitted to have been greater than at first claimed.

Sufferers from dyspepsia have only themselves to blame if they fail to test the wonderful curative qualities of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. In purifying the blood, this medicine strengthens every organ of the body, and even the most abused stomach is soon restored to healthy action.

It Isn't "The Same As" and it isn't "as good as," no matter what any grocer may tell you about any imitation of Pearline. He makes more money on it—but do you want to ruin your clothes for his profit? The imitations of Pearline are sold at a lower price, naturally, for they're not as good. Some are dangerous, and would be dear at any price.

There's nothing equal to Pearline, the original washing compound, which saves the most work in washing and cleaning, and doesn't do harm. Pearline is never peddled, and offers no prizes. Every package is a prize in itself.

Beware of imitations. 374 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

Happiness at a cost of One Cent a Day.

Books are the greatest sources of happiness within universal reach. The AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY now makes the world's best literature all accessible to any one, in city or country, at a rate of cost of one cent a day for a dollar book; vast numbers of books cost only one-half to one-fourth of that price; all best cloth-bound large type editions, no paper covers or small type.

Loaned Any Book you want to read, loaned to you, anywhere in the United States, for long or short time, as you desire. You can order through your county Postmaster, Newsdealer, Bookseller, neighborhood Book Club, or direct from us. You can call for any book you want.

Sold Books Sold at the lowest prices ever known. Any book supplied. A catalogue of 160 pages of choice books sent on receipt of a 2-cent stamp. A book worth reading is worth owning, if you can afford it, but many cannot afford it; and it is worth something to be able to read a book enough to see if it is worth owning, before you buy it.

Ben Hur for only 8 cents. "The Prince of India," for only 14 cents, (a $2.50 book), "David Balfour," 8 cents, "Lorna Doone," 3 cents; all of Scott's, Eliot's, Dickens's, Thackeray's and other standard authors, each 3 cents, if you can read them in seven days; these are examples; all excellent editions, no paper covered trash in small type. All the new books, a special feature.

Little Women for 8 cts., "Tom Brown at Rugby," 3 cents, "Little Lord Fontleroy," 11 cents, are other examples. It is positively cruelty to children not to give them the benefit of these and other measureless sources of happiness and good, when they can be had at such trifling cost.

In fact books cost nothing, if they increase the income of the reader more than their cost. There is not a person alive, who labors with hand or brain, who earns even $2.00 a week, who will not, by the stimulus of good books be helped more than one cent a day in his earning power. Think of that, and test it, parents, employers and workers. It is your own fault if you don't get the best books, instead of trash.

Magazines, all of them, for one cent to three cents a day, or half that after the first month, or a quarter of it after two months. It is worth more than that just to look at the pictures. Think of it, all of them, for less than the cost of one heretofore: Harper, Scribner, Century, St. Nicholas, Forum, North American, Godey, and the rest, and all the books you can read, besides, cost a patron of the AMERICAN COÖPERATIVE LIBRARY less than the subscription price of one magazine.

Hungry Readers and students generally need no longer go without books, all of them they want, and the best books, since now the best cost less than half what trash has cost heretofore.

Clergymen with small incomes, "starving" heretofore for want of access to the world's current literature, now have it all open to them—and not for personal use only, but as a power for good; organize Reading Clubs among your people and guide them in their selections—infinite power here.

Teachers may also receive and confer inestimable pleasure and benefit upon themselves and pupils, by the means now offered. Increase your earning power by reading the best books.

Send 2 cents for 160 page Catalogue and full particulars. Please mention this paper when you write or call.

WHERE TO FIND THE N. C. A. EXHIBIT.

The World's Fair Exhibit of the N. C. A. is in the northwest corner of the gallery of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, easy of access and within short distances of several other religious exhibits of more or less interest. All visitors will be kindly welcomed to the Association booth by Rev. J. P. Stoddard or his assistants.

ATTENTION, IOWA!

The annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November. Where shall we meet? The Executive Committee desire to locate the meeting where the largest measure of good may be accomplished. Invitations are solicited, and they will be carefully considered. Address all communications to T. P. ROBB.

Linton, Ia.

THE WORLD'S CONGRESS, NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

OCTOBER 5TH, AT 2 AND 7:30 P. M.

The World's Congress of Christians, opposed to Secret Societies, will be held, God willing, in the Fine Art building, Lake Front, Chicago, October 5. The sessions will be at 2 and 7:30 P. M.

PARTIAL PROGRAM.

Rev. Joseph Cook—Illegal Secret Leagues.

Bishop H. J. Becker (an old soldier)—Patriotic Orders, such as the G. A. R.

Bishop P. F. Stevens—Some Objections to Secret Organizations.

Rev. M. A. Gault—The Political Influence of Secret Societies.

Rev. John G. Fee—Secret Orders.

Addresses are also expected from Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Rev. H. L. Kellogg, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and others.

This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend.

ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE AT LAPORTE, INDIANA, SEPTEMBER 28.

Good speakers are expected.

The exercises will consist of addresses and discussions on Secret Societies and their antagonism to the church of Christ, the family and the state.

The invitation to attend is general, but with special reference to Northern Indiana, with a warm welcome for all friends of the cause.

Place of meeting—the Evangelical Lutheran church.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CALL FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19–22, commencing on Thursday at 2 P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath.

Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, Pastor A. L. Smith of South Newmarket, Pastor George L. Kibbee, of Manchester, Ezra T. McIntire of Boston, Pastor J. Q. Adams of Gilford Village, and others have been invited to speak. Barnstead Parade is on the Suncook Valley R. R., about 20 miles from Manchester. Reduced railroad rates expected.

We should be glad to have our friends in neighboring States, who desire to see the church delivered from lodge rule, meet with us. The Gospel will be preached in its purity, and the various reforms presented from a Christian standpoint.

We expect the Lord to be with us in mighty power, to bless and save. S. C. KIMBALL,

Secretary N. H. C. A.

We desire to again call special attention to the excellent work in our reform which is in progress on the Pacific coast. The recent reports of Rev. P. B. Williams of anti-secrecy operations in Oregon are full of interest; and now he takes the field for awhile in another important portion of his district—the new State of Washington, where we trust that the prayers of all our people for his success may follow him. His program provides for one address every week-day evening, and two on each Sabbath. The labor is arduous and the means for carrying it on successfully are limited. Those who have money to spare for the work on the coast will find it a profitable investment. Donations may be sent to this office.

The Voice of Masonry for September, evidently smarting under the application, by Anti-masons, of Mackey's standard Masonic publications to the character and practices of Freemasons, coolly remarks that "Mackey never perfectly comprehended Freemasonry, and, consequently, never perfectly explained it!" When Masons "go back" on their own best friends in this manner, their opponents need expect no charity or benevolence from them. Mackey and Parvin have no superiors as exponents of Freemasonry. The first says that "Freemasonry is not Christianity, nor even a substitute for it;" and the latter says, substantially, that the alleged antiquity of Freemasonry, and the fabled connection of King Solomon with it, are simply bosh.

A converted friend once had a cross presented to him—one which, he felt, it was his imperative duty to bear; and while he was willing in his heart to carry it, it seemed an impossibility for him to lift it. He made it a subject of earnest thought and prayer before he undertook it, and was almost angry with himself when he found how little a burden it proved when he laid it on his shoulder. "It was the lightest cross I ever bore," he testified; but he felt in his soul that if the Lord had not borne the heavier part of it, it would have overtaxed his strength and crushed him. As the Lord meets the repentant sinner more than half-way, so he takes the most trying part of his burden from his faithful child and carries it for him.

Here is what a Jewish Rabbi said in his address at Chautauqua the other day: "I want to say to you, friends, that the fallacy that there is antagonism on the side of the Jew against Christianity should be laid aside once and forever. Let all the religious forces be united and stand shoulder to shoulder, that we may go forward in a conquering march against vice, ignorance and superstition. Nowhere in Jewish pulpit or writings will you find that there is hatred of Christianity. Oh, let the crime of 1800 years ago be fully atoned for! The Jew disclaims forever the guilt which has been charged upon him and has been the source of woes that may not be retold. We cannot bow the knee to Jesus, cannot worship him as divine; none the less do we glory in the inspiring example of his life as it has been pictured to the world. His nobility was the highest product of Judaism itself. We are one." No, we are not one, if this Jewish Rabbi means thereby that true followers of Christ, who acknowledge his divinity and worship him as "the Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, and the Everlasting Father," can fellowship with any man, Jew or Gentile, who openly avows that he "cannot bow the knee to Jesus, cannot worship him as divine". These are not the sentiments of a Christian, but of an unconverted Jew.

MY DISSENT.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

As a member of the National Christian Association I feel called upon to enter my dissent against its action in continuing its identification with the World's Fair as an exhibitor. It is proper here to state that dissent is of two kinds—fundamental and ordinary. The first is against the constitution of the body and involves separation. The Reformers in the sixteenth century separated from the church of Rome because of her constitutional corruptions. Covenanters separate from the political body in this land because the constitution under which it accepted authority is immoral. But the second is against the administration; and when recorded and made as public as the act against which it is taken, the dissenter may continue acting with the body. Christ remained in the Jewish church during the days of his flesh, although it was corrupt, contenting himself with entering a public dissent against the false administration of the scribes and Pharisees, because the constitution of that church was still the pure Word of God. A member of synod or of Congress enters his dissent against an act of the body and records it, still remaining an active member. So I enter my dissent, to free myself from personal responsibility for the wrong, while still remaining in the N. C. A.

It is my profound conviction that the anti-secret exhibit should be covered permanently and the agent withdrawn.

I. The gates of the Fair are open every Sabbath, and the N. C. A. is a party to it so long as it remains.

It has been said that the directors voted to close the gates and that frees them from responsibility. But that is not true. The directors open the gates on Sabbath. It is their act. They do it to save a fine, but it is their act. When Nebuchadnezzar required the three Hebrew children to worship his image, they refused, even though the penalty was being cast into the fiery furnace. When Belshazzar decreed that no one should offer a petition to any one except himself for thirty days, Daniel prayed as usual, although he knew the penalty would be his being cast into the lions' den. The directors should have closed the gates on Sabbath and paid the fine. And the N. C. A. should have said: "If you fear paying that fine more than disobeying God, we must separate."

It has been said that Christians can be identified with the World's Fair, even though it does break the Sabbath, just as they use a Sabbath-breaking railroad. Upon this we observe that there is an essential difference between the two. A railroad is a business enterprise, doing a legitimate business. But when the corporation decides to carry on their work on Sabbath, Christians should separate from the body and refuse to be identified with it as stockholder, director or executive officer. But the services of the corporation may be used in a legitimate way, just as you hire a wicked man to do a day's work for you, and pay him for value received. The World's Fair, however, is an entertainment, an exhibition, having perhaps a slight tincture of instruction, and must be judged with that class. The circus exists to entertain. The animal show connected with it is legitimate and valuable. But the performances of the ring are earthly, sensual and devilish, and these give character to the whole. It belongs to the world, and Christians should stay away. The theater is for amusement. There are many good plays and most of those given have good parts. But the immoralities and immoral tendencies of the theater brand it as a device of the evil one, with which Christians cannot afford to be associated. The World's Fair is an entertainment, having many excellent features. But its open gates on Sabbath, its saloons both numerous and great, and its Midway Plaisance performances, which would put to shame our lowest variety theaters, to say nothing of the nudity in art which should cause a Christian people to hang their heads in shame, determine it to be a worldly institution with which Christians cannot afford to be identified. The purpose of the N. C. A. is to oppose the kingdom and works of darkness, and, instead of countenancing the World's Fair in this wickedness, they should shake off the dust of their feet for a testimony against them.

II. Separation from the World's Fair is the N. C. A.'s golden opportunity to dissent against these wrongs.

The good that may be accomplished by staying would bear no comparison to the value of the testimony for truth and righteousness and purity that would be given by this separation. But it does seem patent that all the good that may be wrought by remaining would be worse than neutralized by its association with evil. And, worst of all, to be associated with such wickedness will incur the displeasure of God; and when he blows upon it our harvest withers. We cannot break God's law, under the pretext of doing good, and expect to avoid the consequences. And it does seem that these considerations leave the N. C. A. but one thing to do, and that is, get out of this "Vanity Fair." In doing that a rebuke will be given these wrongs which all the world will hear and consider.

III. The Congress of Religions in which the N. C. A. is to have part is a dishonor to Christ.

The early Christians suffered martyrdom rather than allow Christ to be placed in the Roman Pantheon upon a par with heathen gods. The N. C. A. separated from the lodge because pagan, Mohammedan, Jew and Christian are herded together as worshipers—of devils. The mission of Christ is to destroy all false religions and establish the true worship. The history, life and work of the N. C. A. make it imperative that Christ's honor be not compromised by association with that Congress of Religions.

Boston, Sept. 11, 1893.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

BY ELDER S. C. KIMBALL.

A writer in the Cynosure of August 24 deplores the lodge-ridden condition of this State. I am sorry that his communication is anonymous. Things have indeed reached a sad pass if a writer cannot, in a Christian paper, discuss public matters without concealing his identity. I have published, for about fourteen years, an anti-secret paper and have made it a rule to require writers to back up their assertions with their names. This has proved somewhat embarrassing to men who have left lodges and wish to denounce their folly and wickedness, and yet justly fear persecution from their former comrades. Anonymous confessions and anonymous charges bear too much resemblance to lodge methods to suit me.

I have not the positive knowledge to deny the statements of "New England" but there is certainly another side to the shield. The very fact that Mr. Chandler, though not a Mason, has, from his coming of age, held the highest public offices almost continually from being Speaker of the House of Representatives to U. S. Senator, which office he now holds, proves either that the Masons do not have the power to fully control even New Hampshire politics, or they do not use their power. I believe the former. It is not good Anti-masonry to exaggerate the power of Masonry. It is not wise for a Christian to overrate Satan's power, or fear him. In conversation, recently, with the worthy president of the N. H. C. A., Robert A. Frohock, he stated that if the anti-secret forces of New Hampshire could be brought to act together, they would, nearly a quota, be able to control public affairs. Mr. Frohock has for years been in constant conflict with the rum-power and the lodge-power, in the courts, in politics, in the church, and in social life. He is an active prosecutor of rum-sellers, an active politician, and an active Christian. He has frequently encountered rum-sellers and Freemasons in court, and enforced the laws against them.

I will close this communication by asking if "New England" is a confessed Christian and a confessed Anti-mason? Let us walk in the light.

Newmarket, N. H.

THE REFORMER.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

A reformer's life is a thorny path; and if not ending in violent death, is beset by opposition and bitter hate, even from those he seeks to bless. He starts out in life full of energy and zeal, determined to benefit his fellow-men. He sees vast evils to be fought, injustice to be exposed, and truths to be proclaimed, and goes to work with all the fire and devotion of youth.

Before he has proceeded far, he is beset by opposition, slander and malicious hate; and, unless endowed by nature with an iron will and bold energy, and possessed with true love for the cause which he advocates, he soon lays his armor by, and gladly retires from the field.

Thus each generation is sifted and purified of its spurious reformers; and while many start on their course like Bunyan's Obstinate and Pliable, the true reformer, like Bunyan's Pilgrim, is generally left to walk alone. Mankind love not the truth, and do not wish to be disturbed in habits of wrong-doing. "Remove not the ancient landmarks," they cry as they shut their eyes and close their ears.

Many listen at first to the reformer, and feel their souls stirred by his startling truths; but when the practice of his precepts begins to bear upon their purse, their ease, or their prejudices, they cry him down as "Wildfire" and "Radical;" and none but a man of giant force can maintain his stand.

Thus many who go on well for a time, and are the means of real good, become weary of the struggle, and sink into obscurity. So the steadfast reformer who perseveres unto the end bears the cross and obtains the crown, and is indeed worthy the remembrance of posterity.

The man who seeks to reform his fellow-men, should count well the cost. His name may be emblazoned in glowing colors upon banners and flags, or carved in splendor upon a lofty mountain, long after his death; but in life he must stand upon pillory, exposed to insult and injury. He will hear slanders invented with cruel ingenuity; his language will be distorted and misrepresented, and his best deeds vilified, even by those for whom he is laboring.

As the true reformer contends for right, and not for party or sect, he can have no chosen clique to rally round him in the hour of danger, but must fight single-handed, trusting to posterity to do justice to that reputation which his high vocation leaves him no time to guard. He may be thankful if his life is not hastened, and his dying pillow harassed, by the enemies of the truth, who never sleep till death has stilled the reformer's voice.

Who, in the face of all these difficulties, and the picture of the greatest Reformer the world ever knew hanging bleeding and dying on the cross, will try to make his voice heard in the cause of progress and improvement in morals and religion? I answer, he to whom God has given grace "to bear the toil, endure the pain," looking beyond the grave for his reward. He can persevere, for he knows "the end is not yet," "the end" which to the worldling (who looks only at the toil-worn body and cruel death,) seems naught, is glorious beyond description. It is a heaven of peace and joy, when this toil is over; a glorious home from whence he can see the work in which he spent his short life ever advancing and blessing future generations. If a man would be a true reformer—if he would rise above opposition, smile at base calumny, and persevere unto the end—let him look beyond the grave for his glory and victory.

PAPAL POSITION AND POWER.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

A friend and myself have concluded that another potent factor in postponing the struggle between Romanism and Protestantism is the Catholic ambition for position and power. For years the mother church has been steadily pushing her devoted sons forward in governmental affairs. In every department of the Federal government adroitly and successfully have Romanists secured office and control. With Carlisle and the United Treasury, the army and the navy, and the Federal salaries already pouring into her coffers, Rome is in no hurry for open rupture between Protestants and Catholics. Cunningly and surely the priest and the Jesuit have brought most of the cities, from mayor to street-cleaner—the legislative, judiciary and police municipality—emolument and officers, into the hands of the Roman hierarchy. State after State and county after county is yielding to their sway. In a free country like this Rome must accomplish by craft, flattery and bribery what in Europe, Mexico and South America she has done by cruelty and force of arms. She can capture and destroy Protestantism and our Republic sooner and safer to herself by this new policy. American Protestantism complacently votes its avowed and deadly enemies into power. The Catholic march for supremacy has been rapid. Rome is becoming impatient and hungry. She stands ready to drink the blood of millions of heretics. She saw President Cleveland throw a copy of the United States Constitution at the feet of the Roman pontiff; saw the officials at Washington send out a government vessel to meet and receive the Romish envoys; saw that vessel officially haul down Old Glory and run up the Catholic flag; saw the President and Cabinet send a letter and Secretary Lamar to officially homage Cardinal Gibbons. And every administration since Grant has been bowing lower and lower at the feet of Rome. No wonder Catholicism is building a Jesuit college and world's headquarters in Washington City. No wonder Satolli, a delegate pope, is already at at the national capital raising funds for building him a vatican. No wonder the Catholic press and clergy talk and act as if they already owned and ruled America. If, as alleged, they are drilling all male Catholics over sixteen years old it is not necessary to fight the government. They expect to capture it without firing a gun. Rome is simply preparing to run the United States at her own sweet will and pleasure, as will be her prerogative, when completely in her power. She will then have a long score to settle with Protestantism. When the proper time comes she will need every improved Winchester to destroy heretics and establish and maintain her own supremacy. But will she fight the American Republic with these guns? Is it policy? Is it necessary? Would it not retard her onward march, wrest from her the reins of government now in her grasp and jeopardize and postpone her final triumph and coming victory? The Catholic World declares: "If the American Republic is to be sustained and preserved at all it must be by the rejection of the principles of the Reformation and the acceptance of Catholic principles by the American people. If allegiance to the church demands of us opposition to political principles adopted by our civil government, we should not hesitate to obey the church. While the state has rights, she has them only in virtue and by permission of the supreme authority, and that authority can only be expressed through the church. We are purely and simply Catholic and profess unreserved allegiance to the church, which takes precedence of, and gives the rule to, our allegiance to the State." Thus if our republican government is to be preserved at all, it must be by a rejection of all Protestantism and its very civilization because the fundamental, underlying principles of our Republic are those of the Reformation. To Catholicize those principles is to destroy them. It is well enough to keep an eye on a power that speaks to fifty millions of Protestants and the grandest free government on earth with such authority and dictation. At least a thorough examination of the Catholic question will give the Protestant public a better understanding of the situation. Has the papacy in all the history of the past ever made threats that she did not try to carry out? She bides her time and is seldom foiled in her schemes. The papacy is not ready just yet to enforce those demands. And there are other reasons why Rome does not want war.

CATHOLICS AND SECRET SOCIETIES.

The Chicago Times of last Thursday contained an article, the substance of which was evidently furnished by an intelligent Roman Catholic, indicating the relation of his church to all classes of secret societies.

Last week, at Archbishop Feehan's episcopal residence, a secret conference was held by the archbishops and bishops who had been in attendance upon the Catholic congress, including Mgr., Satolli and Card. Gibbons. Of course the proceedings were not made public, but for valid reasons it is believed that the question of bestowing the sanction of the church upon most of the prevalent secret societies was discussed.

The Times' article opens with the following "opinion of a prominent Catholic," who is "a member of several secret societies:"

> Remove the ban and let the Irish Catholics in, and if there is anything contrary to the church in them they will either soon correct it or burst up the societies. In either event the Holy Roman Catholic church would be the gainer, no matter who might be the loser.

The following is the comment of the Times' writer:

"This secret society business has long been a source of trouble and anxiety to the Catholic hierarchy of the United States and has given rise to so many contradictory opinions and decisions that the question of infallibility in morals has suffered in many dioceses. It is true the cardinals and archbishops and other hierarchs and theologians appear to think that the matter was definitely settled. But it is a broad and ticklish question, many laymen think.

"There is not a secret society in the United States, except the few that are specially anti-Catholic, that Catholics do not belong to. Those particularly under the ban of the church are the Freemasons and the Odd-fellows, especially the former, but both, even in this city where Archbishop Feehan guides, number many followers of his creed. It is said that the organizations whose constitutions and rules are to be considered include the American Legion of Honor, the Knights Templar, Order of the Eastern Star, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks, Grand Army of the Republic, Knights and Ladies of the Golden Rule, Knights of the Maccabees, Knights of Pythias, United American Mechanics, Royal Arcanum, Royal League, National Union, Independent and Ancient Order of Foresters, Ancient Order of United Workmen, and several organizations having special relations to foreign politics, which include the Clan-na-Gael and the Carbonari, to say nothing of the Mafia and St. Jaques societies, which probably exist only in name in this country. Every foreign nationality in this country has compact and more or less secret societies, and many of them are composed in great part, if not altogether, of Catholics. Nearly all of them are of a mutual benevolent character, and here, said one distinguished cleric, is where the difficulty in dealing with them begins.

"The Ancient Order of Hibernians, for instance, is a benevolent association, but it is also mainly a patriotic Irish organization and its political reminiscences are those of the Ribbonmen who gave it birth. Until a few years ago this order was condemned by the church in this country; but having a few years ago in a convention decided that its members should agree to be practical Catholics, the ban was removed from it. Still in one or more dioceses in the Eastern States it is said they are still in disfavor. Everybody knows the Fenians were condemned, though in truth they were never a secret organization. Their openness was their folly. The Clan-na-Gael was at one time regarded as a most wicked combination, and in most dioceses it is yet looked upon as an organization "tolerari potest," to quote Pope Leo's words, though in this diocese the church offers no objection to it. Indeed, it is asserted by those who ought to know that fifteen or sixteen priests of this city belong to it, and more than one of whom are attached to the Cathedral of the Holy Name. So it is safe to presume that the clan will not be anathematized.

"Besides the Ancient Order of Hibernians the most widely known Catholic secret societies are the Catholic Order of Foresters, the Catholic Benevolent Legion, the Catholic Mutual Benevolent association, and the Catholic Knights. Most of these have rituals similar to other organizations of somewhat similar names, but as they are distinctly attached to the church they cannot be interfered with.

"But counting in all the membership of the above Catholic secret societies (the Ancient Order of Hibernians excepted) it is probable that more Catholics belong to non-Catholic secret societies than to Catholic orders. In the rosters of the Royal League, the Royal Arcanum, the Knights of Pythias, the National Union, the United Order of Workmen, the Independent and Ancient Orders of Foresters, the Elks, and several others, the names of thousands of Catholics are to be found. So far, however, membership in those bodies has not brought the penalty of exclusion from the sacraments of the church, and the statement that the present archbishops' meeting was considering whether Catholics could conscientiously belong to them produced a great deal of anxiety yesterday."

The article ends with the following sentence:

"It is probable that nothing approaching a conclusion has yet been reached, and will not be, if at all, for some days, as the issue is one of vital importance to the economic and social relations of tens of thousands of Catholics as well as to the church itself."

Further developments are expected.

INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

A note from Josiah Strong, D. D., the general secretary of the Evangelical Alliance for the United States of America (corner of 4th avenue and 22d street, New York City), brings the general program of the International Christian Conference, to be held in Chicago, October 8-15, under the direction of the Alliance. During its sessions will be held a large number of section conferences, having great practical value as schools of methods. In these section conferences many experts in Christian work will describe their own successful methods, thus giving all who wish to learn the benefit of their experience. Of these sections and the men and women who are to address them, some information will be furnished each week until the conference.

Of the more than one hundred congresses held in Chicago this season, many believe that the World's Christian Conference under the direction of the Evangelical Alliance is the most important and likely to prove the most useful. Its usefulness, however, will depend on the use which the Christian public make of it. The religious press, therefore, can render a most important service by acquainting its readers with the time and character of the conference.

The program, which can be obtained at the above address, or at the meeting of the conference, is quite voluminous and embraces a large number of addresses and papers on Christian Liberty, The Religious Condition of Protestant Christendom, Christian Union and Co-operation, The Church and Social Problems. Many distinguished speakers, educators and writers, will participate in the proceedings.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.

New York City has a foreign-born population of 647,000 out of a total of 1,800,000. The foreigners are: Germany, 230,000; Ireland, 200,000; Russia, 55,000; Italy, 50,000! Great Britain, 49,000; Austria, 29,000; France 11,000; Canada and New Foundland, 9,000; other nationalities, 14,000.

In arriving at the important point as to the number in each race who commit murder and felonious assault as gathered from the police records of eight months past we find that:

One Italian in 574 commits a felonious assault and one in 12,222 a murder.

One Irishman in 3,636 commits a felonious assault and one in 13,333 a murder.

One German in 5,476 commits a felonious assault and one in 32,857 a murder.

One Russian in 3,235 commits a felonious assault and one in 55,000 a murder.

One Frenchman in 3,666 commits a felonious assault and one in 11,000 a murder.

One Englishman in 3,266 commits a felonious assault and one in 49,000 a murder.

One Austrian in 3,625 commits a felonious assault and there were no murders among 29,000.

One North-American Britisher in 9,000 commits a felonious assault. No murder recorded among 9 000.

One Spaniard in 500 commits a felonious assault, while one Hungarian in 4,333 is guilty of this offense. Neither race furnishes a murder.

One American in 7,185 commits a felonious assault and one in 35,204 a murder.

SCOTCH CHURCHES.

On Monday, Sept. 11, Queen Victoria laid the foundation of a new church in the parish of Balmoral, one of her favorite places of residence, and during the ceremony, personally and on her own responsibility, declared her warm attachment to the Church of Scotland, which, she said, so largely represented the feelings of the people of the country. In this ceremonial act and in this speech the Queen calls attention to a unique circumstance, namely, that she is the only human being in the world who is the constitutional head, spiritual and civil, of two utterly distinct and even conflicting church establishments—the Established Church of England, which is Episcopalian, and the Established Church of Scotland, which rejected episcopacy and rests on the equality of presbyters, following the doctrine of Calvin.

The Church of Scotland, however, is but one branch of the Presbyterian system in that country, and is said to represent less than one-half of the adherents of that faith. The latest statistics, as we gather them from contemporary journals, are as follows:

The State church of Scotland consists of 1,700 ministers and 600,000 communicants, governed by eighty-four presbyteries and sixteen synods. In England there are seventeen churches connected with the Church of Scotland. The Church of Scotland costs the people of Scotland, whether they accept its teachings or not, a round $2,000,000 per year, although there are many parishes in which the average number of communicants is only four and one-half.

The Free Church of Scotland, originating in the evils and excesses of the Patronage act of 1712 depriving the people of the democratic right to choose their ministers, and investing it in hereditary patrons of parishes, has proved the most progressive religious institution in the United Kingdom. With no financial aid but voluntary gifts of its people, it sustains 1,100 ministers, seventy-four presbyteries, and furnishes to the church an annual income of $3,000,000, with three theological colleges and normal schools for teachers. It also sustains missions in India, South and Central Africa, Syria and Arabia, and carries on eighteen charges on the continent. In nine years the Free Presbyterians raised more than $4,000,000 for religious objects.

The disestablishment of the State Church of Scotland has been a favorite measure with the Liberals of England, and Mr. Gladstone, it is understood, favors it. What effect the action of the Queen may have upon its further discussion remains to be seen.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Why do people go to church?—An antiquarian treasure—Wellesley freshmen—Architecture for women—Millionaires and the public—Woman Suffrage in Connecticut—The gipsey moth.

"Why do people go to church?" This is the conundrum that is being discussed in some quarters; but imagine the shocked surprise of our forefathers who gathered in their fireless meeting houses, on days when according to Judge Sewall's Diary the communion bread froze so hard as to rattle on the plates, and sat without a murmur through interminable discussions of Free Will and Moral Agency and Foreordination, and similar theological puzzles, to know that their descendants a hundred years after would be asking such a question. And yet it is an exceedingly proper inquiry if only asked in the right spirit and answered honestly, but the trouble is that so many people are more ready to answer for their neighbors than for themselves. But even in old Puritan times I suppose there was much the same mixture of motives that there is now. Forms change and manners alter, but generally speaking we do to-day what our ancestors did yesterday for much the same reasons. The old and the new are always meeting and intermingling. For instance, there is an increasing number among whom we may reckon some of the most devoted servants of God, who object even to the usual title of Reverend before their names. It is certain that only our being used to the familiar abbreviation prevents us from being startled by its unscripturalness. The writer's library contains among its chief treasures a copy of one of the earliest editions of Matthew Henry's great work, published in 1725, and on the title page I notice that the author's name is given as plain "Matthew Henry, Minister of the Gospel." How its simple dignity impresses one, like the Apostle Paul's "servant of Jesus Christ," and how effectually a Rev. before or a D.D. after would have spoiled it all!

These six bulky, sheep-skin-covered tomes belonged originally to Mr. Oliver Peabody, first minister of Natick, and successor of the Apostle Eliot in his work among the Indians. "He was eminently pious, and greatly beloved and lamented;" so the Religious Encyclopedia informs me, "dying in great peace, 1752." From him they passed into the hands of another good Puritan divine, the beloved minister of my father's boyhood, who left among his papers as one of the axioms by which he governed his long and useful life the following, which may well be commended to the pastors of to-day as one means of restoring the lost power of the pulpit: "The Bible, and not the philosophy or theories of men, shall be my standard, under divine guidance as to doctrines to be taught and duties to be inculcated; and that I may understand them I will endeavor to study the Scriptures with a teachable and childlike disposition, and not with a view to make the inspired volume bend to my preconceived opinions. In other words, my inquiry shall be, What does the Bible teach? What saith the Lord? And I will not sacrifice truth, duty or conscience to gain popularity or to please men."

That was the grand Puritan ideal, "truth," "duty," "conscience;" and towards this ideal they pressed unfalteringly. As for "compromise," or "policy," or "expediency," the words were not in their dictionary. But to come back to these venerable pages, with their obsolete spelling and their queer f's for s's, they seem almost living and sentient, to be handled with tender reverence, for were they not new and fresh when the first Georges were reigning, and settled into the solid respectability of age when our forefathers brewed that monster cup of tea for the fishes in Boston harber? If they could only speak, what a tale they might unfold!—stories of the French and Indian war at first-hand, when its terrors were a present reality; neighborhood gossip, romances, tragedies, comedies, all swallowed up in the great sea of oblivion; solemn, earnest talks with inquiring souls; hours of agonized wrestling with God, prayers the echoes of which may be still vibrating through eternity, and distilling upon us in dews of unconscious blessing.

But to come back to modern life and 1893. Wellesley opens with a Freshman class of 274, the first to be allowed elective studies. Under the new regime they are at liberty to choose any two, with the proviso that one must be a language or a science. A large majority have chosen the former. Women, as a rule, have a greater facility with languages than men. What instructor cannot certify to the fact that girls can usually write a better letter than boys at a corresponding age? But Wellesley young ladies are interested in practical matters, too. Several are now studying the labor question, preparatory to the time when they will have the ballot, and Tom the Irish coachman, will not "be worth the whole of them" on election day.

The Scientific School of Harvard has added another study, that of architecture, to its list. Now why would not this be a desirable addition in our women's colleges? A woman who is necessarily in the house far more than a man, and whose comfort is much more dependent on the convenience of its interior arrangements, ought to be able to plan one either for herself or others; plan it with an eye to the best possible hygienic conditions, as well as to that which the average architect of the other sex sees no use for, plenty of closet room. Wasn't it Vassar College that was planned without a single closet in the building? Catch a woman architect making any such omission. She would be much more likely to leave out the front stairs.

Again, a twenty-five times millionaire has departed from us, and though a liberal giver to worthy charities during his life, Mr. Ames, known as the richest man in New England, has left in his will not a cent to any public object. He seems to have had that desire which possesses all our rich men to-day, with scarce an exception, to keep the money in the family, in hopes that the fortune will keep aggregating. It is the same feeling, essentially, which makes the founder of a royal dynasty anxious to bequeath the crown, unimpaired in all its prerogatives, to his descendants, and is just as anti-American. A law which should tax all incomes that exceed a certain limit in proportion to their increase, is what is needed as an antidote to this tendency; and till this is done the chasm will keep growing wider between the possessor of millions and the common people. A good example of this pride of wealth generating an exclusiveness which goes beyond that of European royalties is afforded by W. K. Vanderbilt's white marble palace at Newport. It contains two hundred rooms, and cost three and a half million dollars, but is completely shut off from the public view by a solid iron fence sixteen feet high, while, in addition, a kind of granite archway has been made leading to the shore in the rear of his estate, so that he and his family can make their visits to the beach uncontaminated by sight of or contact with any of "the vulgar herd."

Connecticut women have just voted for school committee for the first time. In this respect she is behind Massachusetts—a good ways behind. Is it the great preponderance of Roman Catholics and foreigners in her manufacturing towns which has caused this? or is it a natural conservatism—a slowness to take up with new ideas? However, the "nutmeg State" has made a beginning, and perhaps the last will yet be first and the first last.

Recent experiments seem to prove that the gipsey-moth has an indefinite number of lives, leaving the proverbial "cat" nowhere. It will thrive on strychnine, Paris-green, and arsenic; and the commissioners are at their wits' ends to know how to treat the little pest. But isn't here an analogy between that and our moral pests? Doesn't evil thrive on poison, on falsehood and slander? Nothing will kill it but the truth, which is like God himself, "a consuming fire."

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 20, 1893.

If a refutation were needed of the saying, "ministers' sons usually turn out badly," it would be furnished by the prominence of the sons of ministers in the present administration, starting with the President himself. Another minister's son—Mr. William B. Hornblower, of New York—has just received a very unusual honor for a man of his age—42 years—in being nominated by the President to the vacancy upon the Supreme Court bench, caused by the death of the late Justice Blatchford. Mr. Hornblower's father was educated to be a lawyer, but became a minister, while Mr. Hornblower was educated to be a minister, but became a lawyer. He comes of a family which has produced many eminent jurists; one of his grandfathers having been chief-justice of the State of New Jersey, one uncle—Justice Bradley—a member of the U. S. Supreme Court, and another—Judge Woodruff—of the U. S. Circuit Court. His brother and his mother have resided in Washington for some years.

Surgeon-General Wyman, of the Marine Hospital service, is in constant communication with Surgeon Murry, who is in charge of the yellow-fever-stricken city of Brunswick, Georgia. According to his latest information there is no need for physicians from the outside, and volunteers, neither nurses nor physicians, will be welcomed.

Rev. Dr. Domer anticipated the celebration of the centennial of the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol building, which took place on Monday, by delivering an eloquent centennial sermon on Sunday, taking for his text Kings 5: 17—"And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones to lay the foundations of the house." It was a sermon filled with interesting facts, all tending to show the divine protection which has been given our country by the greatest of all Rulers and our obligation to appreciate that favor by worshiping God.

Another has been added to the long list of crimes committed at the national capital by whisky and which, under our present laws, cannot be punished. An aged and respected father's head is bowed down with disgrace because of the brand of Cain, which has been placed upon his son, and two daughters are cruelly bereft of their only living parent; all because the sale of intoxicating liquor is legalized in Washington. The facts in this case are so peculiar and point so clearly to the unmitigated evil of the liquor traffic that a synopsis is herewith presented: A young man of good family, while intoxicated, went to the residence occupied by a highly respected widow and her two young daughters and attempted to make a forcible entry. He did not succeed in getting in, but he so badly frightened the ladies that they were afraid to go to bed, although it was long past the hour at which they usually retired. The mother, in her anxiety to learn whether the man was still at her door, went out upon a balcony from which the door could be seen. The balcony was old and insecure, and in a moment had broken down and the watchful mother was but a moaning mass of flesh and bones, on the ground in front of her residence, and in an hour those two girls were motherless; all on account of whisky. The young man was arrested, acknowledged that he was under the influence of liquor and had attempted to enter the house, but claimed that he did it because he thought a woman with whom he had been flirting on the street had entered the house. The judge was compelled to discharge the man, because there was no law upon which he could be held. Thus, whisky had made that man a murderer, for he had just as clearly committed a murder as though he had killed the widow with his own hands; but, there being no law against the sale of whisky, nobody could be punished. And so it goes on; the cursed stuff which carries ruin, desolation, crime and death wherever it goes, is sold under legal protection, and so it will continue to go on until an aroused people shall arise in their might and declare against the saloon, the mightiest single instrument of evil of our time. The day and hour of that arising no man can predict, but it will—it must come, sooner or later, and God grant that it be soon.

President Cleveland held a special reception in honor of the delegates to the National Convention of Colored Baptists, yesterday afternoon. The convention will conclude its work to morrow or next day. The white ministers of the city have been active in making the convention a success. *

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

WELCOME VISITORS.

Increased numbers visit the N. C. A. exhibit, and calls for information have been far greater in the present than the past month. Many students who were employed during vacation at the Fair, on returning, are supplying themselves with the means of meeting the secret society question intelligently in the various institutions with which they are connected. This is an encouraging feature of our work, which gives promise of workers when the present corps shall join the veterans "gone before."

Among interested callers who have helped together "by prayer and conference" I wish to mention with thanks Bro. D. F. Pratt, of Boston, whose voice and life are a protest against the whole system of secretism; Sister Fairchild, whose piety, devotion and active co-operation was second to none of the faithful ones who assisted in laying the foundations and sustaining the cause in Washington, D. C.; Joseph Cook, whose approval, after listening to explanations of our charts and a brief talk to the company gathered in front of our booth, was appreciated. The picture of his benevolent, intelligent face which adorned our booth was not entirely satisfactory, and he gave me an order for another, which is now in position and is certainly an improvement. Looking around at the group of portraits, Philo Carpenter, J. Blanchard, C. G. Finney, Wendell Phillips, D. L. Moody, E. P. Goodwin, Chas. Sumner, Joseph E. Roy, Howard Crosby, A. J. Gordon, Col. Geo. R. Clarke, and others, Mr. Cook remarked: "I feel highly honored in such company." "God bless you in your work!" with a hearty hand-shake, was the parting benediction of this great-souled hero in the arena of moral and spiritual conflict.

Bishop Weaver simply paused for a "hand-shake" across the table, and passed on with a care-worn look and a feeble step, in very striking contrast with the "Lincoln of the U. B. church" whom I once knew, when the flag of "no compromise with the secret empire" floated at the head of a long column of veterans in the contest for the pure church that should furnish neither shelter nor reputation to the enemies of Christ's bride; one whose fellowship I had once enjoyed, and from whom I had received encouragement and aid when assisting Mr. Ronanye in exposing Masonry, but who had adopted the principles of his bishop and joined the Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and other branches of Satan's synagogue. "He was quite communicative and gave no enviable account of what he found within the tyled recesses of "Satan's seat." Rev. Mr. Dinius and his wife, accompanied by a ministerial brother and his wife from the Pacific slope, brought greetings and words of cheer, and departed leaving a blessing of happy memories. This list might be indefinitely extended, by adding the names of Rev. Bro. Ferris and wife, Rev. Bro. Glassford, Bro. Miller and wife, Bro. Jones, and a host of worthies, showing that a good brother who had listened attentively for some time was not mistaken when he expressed surprise at finding that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Let us praise God and be of good courage.

TWO CLASSES.

Those who have personal knowledge and still adhere to their lodges may properly be put into two classes—the honorable men and the tricksters—and both are frequent visitors at our booth.

A middle-aged, well-dressed, fine-looking man spent some minutes looking over the ritual. When accosted he said: "I have all this and much more." Replying to the suggestion that the accepted Masonry of this country was contained in the York and Scottish Rites, he said: "You are correct; but I have the 33d degree ring of Albert Pike, left to me by a provision in his will. He was my intimate friend and unquestionably the greatest Mason that ever lived." When I asked about his official standing in the Supreme Council, he replied: "I am an honorary, not an actual member;" and, producing Pike's ring from his pocket and comparing it with his own on the middle finger of his right hand, he explained the difference—a bit of information that I was glad to obtain, and which I have had occasion to use for the benefit of our work. Should this meet the eye of my friend from Arkansas, he will please accept my thanks, not only for the valuable information which he gave me about titles, etc., in the Southern and Northern jurisdictions, but for the urbane, courteous, gentlemanly and honorable way in which he treated a friend who took radical ground against what he attempted honestly, though I must think unadvisedly, to justify.

An elderly man among the listeners, at a "period" in my remarks, stepped forward and extended his hand, which I took and at once noted the "Master's grip," which I returned. He paused long enough to draw me near and whisper in "low breath," "I know all about the accursed system; go on with your good work;" and then walked hastily away as if haunted by some terrible ghost of the throat-cutting, disemboweling, benevolent (?) fraternity.

Two young men, whose thoughtful attention I had noticed, left with the remark: "We have been listening for some time to hear some plausible defence or argument in favor of the lodges; we have heard plenty of assertions and denunciations, but not one sound argument or convincing proof of their utility. I think, sir, you are right, and have the best of them in every case."

A mercurial, self-sufficient apostle of the craft presented himself, with a number of backers, or what are called in ward politics, "clackers," for a tilt. He announced himself as a Jew, but declined to say whether or not he was a Mason. I saw no way more practical than to help him spin his own web and then choke him with his own "cable-tow". He was deft and artful; but when he felt what the lumbermen call a "timber hitch" "shutting off his wind" he became so much in earnest that the attending guard very properly ordered the "clackers" and their Ishmaelitish chief to "move on".

A "stalwart," when entangled in the meshes of his own admissions, said: "I am a Presbyterian elder and have taken all there is in Masonry." I asked: "How do you reconcile the Knight Templars' fifth libation with the sacrament of our Lord?" He replied: "I have taken both, and they are perfectly consistent." When I began to explain how the sealed libation is taken, he departed hastily, apparently not in the best of humor.

There were five instances in a single day where men, not intentionally, of course, but actually, acknowledged that they had taken what Elder Bernard calls "the oath of double damnation".

One other must suffice. A man who professed to know Dr. Roy exclaimed, on reading his testimony: "That's a lie." Pres. Finney, Geo. F. Pentecost, and especially Wendell Phillips, are the daily recipients of like complimentary (?) epithets. But the good work of exposing and withstanding this "hydra" goes on and is greatly strengthened and furthered by the efficient labors of Bros. Cook, Phillips, Richards, Hitchcock and others who have called and "taken a hand". All praise to God, who giveth the victory.

JAMES P. STODDARD.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN NEW ENGLAND.

218 COLUMBUS AVE.,
BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 21, '93.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As I came through the Boston Common, this afternoon, and saw the long rows of seats filled with men out of work, many of them the red-nosed, blear-eyed kind, some feeling blue because they had drank whisky, and others because they couldn't, and all idle because no man had hired them—I thought that if only these men could be brought to Christ and get filled with his Spirit, how useful they might be.

The reformer is never out of employment. He has work the year round. The harder the times, the harder he must work. My work of the week past has been largely personal visitation.

I find, since my last writing, that I have secured twenty-eight subscriptions to our paper. Those who have subscribed are largely young men, consecrated young men. These are to be among the pillars in the churches to which they belong. I have found them in the Congregational, Baptist, Methodist, Lutheran, Presbyterian and other churches. My heart has been made glad to find so many of the Christian young men free from the lodge snare and willing to inform themselves. Once well-informed, I am sure they will not be caught.

Several have asked me if the Scandinavian temperance society called "Templars" is a secret society. I can say, as carried on in Boston it is not. I do not know its history. It is said to have broken off from the Good Templars, a secret temperance organization.

I was invited to attend the Templars' meeting last Saturday evening, at 12 Kneeland street. I found no one at the door asking a grip, sign or password. On entering and stating my business I was shown the utmost courtesy. I found about fifty persons, largely young men and ladies, present. As the Scandinavian language was used, I could not tell all that was said. A Christian song was sung in English, and the moral sentiment appeared to be good. Although it was the night for the election of officers, they gave me ten minutes to speak of my work. I congratulated them on being an open temperance organization. I suggested that the saloon-keeper puts up the screen because he is ashamed of his business. When the young man takes the first drink he doesn't want his mother to know it, so he seeks "darkness rather than light," because he feels that his "deed is evil." Many a wayward young man can trace his downfall directly to his uniting with a secret club or lodge. My remarks were well received; and several invitations were given to speak to them again concerning this matter. The president and seven of the leaders subscribed for the Cynosure.

In the canvassing work one learns to read human nature. It is exceedingly interesting to see how different minds work. I called on an elderly man, a typical New England Congregationalist. His face was a benediction. His hearhearing was impaired, but his eye was bright. There was nothing sly or narrow indicated in his countenance, but the reverse. I saw that open, frank expression that one likes to meet. When I told him of my mission, he said, with a surprised accent to his voice, "Why, sir, I am a Mason!" Scarcely waiting for me to express surprise, he went on: "I havn't been to a lodge for more than fifty years, and I don't think it's any place for a Christian; but I don't want to tell what they do there. You know 'once a Mason, always a Mason.'" I replied that I did not want him to tell me what they did there, because I knew already. I then explained that the Masonic oath was merely a profanation, and not binding, as he sup-

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MAD RUSH FOR FREE PUBLIC LANDS.

DOUGLASS, Kan., Sept., 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We are in the midst of another land "opening". The great Cherokee Strip, beginning with fertile lands below eastern Kansas, and running out into the arid semi-desert expanse at the foot of the Rocky Mountains, will be opened, ere this is printed, to the home-seekers, as they are popularly supposed to be. The rush for "the Strip" is something almost incredible. For some days more than a hundred wagons a day, some days as high as a hundred and fifty, have gone past our door. This is only one of the numerous well-travelled roads to the promised land.

To the Eastern theorist it would seem a sign of land-hunger and poverty seeking a home. There is something of this element in it, it is true; but in great measure it is simply, to the eye of the experienced Westerner, a colossal exhibition of greed. Here is something to be gotten for nothing, a thing that appeals most powerfully to the average man, if not to all men. Men would attempt to carry off an elephant for which they had no use, if they could get it for nothing.

Then again, the lottery and race element appeals strongly to many. Here is a prize, of which only a portion of the immigrants can get anything, and the result depends partly on luck and partly on the swiftness of the horses—just the combination to interest and ensnare the ordinary man.

And so they come, "the strippers," as we call them, in all sorts of outfits, in all sorts of conditions, all sorts of people. They come from long distances, some even from the other side of the water. Many of them are well-to-do, having farms or homes elsewhere; but here is a chance of winning a prize without much cost, and they are on hand. Doctors, merchants, lawyers, mechanics, preachers even, are carried away with the fever. If this land could only have been given to industrious, honest, but landless farmers, what an excellent thing it would have been! But how to do this seems to have been an unsolvable problem.

It is very hot, dry and dusty, and the appearance of the "boomers" is in accordance. It is what is called "ague weather," for the nights are quite cool; and sickness must largely prevail among the immigrants. There will be suffering for lack of water, feed, and probably food. But all this counts little to the greedy mob rushing south. There are, however, quite a number making in the other direction.

It will be a grand day for Southern Kansas when the Indian land is all settled up and these periodical demoralizations cease. The rush for the town lots will doubtless be the most violent, for here the speculative element enters most largely.

Oh, if there were only such a rush for that land beyond the skies, where there is a claim for every one who will apply—mansions for all!

T. C. MOFFATT.

A GOOD TESTIMONY.

PAXTON, Ill., September 18, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE —Believing that Jesus Christ is the model by whom we should strive to live aright, and having no evidence from any source that he ever locked up himself in a hall or cell with other men for the purpose of proclaiming the work of salvation and love, but spake it openly alike to rich and poor, in the street or on the mount, without fees or dues, I conscientiously believe, and am fully persuaded, that secret societies are not only unjustly claimed to be benevolent organizations, but are entirely contrary to both true religion and morality, and a great injury to this land.

I have, therefore, pledged myself to ever denounce their work. Although as yet unfit for public service in this behalf, I may undertake it at a future day, and will spend much of my time in studying this evil.

I have been verbally informed of your Association, and hope that it can help me to acquire more knowledge of secret societies.

MATTHEW CALLECOD.

SERVING TWO MASTERS.

CHICAGO, September 20, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I recently met an able minister from Ohio who is peculiarly situated, since he is a Mason and the pastor of an orthodox church in which there exists a strong lodge element, yet he is opposed to both Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship. Fearful of losing his pastorate, he does not yet dare to attack the lodge openly, but is privately working against it. Of the two, he says that the Odd-fellows in his district are by far the most rancorous and the hardest to encounter. He hopes, however, to be able soon to leave his present charge for one more in harmony with his present views of the secret empire. Like many another fledgling, he became infatuated with the alleged "beauty, strength and wisdom" of Freemasonry, the boastful "benevolence" of the Odd-fellows, and the glare and pageantry of other societies; and now, when he ought to be enjoying the fullest liberty of the Gospel of Christ, he finds himself handicapped by what he knows are the evils of an organization that is the enemy of Christianity. Hence, at present, he is on the fence, knowing his duty but doing it not.

Separation is his only salvation. MARK.

The New Volume of Pen and Pencil Series.

By D. Lewis Jones, Morris Jones, Edward Ffoulkes, H. Elvet Lewis, D. Tyssil Evans, D. Davies and O. M. Edwards. Edited by Richard Lovett, M. A. With many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, boxed..... 3.20

"'Welsh pictures' is the work of ten Welshmen, among whom illustrating the beauties of Wales has been parcelled out according to the special familiarity of each. The result is a pleasing volume."—London Times.

THE EARTHLY FOOTPRINTS OF OUR RISEN LORD, Illumined.

A continuous narrative of the Four Gospels according to The Revised Version, with introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Illustrated by 113 full-page half tone re-productions. Small 4to, cloth.....net 1.50
Gilt edge, with silk book mark, boxed.....net 2.00
Full morocco, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, boxed.....net 3.75

Pictures reflecting the best in sacred art from Raphael to the present day are scattered profusely through the book.

"To many the life of the Christ will be a new book in this form. Though beyond the introduction it contains no word except what is found in the four Gospels, yet when read continuously, without the breaks necessarily made by the different stories of the four evangelists, the narrative takes on new force and lifelikeness. The very fact that this is not our usual method of reading the Word will give it a new reality."—Golden Rule.

A GIFT OF LOVE, and Loving Greetings for 365 Days.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Paper-cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, containing CHRISTIAN LIVING, THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE, AND THE SHEPHERD PSALM. 3 vols. in box. 18mo, cloth..... 1.50
White vellum cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.75

D. L. Moody says: "Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man mighty in the scriptures, saturated with Bible facts and truths."

PRAYERS FROM THE POETS.

By Martha Harger. 16mo, two colored cloth, gilt top..... 1.00
Leatherette, boxed..... 1.50

"This volume is admirable. The Prayer are better suited to some of our moods than formal Litanies and are selected from excellent sources. The book will be a dear treasure to many hearts."—The Churchman.

KIN-DA-SHON'S WIFE.

An Alaskan Story. By Mrs. Eugene S. Willard, Home Missionary of the Presbyterian Board of America to Alaska. With illustrations. 8vo, cloth..... 1.50

"Being a close observer and in deep sympathy with the native population in their struggles towards a Christian Civilization, Mrs. Willard has gained a more intelligent knowledge of their character, of their needs and hindrances, than perhaps any other person."—Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

HEROES OF THE GOODWIN SANDS.

By Rev. Thomas Stanley Treanor. With many illustrations. 8vo, Cloth..... 1.50

"It is a book of most engrossing interest, and as stimulating as it is readable."—The Record.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By Rev. LEWIS O. THOMPSON. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master."—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects. By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers.

Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical—valuable because time saving—the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

IN BRIEF.

ORANGES INSTEAD OF SOAP.

The housewives in Florida have found a new use for oranges. They scrub the floors with them. Go into almost any town in the orange-growing districts and you will see the women using the luscious fruit exactly as our housekeepers use soap. They cut the oranges in halves and rub the flat exposed pulp on the floor. The acid in the oranges doubtless does the cleaning, but at any rate the boards are very white after the application. It is thought that lemons would be better than oranges for this purpose, because of the additional acidity.

LIKE THE POTATO.

A new vegetable is about to be introduced to the people of the United States through the department of agriculture. It is the root of the calla lily, which resembles somewhat in appearance the ordinary Irish tuber, with the addition of a few fibrous roots, that have nothing to do with the qualities of the article as an esculent. So prolific and palatable is the root of that plant that their propagation in many parts of the United States, where conditions are favorable, may reasonnbly be looked forward to as an agricultural industry of the future.—Philadelphia Ledger.

IVY KEEPS A WALL DRY.

The growth of ivy on the walls of houses renders the walls entirely free from damp, the ivy extracting every particle of moisture from wood, brick or stones for its own sustenance, by means of its tiny roots, which work their way into the hardest stone. The overlapping leaves of the ivy conduct water falling upon them from point to point until it reaches the ground, without allowing the walls to receive any moisture whatever from the beating rain.—Detroit Free Press.

VARNISH PREPARED BY ELECTRICITY.

A German has taken out a patent for producing varnish from linseed oil by means of an electric current. The oil, after being purified in a proper manner, is thoroughly mixed and agitated with sulphuric acid and water, and subjected to the action of an electric current for two or three hours, so that the oxygen produced in the nascent state by the passage of the current converts the oil into varnish. The varnish so produced is said to be almost colorless and perfectly free from all mineral or metalic admixtures or impurities.—Electrical Review.

A POOR SUBSTITUTE for a well-known medicine pays more profit to a dealer, when he sells it. That's the reason he annoys you with his claim that it is "just as good." And that is one reason why every woman who wants Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription should go to a reliable dealer.

Every woman does want it, if she's suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex. If she's "run-down," or delicate, she needs it just as much. It's a special tonic, that builds her up; a legitimate medicine, that corrects and cures. For every "female complaint" and weakness, it is the only remedy so safe and certain that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

What else, can be "just as good" for you?

A long advertisement is unnecessary to convince you that you need Dr. Sage's Remedy for your Catarrh. Its makers offer $500 for a case they cannot cure.

BRO. FOSTER'S DISSENT.

We print herewith the protest of the President of our New England Association against the action of the National Christian Association in connection with the World's Columbian Exposition. In reference to it we desire to say:

I. That there is no particular difference of opinion among us as to the conduct of the Exposition. The things which Bro. Foster complains of we also complain of; what he condemns we condemn. We believe the liquor privileges, the heathen dances, the Sunday opening, and the violation of the promise for Sunday closing will make the Exposition to be sorrowfully remembered by millions of American citizens.

II. Had we known in the beginning what was to be, we should of course have had nothing whatever to do with the Exposition. When we arranged the exhibit, we had the promise of the Commission and the Directors that the law should be respected. And all through the shameful history of the effort for Sunday opening, down to its fitting termination in maundering maudlinism, we hoped, and had reason to hope, that the law would triumph and the gates be closed on the Lord's day.

III. Now that this hope is taken away by judicial anarchy, the question comes: What is our duty? On this subject there is difference of opinion; but a majority of those who have attended the Board meetings felt that the effort of the Directors to close on the Lord's day so changed the situation as to render it proper to continue our exhibit. While we cannot all agree in this judgment, it was that of the major part, and must be our rule until God gives further light. It is hoped by us all that good may result from the presence of our representative there.

IV. Bro. Foster's additional objection to our part in the Religious Parliament does not seem to us well-founded. That is not a worshiping assemblage, but a gathering of the representatives of the religions of the world. Bro. Foster would no doubt consent to speak with a heathen man and show to him the superiority of the Christian faith. If he should do so, of course he would listen civilly to his replies. That is all that the Religious Congress proposes. Of course, weak-backed Christians of uncertain vision may on such occasions say many foolish and injurious things. That, however, results not from the principle of the assemblage, but from human infirmity. Should it be proposed to organize a church of the members of this Congress, we should quite agree with our brother that no Christian should have anything to do with it, but to oppose it as an anti-Christ.

V. Let us not forget that this Fair is rapidly passing, and will soon be nothing more than a memory. The principles for which we contend are eternal. God and Satan seek the mastery of the human race. All lodges are synagogues of Satan, and are, as we believe, training men to serve him here and to share his doom hereafter. In connection with this, they are destroying families, corrupting courts, and unsettling the civil order of all nations in which they exist. It is our high office to withstand and expose these evil institutions, and from this duty we should not allow ourselves to be diverted. We may differ in opinion, as we do, respecting methods, but we are all agreed as to ends, and, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, we should push on the battle until he shall come for us, or we shall go to him.

THE CASE OF DR. GRAVES.

The case of Dr. T. Thatcher Graves is a remarkable addition to criminal literature. April 19, 1891, Mrs. Barnaby of Providence, R. I., who was visiting friends at Denver, Col., died from the effects of poison. April 9 she drank from a bottle of whisky that had come by mail from Boston and which was labeled, "Wish you a happy New Year. Please accept this fine old whisky from your friends in the woods."

The whisky contained a solution of arsenic. Dr. Graves was accused of sending the bottle. After one of the most famous trials in the criminal annals of this country Dr. Graves was convicted of murder in the first degree and was sentenced to be hanged. The Supreme Court granted him a new trial, which was to have begun the latter part of September.

September 5, Dr. Graves, who was in jail at Denver, awaiting his new trial, was found dead in his cell, by an attendant. Suicide was at once suspected. On his person was found the following letter to the coroner:

"Pease do not hold an autopsy on my remains. The cause of death may be rendered as follows: Died from persecution; worn out; exhausted."

No direct evidence of suicide was visible. There were also letters to Mrs. Graves, wife of the doctor, to Jailer Crews, and an address to the public, all dated August 9, 1893.

The letter to the public was published. It is long and mainly a denunciation of the prosecution made against him by District Attorney Stevens and others. He charged all sorts of bribery and corruption and states that his only escape is in self-destruction, as he has already spent a fortune in defending himself for a crime he never committed. In conclusion he says:

"Allow me to repeat that which I have always said publicly and privately: Upon my solemn Masonic oath, I, T. Thatcher Graves, did not have anything to do in any way, shape, manner or deed with the death of Mrs. Barnaby. I write this knowing what the future will soon have in store for me. The people will believe and sympathize with me. They will know that even the strongest man can be beaten down by a cyclone of filth, mud and persecution."

It was also hinted publicly that Dr. Graves ended his own life with some mysterious drug or combination of drugs which could only have been prepared by an expert chemist; and those who believe him guilty of the murder of Mrs. Barnaby are said to be contemplating connecting the poison by which the doctor ended his own troubles with that contained in the mysterious bottle of whisky sent to Mrs. Barnaby. The doctor's widow stoutly opposed an autopsy and inquest, and said that her husband was persecuted to death; that she did not consider it a case of suicide, but a death from a sudden shock connected with heart failure, due to the persecution of the past year.

Such is the story as given by the press. There are those, however, who, taking all the circumstances into consideration, doubt exceedingly that Dr. Graves is dead, but believe that his Masonic friends spirited him out of jail, furnished a "good-enough" substitute for his body in some other man's corpse, and by refusing to hold an autopsy or inquest on the remains, completely hoodwinked the public, while Graves was making his escape. Similar frauds have been perpetrated in other cases where Masons were concerned, and the fraternity is "smart enough" to do many strange things, and completely cover up its tracks.

ROME AND ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

"Catholics and Secret Societies," from the Chicago Times, printed on the third page of this issue of the Cynosure, reveals the present position of the Church of Rome towards the lodge system, as we believe, quite correctly. Our attention is especially attracted to this passage: "Those particularly under the ban of the church are the Freemasons and Odd-fellows, especially the former; but both, even in this city, where Archbishop Feehan presides, number many followers of his creed."

We were favored with a call, last week, from Rev. Mr. Cooney, of Notre Dame, Ind., a pastor of the Church of Rome, who, when asked in regard to this subject, stated that so far as Odd-fellowship is concerned, its members are admitted to the communion of his church. We introduced the fact that the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows had commanded all chaplains of the order to omit the name of Christ in their lodge prayers. To this Mr. Cooney replied that that is a matter existing only between their consciences and God, and no bar to the followship of individual Odd-fellows in the church. As regards Freemasonry, members must either quit the Masonic lodge or the church.

This statement is in exact harmony with the bulls of Popes Clement XII. (1738), Benedict XIV. (1775), Pius VII. (1814), and Pius IX. "According to these bulls," says "Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry" (Article "Bulls," p. 134) "a Freemason is ipso facto excommunicated by continuing his membership in the society, and is thus deprived of all spiritual privileges while living and of the rites of burial when dead." The present Pope has also confirmed the fulminations against the fraternity of his predecessors.

MASONRY AND THE FAMILY.

We learned, incidentally, the case of a young woman, coming from Minneapolis, Minn., in search of her husband, who had preceded her to Chicago, deserting her and carrying off the means of her support. She said he was a member of the Masonic lodge in the former city, and inquired of a lawyer with whom she was in consultation whether the Masons could make him restore what he had taken. The lawyer did not think they could, and told her that the most they could do would be to expel him from the lodge. This would not help her, and she left him, to seek redress and relief elsewhere.

If this young woman's story was true, and we see no reason to doubt it, here was a crime committed by a Master Master, and practically shielded by the lodge and the fraternity.

Surely, Masonry is strong to protect wrongdoers, and very weak in its power to help its victims.

CANDOR.

One of the rarest things, even among good men, is a mind so divested of all selfish bias, and so open to convictions from all sources, as to accept all truth in entire simplicity of spirit, and to give it all the authority it deserves. It is even questionable whether any human mind, save that of our Divine Lord, ever attained to so exalted a state of absolute candor.

This is not only true of individual convictions but is more emphatically true of what is called public opinion. This always varies with the prevailing bias of real or supposed self-interest. The history of reforms in America is full of examples.

From 1776 to 1820 the general trend of public opinion in America was against the system of slavery. It was tolerated, but only as a temporary and abnormal institution, opposed alike to justice and sound policy. This was quite apparent in the passage of the ordinance of 1787, prohibiting slavery in the Northwest Territory. It is remarkable that this ordinance evoked not a word of protest from the slave States, even though a large part of the territory had belonged to Virginia. The testimony of the great religious bodies, at that time, was quite unanimous in opposition to the system. The Presbyterians in 1784 called it "man stealing," and the Methodists "the sum of all villainies."

From the time of the invention of the cotton-gin, which greatly enhanced the profits of slavery, and especially after the admission of Missouri as a slave State, there was a most powerful drift of public sentiment in the opposite direction, so much so that even in the North people who dared to question the rightfulness of slavery were mobbed, and sometimes killed. Even in New England a Christian woman was sent to jail for teaching colored girls to read. The legislature of Connecticut passed a special act to prevent Negro education.

The nation went to war with Mexico in the interest of slavery extension, and for many years not an act was passed in the American Congress that did not meet the approval of the friends of slavery. Slowly there came a reaction in the public mind, which, after thirty years of agitation, brought about the election of Abraham Lincoln; and yet, to all human appearances, the system of slavery would have survived and grown, had not the South precipitated their rebellion.

To-day there is practically no difference of opinion as to the wrongfulness and impolicy of slavery; and yet the facts on which this conclusion is based were as apparent fifty years ago as to-day.

Freemasonry, like slavery, had nothing in its intrinsic character to commend it to the public conscience, and yet so strong had it become, in 1826, that there was scarcely raised a question as to the propriety and wisdom of membership in the order. No one seemed to be aware of the inherent folly and wickedness of the system. But the abduction and murder of William Morgan, together with the publication of his expose, brought about a wide-spread reaction. The leading statesmen and religious teachers of the North were emphatic in its condemnation, and for a few years it was intensely unpopular. The absorption of the public mind in the slavery question, the rise of Odd-fellowship and the Sons of Temperance and other minor orders, paved the way for the coming back of the mother institution, with nearly all of her former arrogance and power; and yet there is no reason for this change. If any new facts have been developed they have been to the greater disparagement of the entire lodge system.

It is, however, a most hopeful fact that there is a growth in Christian candor. Men are more tolerant of the opinions of others than in former ages, whether because they consider them less important or because they are more kindly disposed towards those who hold them.

In the good time coming, when we shall be like our Lord because "we shall see him as he is," we shall see all truth as it is, and no longer be blinded by the false lights of pride and selfishness.

GOOD LIARS.

The question is often asked: "May not a man be a good Christian and be a Freemason? Some further questions need to be asked and answered: Does not every intelligent Mason know that Freemasonry has been published to the world? Is it not expected and required of him that he shall not admit this, but pretend that it has not been truly published, and that its so-called mysteries are a profound secret to all but the initiated? Is not such a pretension virtually a falsehood?

Can a man be a good Christian and a habitual liar? Pres. Chas. G. Finney said that one reason why he renounced Masonry was that a man could not be a Mason without lying!

FUNDS ARE NEEDED.

There is urgent need in our work of liberal donations and the payment of moneys designed for the following purposes:

1. For furnishing anti-secrecy literature to college reading-rooms.

Among the encouraging incidents with which our work abounds, is that told by a student of Yale College, during his call at this office last week. Like most young men who enter our great colleges, he was invited to unite with the Freemasons. Fortunately he had read anti-secrecy books in the library of Andover Theological Seminary, which had been upon its shelves about sixty years, and the seed thus sown by some departed benefactor had the blessed effect of keeping this young man out of the lodge. Who says that ours is not a God-appointed work? Let us sow beside all waters.

2. For the Ministers' Fund for supplying the Cynosure and tracts to ministers of the Gospel who favor our work, but are unable to subscribe for the paper or pay for literature for distribution.

3. For the payment of agents and lecturers in the field, who are devoting their time and talents to our cause.

4. For supplying anti-secrecy literature—tracts, etc.—for distribution at the N. C. A. World's Fair exhibit.

5. For defraying expenses of organizing anti-secrecy State and other conventions and conferences, including room rent, fuel, lights, etc.

Friends, after a little consideration, will observe the great benefits accruing to our work through all these channels; and the knowledge of them should prompt liberal responses from all those who know and feel the immensity and importance of the cause which we have in hand, and which we should endeavor to push with all our energies during the remaining months of the present year and those which are to follow.

The field is widening, is now white for the harvest, and the necessity for help is imperative.

—On the 17th inst. Rev. S. F. Porter, the College agent of the N. C. A., celebrated his eightieth birthday. Notwithstanding his great age, he retains a large share of his former energy, and expects to resume his anti-secrecy work among the colleges, in which we all bid him God-speed.

—T. D. Allen, of Kingston, Ont., writes that some time ago he noticed in the Cynosure a review of "The Wonderful Law," published by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, and adds: "I have read this pamphlet....The work is excellent, and from actual knowledge I can say I know of two men converted from infidelity by reading it." This is a good testimony in favor of a good book.

—Writing of the miserable condition of the Negro, owing to the neglect and persecution to which he is subjected by those who should, long ago, have lifted him out of the slough of sin and ignorance in which he has floundered since the war ended, the Catholic Review suggests that the church of Rome should "lay hold of the Negroes and do for them what Protestantism has failed to do". Slavery before the war was bad enough, and the present condition of the Negro in the South is deplorable; why add to his sufferings by consigning him to the fires of purgatory as well as to those at the stake?

—On the third page of this issue we print the announcement of the International Christian Conference to be held in this city, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance, October 8–15. In addition we would say that the section conferences will constitute a school of instruction in practical and successful methods of Christian work, taught by experts who will not present theories, but speak from their own experience. These sections will comprise evangelistic, reformatory, educational, social, economic and miscellaneous topics, to the number of sixty. Full programs can be obtained at the entrance.

—A Freemason writing to us from Platte Center, Neb., and objecting to the sentiments of the Cynosure, says: "I am praying every day for the uplifting and building of the lodges, and they are 'getting there, Eli;' and I hope they will continue to grow in the future as in the past." This man writes two pages to inform us of his abhorrence of Anti-masonry, but not one argument does he present in favor of his pet fraternity or any other secret society. Masonry never argues: it simply asserts—truly, if in its interest—and falsely, too, for the same reason. In the lexicon of the fraternity, Masonry is everything, and nothing else counts.

—"J. D. S.," writing from Lodi, Wis., to the (United Presbyterian) Christian Instructor, furnishes the following Masonic experience: "In conversation some time since with a member of one local Masonic lodge, in fact, chaplain of the lodge, though not a member of any church, it was almost amusing to hear him tell how little Masonry had ever done for him, while at the same time he stood as its enthusiastic advocate and commended it to the favor of young men. The chaplain himself was advanced in years, and his experience was that of one of the fathers. 'All,' said he, 'that I ever gained by being a Mason was the privilege of a stop-over check from a Masonic railroad conductor, while on a journey, which at a previous stage of the journey the conductor had refused me. This favor saved me about seven dollars.' He then added, that at another time, he had loaned a certain Masonic brother four hundred dollars, partly, at least, because he was a member of 'the craft,' which loan turned out to be a permanent, if not a profitable, investment. According to his own artless account then, his jolly good fellowship in secrecy had, up to date, netted to his gray-haired brother's pocket-book a depletion of three hundred and ninety-three dollars." Experience proves that Masonic "benevolence" costs all that it is worth, and, as in this instance, a good deal more.

posed, and that it was not true that "once a Mason was always a Mason." Just as well say, "Once a sinner, always a sinner." That old gentleman was no more a Mason at heart than I am. He did not have deceit enough about him to make the first principle of a Mason; yet the yoke of bondage was upon him, because of a lack of knowledge.

All the use the lodge has for such men is to point to them as being "good," and yet Masons; and thus they ensnare the well-intending.

I heard Rev. W. E. Barton preach most interesting discourse on the importance of aiding young men wishing a Christian education. He spoke of his own experience in going to Berea College. His struggles with adversity have done much in fitting him for the large field into which God has called him. With God's blessing, great results may be expected from his ministration this winter.

I attended a Christian Endeavor meeting in Warren Avenue Baptist church on Monday evening, and made the acquaintance of several young men who have subscribed for the Cynosure. The pastor of this church, Rev. Robert MacDonald, knew but little of the lodge, but will know more. It was his opinion that there was not a Mason in his church. Rev. O. P. Gifford was the former pastor of this church. His able address against the lodge has been read with interest by many. If God be for us who can be against us?

W. B. STODDARD.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard and Bro. E. T. McIntire recently went to Winchester, New Hampshire, and spoke against the lodge and its evils, with the usual effect of "surprising" or hitting some of the initiated. The local paper gave its views of the meeting as follows. The editor said:

The anti-secret society meetings here last Sunday and Monday were directed against the Masons. Prominent members of the fraternity, however, assert that the speaker, Rev. Mr. Stoddard, was never a member of the order, and wholly misrepresented it.

The following appeared as a communication in the Valley Record:

The readers of your paper will be interested to know of the success of the meetings held here in the town hall Sunday and Monday for the purpose of enlightening the people regarding the evils of secret societies. The people here were taken by surprise. Those who are outside the lodge could scarcely believe that persons of good standing in our community could belong to such an evil organization as the Masonic was shown to be. Statements were made and quotations were given from Masonic standard authority which were convincing and convicting, as was also the testimony of the converted Mason of 21 degrees. We were thankful to find a few honest Masons who said they would not advise young men to join this system of iniquity.

REV. WM. FENTON IN NEBRASKA.

MALMO, Neb., Sept. 18, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I departed from Omaha on Thursday last, in company with Rev. C. G. Widen, vice president of the Nebraska State Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, and pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church at Mead, and spoke in his church in the evening.

The next morning (Friday) I went to Wahoo, where is situated the Luther Academy, from which we have an extended view of the surrounding country, with an open horizon, affording a fine site for an astronomical observatory. Rev. J. Ekholm bade me welcome to speak in his church. It being the evening for the young people's meeting, the lecture was preceded and followed by musical exercises. The Congregational pastor, Rev. Mr. Longley, conducted the opening exercises by reading Scripture and prayer. Professor Hill, president of the Academy, supplemented the lecture with some remarks upon the Eleusinian Mysteries, which are to-day, to the shame of many of the churches and theological seminaries, made the basis of the rituals of secret societies that build their unclean nests in the churches, making the churches a habitation of foul and hateful birds. A follower of Robert G. Ingersoll was in the audience, who, when an opportunity was given for questions, would have it appear that the Bible is no better than Masonry represents it, namely, nothing but a lying fraud. If people want to believe a lie and worship the devil, taking pleasure in the unrighteous lodge-worship, they may do so; but God will give such over to believe a lie, that they may be damned.

On Saturday evening I came to this beautiful village, and was met on the platform by Rev. O. A. Johnson, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, and invited to his home.

On Lord's day morning I made a brief address to the Union Sabbath-school in the public school building, and at half-past 11 delivered an address in the church preparatory to the address of the evening.

This morning I go to Swedeburg, and thence to a few other places in this State.

Yours truly, W. FENTON.

THE HOME.

MY KEEPER.

In the secret of His presence
I am kept from strife of tongues;
His pavilion is around me,
And within are ceaseless songs!
Stormy winds, His words fulfilling,
Beat without, but cannot harm,
For the Master's voice is stilling
Storm and tempest to a calm.

In the secret of His presence
All the darkness disappears;
For a sun that knows no setting
Throws a rainbow on my tears.
So the day grows ever lighter,
Broadening to the perfect noon;
So the way grows ever brighter,
Heaven is coming near and soon.

In the secret of His presence
Nevermore can foes alarm;
In the shadow of the Highest
I can meet them with a psalm;
For the strong pavilion hides me—
Turns their fiery darts aside,
And I know, whate'er betides me,
I shall live because He died!

In the secret of His presence
Is the sweet, unbroken rest;
Pleasures, joys, in glorious fullness,
Making earth like Eden blest;
So my peace grows deep and deeper,
Widening as it nears the sea,
For my Saviour is my keeper,
Keeping mine and keeping me!

EDDIE LEE'S MISSION.

BY MRS. VICTORIA ALEXANDRA STONE.

"The bridge over the Santee will be swept away before to-morrow night," said Ed. Duncan; and he fanned his heated face with his straw hat as he spoke; "that is if the rain continues."

The woman did not reply, and Duncan exclaimed: "It will rain all day and all night; look at the sky;" and indeed the black clouds which covered the heavens looked threatening enough to warrant Duncan's remark. "What will become of the men at the mill? We cannot send them any provisions if the bridge is swept away," said Duncan's wife. "We must get word to them," he replied; "but how? not a man can be spared from the place." "But the letter is written;" Mrs. Duncan said; "yet how are we going to send it?"

There was silence for a moment; then a lad of sixteen rose slowly from a corner of the room, where he had been lying upon his face reading. "I will go," he said. "You?" replied Duncan in amazement—"a lad like you?" "Please, sir," the boy said, "I was there twice last winter and know the way. I am not afraid." "Let him go," said Mrs. Duncan. Mr. Duncan and the woman conferred together for some minutes and the result was the letter was placed in the boy's hands and he was sent upon his errand.

"You understand the situation?" Mr. Duncan said to the boy as he parted with him at the gate; "the rains have continued for more than a week; the Santee river is constantly rising, and the bridge cannot last twenty-four hours longer; and if it is carried away no supplies can reach the men at the mills. Go, my lad, and God grant that you may deliver the message in safety."

Eddie Lee pocketed the letter, buttoned his jacket, and started proudly upon his errand. He was an orphan, and Edward Duncan had taken him from the workhouse two years before. He had had few advantages, but he was a noble-spirited lad; and he looked forward with high aspirations to the manhood that was dawning before him. He understood the responsibility that rested upon him in being entrusted with the letter; and, as he walked bravely along he said: "I guess the men at the mills will be glad to see some one from the settlement; but won't they be surprised to see a boy like me, though? Well, I guess they will cross the Santee bridge before it is swept away," and he hurried along, whistling a merry tune.

He reached the end of the road that wound down the slope, through the woods, and at last he started to climb the hill. The rain had ceased, and the sun was very hot. He panted as he reached the top of the hill, and stopped and fanned his heated face with his straw hat for a few moments.

The "clearing" now stretched before him, a natural plateau, where the trees had been felled that furnished the lumber for the mill. It was many acres in extent, but Eddie knew that the mills lay just below the southern slope. He was tired and hungry, and when he reached the highest point of the plateau he sat down on a log to rest and eat his luncheon. He ate leisurely, thinking, meanwhile. "It must be about two o'clock now," he thought, "and the clouds over yonder look like rain. I must be quick." He brushed the crumbs from his lap and sprang to the ground, and at the same instant he felt a stinging pain in his right arm. He looked down and a wild scream burst from his lips. "It is a rattlesnake," he cried, "and it has bitten me!"

He stood for an instant as if paralyzed, and then started down the slope on a wild run. One thought was uppermost in his mind—the letter. Had he not been entrusted with the letter? And did not Duncan say the Santee bridge would not stand twenty-four hours? Oh, to reach the mills! On he rushed, clambering over logs, stumbling, falling, springing up again! By and by he stopped, breathless, "I cannot go any farther," he said. "I cannot get to the mills. I must lie down!" Farewell to all his ambitious dreams of manhood! Eddie thought of this in a confused way, as he lay there on the southern slope of the clearing.

Suddenly he heard voices, but they sounded far away; or was it the crows whose cawing he heard above his head? He raised his heavy eyelids; yes, there, a few rods away, were two men. His hands tugged wildly at his breast and soon his left hand clutched the precious letter. He struggled to a sitting posture and raised a feeble shout, waving the letter above his head. The men heard and looked wonderingly at the slight form of the lad lying there upon the ground.

"Are you from the mills?" he inquired as they bent over him. "Yes," they replied. "Then take this," he said, and he handed them the letter. He saw them take it; saw that it was in safe hands, and then the heavy lids drooped over the blue eyes again.

It rained all night, and there was no sleep in the settlement; they sat up all night watching the bridge; and as the morning dawned the women shed tears of joy, for the bridge was still there. The whole settlement stood beside the river listening, but no sound was heard but the roar of the waters. At last, however, Duncan's deep bass voice was heard crying, "They are coming!" They listened, and above the roar of the waters could be heard the tramp, tramp, tramp of the men.

Now they have reached the bridge, and they march slowly across it, two abreast, and as they reach the shore they form in two parallel lines, and stand with uncovered heads, while two men march slowly between them bearing a stretcher upon which, covered with a blanket, lies the corpse of poor Eddie Lee.

The bridge stood until noon, when, with a crash and a roar like thunder, the heavy timbers parted and were borne rapidly down the river.

PUTTING ON CHRIST.

No man's example will precisely fit his fellowman; but there is this strange virtue about the character of Christ, that you may all imitate it and yet be none of you mere imitators. He is perfectly natural who is perfectly like Christ. There need be no affectation, no painful restraint, no straining. So wonderfully is Jesus the second Adam of the new-born race that each member of that family may bear a likeness to him and yet exhibit a clear individuality. A man advanced in years and wisdom may put him on, and so may the least instructed and the freshest comer among us. Please remember this: we may not choose examples, but each one is bound to copy the Lord Jesus. You have a special personality; you are such a person that there is not another exactly like you; and you are placed in circumstances so peculiar that no one else is tried exactly as you are—to you, then, this exhortation is sent: "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ." It is absolutely certain that for you, with your personal singularity and peculiar circumstances, there can be nothing better than that you array yourself in this more than royal robe. You, too, who live in ordinary circumstances and are only tried by common temptations, you are to "put on the Lord Jesus Christ," for he will be suitable for you also. "Oh," cries one, "but the Lord Jesus never was exactly where I am!" You say this from want of knowing better, or from want of thought. He had been tempted in all points, like as you are. There are certain relationships which the Lord Jesus could not literally occupy, but then he took their spiritual counterpart. For instance, Jesus could not be a husband after the flesh. Does any one demand how he could be an example for husbands? Hearken! "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it." He is your model in a relationship which naturally he never sustained, but which in every deed he has more than fulfilled. Wherever you may be, you will find that the Lord Jesus has occupied the counterpart of your position, or else the position is sinful and ought to be quitted. In any place, at any hour, in any circumstances, in any matter, you may put on the Lord Jesus Christ and never fear that your array will be unsuitable.—Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon.

THE NEW TESTAMENT WAY.

There are very few of us who are not some time in our lives brought under the shadow of a false accusation. The natural way to meet it is by denial and self-defense. But that is not the New Testament way, nor the most effective way. There is a better, surer, and higher way. It is to give the false accusation a plain, simple, square denial, and then leave the life and the truth to do the rest. It is not my business to take care of my reputation; it is all that I can do to take care of my character. If that is clean and pure and luminous, the light in me will shine on and out, and by and by will pierce the clouds and dispel them. For clouds are temporary, because earthly; but sunshine is eternal, because divine. Anyone can distort my shadow; but no one but myself can distort me; and if I am not distorted my shadow will not long be distorted. But if it is, what matter?

Do not run after accusers. Do not trouble yourself about false accusations. Only be sure to make them false; then leave the falsehood to die. Go on with your life-work; and accept the position in which false accusation, and consequent scandal and reproach, place you, only as a new opportunity to bear witness to the truth and the life by your own manifest and glorious possession of them.—Outlook.

"CERTAINTIES OF RELIGION."

At the "World's Fair Parliament of Religions," Joseph Cook discussed the "Certainties of Religion." He said: "The world expects to hear from us this afternoon no drivel, but something fit to be professed face to face with the crackling artillery of the science of our time. I know I am going hence, and I know I wish to go in peace. Now, I hold that it is a certainty, and a certainty founded on truth absolutely self-evident, that there are three things from which I can never escape—my conscience, my God, and my record of sin in an irreversible past. How am I to be harmonized with that unescapable environment? Here is Lady Macbeth. See how she rubs her hands:

"Out, damned spot! Will these hands ne'er be clean?
All the perfumes of Araby could not sweeten this little hand."

And her husband in a similar mood says:

"This my hand will rather
The multitudinous sea incarnadine,
Making the green one red."

"What religion can wash Lady Macbeth's red right hand? That is a question I propose to the four continents and all the isles of the sea. Unless you can answer that, you have not come here with a serious purpose to a parliament of religions. I turn to Mohammedanism. Can you wash our red right hands? I turn to Confucianism and Buddhism. Can you wash our red right hands? Take the ideas which have produced the Torsos of the early faiths and you will have a universal religion, under some of the names of God, and it will be a harmonious outline with Christianity. There is no peace anywhere in the universe for a soul with bad intentions, and there ought not to be. Ours is a transitional age, and we are told we are all sons of God; and so we are in a natural sense, but not in a moral sense. We are all capable of changing eyes with God, and until we do change eyes with him it is impossible for us to face him in peace. I hold that we not only cannot escape from conscience and God and our records of sin, but that it is a certainty, and a strategic certainty, that, except Christianity, there is no religion under heaven or among men that effectively provides for the peace of the soul by its harmonization with this environment."

"A BOND."

A devoted family of the Society of Friends was deeply afflicted. They had lost their property, and were left almost penniless. The wife was sad indeed, and almost ready to despair; but the dear old man was cheerful. The wife was almost ready to "curse God and die". She was astonished at the coolness with which her husband met his lot; so she asked him one day:—

"Husband, how is it that you bear this trouble so well? It almost crushes me to the earth."

"Why, wife, we are not quite so bad as you imagine. We have one bond left which we can live upon."

"Why, husband, what bond do you mean? I thought all was lost."

"Oh, no! Here is one bond, and I will read it to you. It is in the old family Bible and reads as follows: 'I will never leave thee nor forsake thee.'"

His wife inquired, "Do you call that a bond?"

"Yes," he replied; "it is the word of God, and cannot fail."

Dear reader, the common trials of life may come upon you, and you will need some strong arm to lean upon, some refuge to fly to, some bond which will do to live upon. Now is the time to secure it; now is the time to live so near to God that all will be well in the deepest sorrow.

But I am writing to some who are in trouble already, and they need help now. Then take the Quaker's bond: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." God's promises are always "on demand," and he will be with you in six troubles, and in the seventh he will not forsake you.—Zion's Watchman.

HONEST MOLLY.

In a corner of one of the great markets of Philadelphia a little stall was for many years occupied by an old Scotch woman. She sold only heads of lettuce and herbs, but few as crisp and fresh were to be found in the city. Sometimes the other hucksters urged her to "spread out" into the larger vegetables.

"Na, na!" she would say. "I ken my salats an' my herbs. I dinna ken th' ithers. I suld cheat or be cheated wi' them."

"Herb Molly" never wronged anyone of a penny. Her sense of justice was so fine and so long proved that disputes in the market were brought to her to decide. Customers who stopped once to buy the fresh, crisp leaves from the tidy old body always came again. Something in the withered face which looked out from under the white cap went with them, and drew them to her again. More than one busy housekeeper would go a mile out of her way to buy from Old Molly.

"It is not only that her herbs are fresh and delicious," one said, "but it rests me to speak to her. She is only an ignorant woman, but so true, so friendly! It is the kindest soul in the world that looks out of her eyes."

In the twenty years during which she sat in the same quiet corner she gradually became a power in the market. Noisy people lowered their voices in their bargaining when they spoke to her. Even Big Pete, the butcher and "rough," made her his confidante.

It was to Molly that the women carried their troubles about sick babies and drunken husbands. It was Molly who coaxed Big Pete's boy to give up liquor, and who saved more than one girl in the market who was going astray. She lived alone. These rough folk were the only children she had. She had love enough in her old heart to mother them all.

But the thing which gave her such extraordinary power over them, was that God was so real to her.

"She don't preach," one woman said, "but Jesus is with her all the time. She talks to him. She knows him."

"I don't know nothin' of priests or preachers," Big Pete used to say, "but I believe in Molly's God."

Molly died the other day. There was no notice in any paper to show that a power for good had gone silently out of the world. But her empty corner was swept and closed that day, and over every stall in the market hung a scrap of black. One man whom she had brought back to decency and happiness said:

"A woman may sit as a huckster in this market, and yet be one of the angels of God."

That was her only funeral sermon.—Youth's Companion.

"TO SET THE WORLD REJOICING."

There's never a rose in all the world
But makes some green spray sweeter;
There's never a wind in all the sky
But makes some bird wing fleeter.

There's never a star but brings to heaven
Some silver radiance tender;
And never a rosy cloud but helps
To crown the sunset splendor.

No robin but may thrill some heart
His dawnlight gladness voicing;
God gives us all some small, sweet way
To set the world rejoicing.

TEMPERANCE.

THE SALOON VS. HARD TIMES.

The saloon is one of the most heartless enemies of mankind. Although liquor dealers are ever ready to bear a prominent part in every public gathering, at least whenever their interests are not directly assailed; and although they at times support some benevolent and humane enterprises, nevertheless their ultimate aim is not the welfare of their fellow men, but an increase of their traffic in strong drink. Whenever a liquor dealer leads in any public movement, there is strong ground for suspicion that the liquor traffic will be favored with the lion's share of the profit. They offer a "free lunch," but will take the last penny out of the purse of their victims for strong drink. And the same heartless principle is carried out in all their relations to society. They spread out their nets, and the slaves of King Alcohol are ensnared in flocks.

In our cities the common day-laborers furnish the saloon the largest and most regular patronage. A great many of these poor toilers visit the saloons as regularly as they go their meals. Not a few are so ignorant as to think that their daily potion of beer is as necessary to their health and strength as their daily bread. It is not an uncommon thing to hear the wives of these duped victims of strong drink say that they must supply their tables with beer or their husbands could not endure the hard work that is demanded of them. Their wish is father of the thought. Their appetite for this poisonous beverage has gotten the mastery over them, and perhaps some of these men are satisfied to think that there is nourishment in alcohol. Oh, that they would listen to the voice of some prophet who would gladly proclaim and substantiate the fact to them that men who endure hard labor the best and men who are the most skilled laborers are not those who patronize the saloon. On the contrary, men are in greater demand who abstain from strong drink. Strong drink is a curse to the body and a prey on physical strength.

In the days of their prosperity, when labor is in demand and wages good and their health yet unbroken, these caterers to the flesh live their ideal lives. They eat and drink to their satisfaction, and are not as wise as many a brute in providing for the future. What they do not consume on their immediate living, they squander in a drunken revel immediately after pay day. Their appetite for drink overpowers every desire to lay by anything for a future day when they may be in need and helpless. An evil day comes upon them and they have nothing in reserve to meet it. In sickness they become objects of public charity or are left to suffer for their folly. When out of employment their need drives them mad and they become a peril to society. Plunder and riot and bloodshed are invariably the accompaniments of a financial crisis, simply because so many of the lower classes of society are driven by the ravages of hunger to deeds of violence. In their misfortune they are sure to lay the blame on some imaginary or real being beside themselves; and if they cannot wreak their vengeance on some employer or capitalist they begin to destroy property. The recent riots in this city among foreigners is a practical illustration of the fearful abyss into which these patrons of the saloons plunge themselves.

But when everybody is crying "hard times," the saloons are reaping a rich harvest. When shops shut down and men are not needed on public works, which support so many foreigners, because they are cheap laborers, there is no cessation in the liquor business; rather the contrary—liquor dealers have an increase of patronage. Saloons are decorated when laborers are on a strike or are out of employment, because to them it is a profitable affair. Every other business may suffer during a financial crisis, but the saloon knows no hard times, except when a religious revival sweeps the town. The only remedy for the evils of the liquor traffic is the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Evangelical Messenger.

GOD'S SALVATION.

"My brother and I kept a grocery on Conongo street, Elmira, N. Y. In the back part of the store we kept beer. I became a confirmed drinker. One, two, and finally three drinks I must have before breakfast. In coming down Church street one night after being on a spree for several days, Catholic though I was, I heard a voice say, 'What will the end be?' 'A drunkard's grave! a drunkard's hell!' I became alarmed about myself. I went to our priest and made an engagement for him to meet me at the church next day. I came to the church; he was there inside the altar in full robes. Kneeling there before him at the altar I took a solemn obligation not to drink for two years, and at a great struggle I kept it, crossing the road often to avoid passing a saloon. I was under a double bondage, bound by my vow, bound by the power of appetite—a struggle continually.

"At the expiration of the time of my vow I said to a comrade: 'To-morrow I am a free man.'

"He asked what I meant; then I told him of my vow. The morrow night was spent in a drinking revel.

"The priest who had taken my obligation, a fine young man, became sick and died. At his funeral the aged priest whom he had assisted, officiated. Standing by the open grave he, priest and religious guide of the people, was so under the influence of liquor that he nearly fell into the grave. His condition was so apparent that none of his friends attempted to deny it. They said he was so affected by the death of the young priest that he took some stimulant to help him through the service. But my faith in his religion was gone.

"I said, 'If he is subject to like passions with me and cannot control his appetite, a slave as I am, how is he able to pronounce forgiveness for my sins? He is no better than I am.' My faith in Romanism was broken.

"With a companion I was working in the lumber region of the west branch of the Susquehanna. My companion and I went to care for his brother-in-law, every night lifting him out of bed while his wife made it for the night. His sister asked us to pray with her. By her prayers I was brought under conviction, began to read the Bible, an unknown book before. By God's grace I was converted, the appetite for drink gone. I have often since prayed in bar-rooms and saloons. No bonds any longer; a power, not of Rome, but of God, makes me free. Not restraint now, but freedom. Praise God!

"My mother, a Romanist, after seventeen year's separation would not shake hands with me, a Protestant. But God has raised up fathers and mothers in Israel."

Such was a testimony at Byron camp meeting. Once a despised drunkard, gambler, now he is a respected, acceptable and useful minister of the Gospel. Such is the power of Christ to save.—B. H. R., in Earnest Christian.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. How we cannot obtain salvation.—vs. 19, 20. The human heart, when convicted of sin, if it has no knowledge of a better way, will always try to gain salvation by works. But God says, "by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified," and experience has invariably shown how utterly futile are all such efforts to obtain peace of mind. The law being universally violated, has become not a rule of life but a savor of death. It convicts of sin, but has no power to save from the bitter consequences. In the first part of this epistle Paul shows up the deplorable moral condition of the Gentiles who are "without excuse," having the light of nature, and the law written on their own consciences; yet they willfully darkened the first by their own vain imaginings, and violated the second until "God gave them over to a reprobate mind,"—that is, to hardened, brutalized consciences, which allowed them to go on to the farthest extreme of unnatural indulgence in sin with impunity. Conscience thus became "seared as by a hot iron," so that they, though "knowing the judgment of God"; that is, seeing the evil consequences of such sin in the entailment of death and disease on themselves and others, "not only do the same, but have pleasure"—or "consent"—with them that do them. Turning then to the Jews, the dark picture is not relieved; for they had done even worse, making their religious zeal a cloak for the most atrocious crimes, even to crucifying the Son of God. Resting in the law and making their boast of it, they had broken the law while they thought themselves most rigidly keeping it. Thus the whole world, Jew and Gentile, alike stood in need of a common salvation. The law could show them their guilt and danger but no way out of it.

2 The way of salvation by faith.—vs. 21–23. "But now the righteousness"—or the "love"—"of God is manifested," by saving men without the law;—not by absolving them from obedience to his commandments, but by opening up a new and living way through faith in Christ, by which they are justified; treated as though they had kept the law perfectly. This way of salvation shows itself divine (1) in its universality. It makes no difference between Jew and Gentile; between a Humboldt or the lowest savage. Both must be saved in one way. (2) In its being a panacea for sin in every stage, whether it be the refined selfishness of wealth and culture, or the gross, brutalizing sins of the slums. The experience of every Christian, from Paul and Augustine to Luther and Bunyan, prove that "by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified," for surely they who suffered so much for Christ's sake might be saved by works if anybody could. "For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." The greatest saint must stand on the same level with the greatest sinner, so far as salvation is concerned. The Romish doctrine of supererogatory works of merit cannot be found in the Bible. We are all beggars until Christ makes us rich, naked until he clothes us with his righteousness, captives condemned to death until he gives us freedom and eternal life.

3. How Jesus saves us.—vs. 24–26. "Whom God hath set forth"—or "foreordained" in the eternal counsels of his will—"to be a propitiation," etc. Many commentators construe it "a Mercy Seat," which is especially appropriate if we consider that the Mercy Seat under the old covenant, with its shadowing cherubims, was the place where God's presence was visibly manifested, as it was revealed in the life and person of his Son Jesus Christ, to those born later. "Through faith in his blood"; not by works, "lest," as Paul expresses it in another place, "any man should boast". The human race is by nature inclined to glory in its own achievements. How spiritual pride would be increased if they had indeed anything whereof to glory! if one could say, "My good works saved me," or another, "I bought heaven by long seasons of fasting and bodily austerity." "For the remission"—or "passing over"—"of sins that are past." So we, too, have our Passover, Christ, sacrificed that we might live. If we could live a perfect life for all future time what could we do with the past? We want a salvation that "passes over" our former transgressions and remembers them no more. "That he might be just"—having respect to his own law that "he that sinneth shall die"—and yet "the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus." This was the great problem, how to save a race and yet be just;—and it was solved as only a perfectly holy and loving God could solve it. Having made such an infinite sacrifice for man's salvation, how must he regard the deliberate rejection of his Son's name in the prayers of the lodge? the ignoring of any reference to the atonement, and the substituting of allegiance to the precepts of the order, for a life of obedience and faith in Jesus?

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—At the communion service at the First Church, Toledo, Ohio, Sept. 3, Dr. W. W. Williams made the remarkable statement that this occasion was the fortieth anniversary of his first communion with this church, and that he had not been absent from a single sacrament in all that time. He is now in his seventy-second year, and has preached with vigor and acceptance every Sunday during the two months of the junior pastor's vacation.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—The reports at the recent session of the Japan conference show 3,193 church members, an increase of seventy-nine; 841 probationers, an increase of 160; 5,485 Sunday-school scholars, an increase of 1,298. Bishop Foster made three Japanese presiding elders, to the great joy and satisfaction of the Japanese brethren. They are also pastors of churches.

—The Brooklyn (N. Y.) church society of the M. E. church received last year $32,630, and expended $24,941.90; of the balance on hand, $7,350 has been appropriated. The object of this society is to aid churches and Sunday-schools that are in debt. The last annual report shows there are in Brooklyn forty-two M. E churches with property valued at $2,316,000, on which there is an indebtedness of $446,400. These churches have a membership of 18,667.

—Rev. R. N. Price and Rev. Dr. Reid, one editor of the Holston Methodist, the other editor of the Raleigh Advocate, have accepted chairs in colleges. Dr. Price says his election was in answer to prayer for some employment "to get rations and raiment".

—The Baltimore Methodist says: "Our Methodist editors have settled the silver question, the labor question, the Home Rule question, and the political question of the day generally; but how to conduct a prayer meeting, how to revive the waning spirituality of our churches, and how to reach the masses with the Gospel, are problems as far from solution as ever."

—The conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church "have no doctrinal discussions, and are devoted chiefly to practical work." This is affirmed by the New York Christian Advocate. It is thought to be a reason why in that church there is so little difficulty that results in division.

MISSIONS.

—The anniversary of the American Missionary Association will be celebrated at Elgin, Ill., October 24–26.

—The 300 students in Mr. Moody's Bible Institute in Chicago do practical mission work every night.

—The Japan Mission of the Evangelical Association, which was founded in 1875, when four missionaries began their work in Tokio, has been formed into an annual conference with one presiding elder's district and sixteen pastoral appointments.

—Perhaps the most noted distributor of Bibles in the world was Deacon William Brown, of New Hampshire. He began this work in 1849 and kept it up until his death at the age of 76 years, which occurred this year During that time he gave away no less than 120,000 copies of the Scriptures.

—Floating Christian Endeavorers on the United States steamship Albatross, in Alaskan waters, distributed tracts to the whaling fleet and held prayer meetings on board, which were attended by sailors from all the vessels in port.

—The Congress on Missions, Sept. 28 to Oct. 5, in connection with the series of great World Congresses at Chicago, promises to be one of the very best. Its promoters are representatives of various leading denominations of the church. It will discuss the entire missionary problem of the church, beginning with city missions and broadening then to home and then to foreign missions. All kinds and phases of missionary work will be discussed. Among those who have agreed to give addresses are, Rev. John Paton, Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, Dr. G. F. Pentecost, Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, Rev. Edgerton Young, Pres. George Washburn and Rev. John Fordyce. The Woman's Congress will meet at the same time, in the adjoining hall. Prof. G. Frederick Wright, Bishop Whipple, and Mrs. Alice Freeman Palmer will be among the speakers.

—In Persia there is suffering for the Gospel's sake, and Mirza Ibrahim, after lying for a year in prison because he dared to transfer his allegiance from Mohammed to Christ, has finally died. Though enduring untold suffering and insult, he was steadfast to the last.

—Twelve years ago the natives of the Upper Congo had never seen a steamboat. Now there is a fleet of twenty steamers on the upper river.

—Speaking of mission work in general in India, Dr. Pentecost says: "We are one hundred years behind the opportunity that God has made for us in India. If we should double our missionary force in India to-morrow, we would not be able to gather the ripe fruit that is waiting for us there."

SALVATION ARMY.

—Religious work among the native Maoris in New Zealand is carried on by twenty officers and one hundred and twenty-six soldiers and recruits of the Salvation Army, who are now kindly received, being allowed to "rub noses" with the people.

SUNDAY-SCHOOLS.

—Echoes of the International Sunday-school Convention at St. Louis:

—Dr. Phillips stated that India now has 5,548 Sunday-schools, 10,715 teachers, and 197,754 scholars.

—Rev. Jos. Edwards of London represented the Sunday-school work of Continental Europe, where missions were organized in 1864. Now there are in Europe 25,099 schools, 88,950 teachers, and 1,635,000 scholars, showing a gain since the first world's convention, held four years ago, of 6,000 schools, 19,000 teachers, and 500,000 scholars. But while this gain was so encouraging there were still in those countries 40,000,000 children and young people who were outside of these schools.

—Mr. Towers described the work of the London Sunday-school union, organized in 1803, and now having twenty denominations affiliated with it. While its great work is to help village schools, it also prints a magazine for the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, encourages the organization of Bands of Hope, which now have an enrollment of 1,800,000 children, all pledged to total abstinence, maintains a teachers' home of rest at the seaside, and annually provides country homes for 1,500 children. Equally marvelous is the work of the Foreign Sunday-school Association of Brooklyn, represented by Sir H. C. Woodruff, now doing work in more than a dozen countries in about all parts of the world. A strong plea was made by Dr. W. A. Duncan of New York and others in behalf of the home study department, already having 259 classes and a membership of more than 5,000. It was the general conviction that this was supplying a long-felt need, and that Bible study can and ought to be done outside of the Sunday-school and yet under the Sunday-school's supervision.

UNITED PRESBYTERIANS.

—This question was recently handed to us: "How is the United Presbyterian church now on secret societies?" It is all right on them. It is down on them. It stands over them. It tramples on them. Of course, being above them, occasionally a member with small conscience and not upheld and strengthened by his vows, may slip through our platform into one of them. But our position is far above them; as far as Christianity is above natural religion or paganism.—Midland, Omaha, Neb.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The World's Congress of Missions asks that Sunday, Oct. 1, be observed as "missionary day" in all churches. It is suggested that at least one service be devoted to the consideration of mission work.

—Toronto has decided that she will not permit any street cars to be run in that city on Sunday. The decision was made at the polls, and the advocates of Sunday cars were defeated by the following vote: For Sunday cars, 13,060; against Sunday cars, 14,085.

—It is twenty years since Dr. Mackay of Canada, missionary of the Presbyterian church, began to work in North Formosa. The result is that in that part of the island there is at this day 2,605 baptized Christians. fifty native preachers, two ordained pastors, and many other workers.

—General Booth carries on his missions at comparatively small cost. The officers who work among the Zulus get sixty cents per week of salary, besides cornmeal for breakfast, rice for dinner, with an occasional bucket of molasses thrown in. The latter costs twelve cents at the sugar mill.

—The progress of missionary work in the New Hebrides in Polynesia has been very encouraging. It began with a people warlike and fierce, cannibals of the lowest type. Of the 100,000 natives of the island, 40,000 are now Christians, but 40,000 are still cannibals with an intermediate body not yet free from the old superstitions. In the past thirty years thirteen languages on the islands have been reduced to writing, and the Scriptures translated into them.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

It has been officially decided to close the World's Fair at the previously appointed time, October 31, and preparations are in progress for razing the buildings immediately after the exhibits shall have been removed.

Several buildings were greatly damaged at the World's Fair on Thursday night last, by wind and rain. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

Thieves ransacked the E. A. Mulford residence at Highland Park, carrying away about $2,000 worth of property.

General resumption of work by the sewer contractors promises to give work to a number of the city's unemployed.

Attempt will be made to have E. W. Smith sentenced on the admitted charge of bribing the Cronin jury.

Child labor occupied the attention of the factory inspectors. A. P. Stevens said it is increasing in Illinois.

Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CARE OF THE WARDROBE.

The "one dress and wear it" plan, though in some respects a good one, is not by any means the most truly economical one. For instance, there is no saving in wearing one's street gown during the hours at home. It is better after the visit or shopping expedition, both for comfort and economy, to exchange the toilet that is dusty for a clean robe. It is scarcely possible to come in from an excursion of any kind in dainty order; so in the interest of her personal charms a woman should get rid of her street costume as soon as may be after she arrives at home. The garment should be thoroughly dusted, shaken, pressed and hung upon a hook in the closet. Occasionally touch the soiled spots with benzine and examine the seams for broken stitches. Never wear a woolen gown in the kitchen. It retains odors and smoke, and soon becomes offensive as well as shabby. It is a saving in the end to have fair and inclement weather costumes, straight through. Even a mackintosh is not an adequate protection against the ravages of storms of rain or snow. Have gowns for "occasions," if it can possibly be managed. It will be money in the pocket to do so. It is the same with shoes. It's a pity to wear the fair-weather walking footgear through mud and slush and rain, for a wet shoe never is as nice again. Its shape is injured and it has lost double weight in wearing quality. It is better to keep a trim, serviceable, plain pair of shoes on hand for this kind of "spoiling," reserving the better pairs for kinder weather. Even for fair weather it is by far the best economy to have several pairs of shoes at a time, wearing them alternately. When not in use they should be stuffed with soft paper and carefully covered from the dust. It is needless to say that shoes should be carefully looked to as to loose buttons and torn button-holes. Rain ruins kid gloves. No matter what price you pay for them or how superior the quality, dampness will make them lose shape and break. This theory of saving also applies to a sufficient number of undergarments for various necessities of wear. It is the same, too, with pocket handkerchiefs, fichus and the small accessories of the toilet. As for hats, a small shower will make chaos of the smartest confection from a milliner's, and the sensible woman will provide herself with a soft felt derby or close plain bonnet, on which the elements may work their will without spoiling either her looks or her serenity.—Boston Courier.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wan'ed one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

FARM NOTES.

WINTERING ONIONS.

We select a piece of dry ground, and dig a trench from four to six feet wide, and long enough to hold all that we can put in it, says J. M. Smith, of Green Bay, Wis., in the Ohio Farmer. We put them about six inches deep in the pit. They are put upon the ground, but about two inches of straw over them, and then a few inches of earth on the straw. We wish them to get frozen as soon as possible after they are put into the pit. After we are certain that they are all frozen we haul some manure and cover them, perhaps a foot deeper than at first. There are two reasons for this: One is that if they are allowed to thaw during the winter they will almost certainly rot, and the entire lot be lost. Upon the other hand, if they get frozen too hard they will either rot when they thaw out or else be dead and worthless for sets.

In the spring, after the frost is all out of them, we take them out of the pit and put them back upon the shelves again, as they were during the fall before. There they remain until they are needed to set out. I have tried various plans of preserving onion sets through the winter, but none of them have proved as satisfactory as the above. In fact, we consider it just about perfect.

CUT THE CORN EARLY.

This is the advice given regarding cutting the corn early, by the American Cultivator:

There is liability to frost all through the Northern States this month, and every farmer who has ever had frosted corn knows the importance of getting the start of Jack Frost. When freezing of the stalk occurs before cutting, its juices are oxygenized, as the frost expands the stalk and admits air. This soon results in fermentation, and ultimately in entire worthlessness of the frozen stalk for feeding. Many farmers have wondered why frosted corn would not cure well, though fine weather followed the freezing. It is the disintegration of texture of the stalk, caused by expanding and admitting the air, that does the mischief. There is still another reason why very late-cut corn is difficult to cure. The days rapidly shorten through September; and when the nights are longer than the daylight the frequent storms leave too little sunlight to dry anything well.

HINTS FOR THE DAIRY.

Good butter cannot be made unless strict cleanliness in the cow barn be observed, says a writer in the Prairie Farmer. The main thing is to use plenty of sweet bedding and absorbent material. Good meadow hay is fine for bedding, and dry earth or land plaster excellent for absorbing the urine and bad gases. Cows that are well bedded and stand upon a platform suited to their length will seldom need much cleaning, a slight wiping or brushing of the udder being sufficient.

The dairyman should remember, if he is tempted to sell his milk rather than make butter, that butter takes the least fertility from the farm of any animal product. Thus the New York Agricultural Experiment station is authority for the fact that a ton of cheese takes fertilizing elements from the soil to the value of $20.83, while a ton of butter removes the insignificant value of 48 cents. The price received for the butter is by no means all that should be considered. The farm is constantly improving in fertility and consequent agricultural value.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

Mrs. Rev. W. M. Howie, of 3557 Prairie avenue, is giving rooms, breakfast and evening dinner for $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75 per day, according to rooms occupied. By the week, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00. Parlors and bedrooms are all convenient, and furnished for rest and comfort. The residence is four miles from business center, and three from Fair grounds. The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT
of the Holy Ghost,
BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. With all the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

Love, the Supreme Gift:

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD.

The Perfected Life;

THE GREATEST NEED IN THE WORLD.

Both by Prof. Henry Drummond. Bound in chaste white vellum paper, each 20 cts.

These are not to be judged by the size, unless rubies are counted for the weight thereof. The first has been very largely circulated, the second is now only just published and deserves the same wide reading—both are gems such as are only found at rare intervals. If you have not read them, do so at once, you will be a better man or woman for the reading.

Talks to S. S. Teachers.

After a long and unavoidable delay, the author,

Rev. J. G. Terrill,

is ready to issue the above-named book. This book is the result of twenty years of experience in the practical work of the Sunday-school, the Teachers' Meeting, Conventions, and Lectures to Teachers. The work will be of 200 pages or more, divided into five departments:

I. The Sunday-school Organization and Management.
II. Methods of Work.
III. Studies in Human Nature.
IV. Rules of Interpretation as Applied to the Bible.
V. Illustrative Exercises, for Primary Classes and Children's Meetings.

As to the subject matter, the manner of treatment, and the price of the book, the author has kept in view the wants of the officer and teacher of ordinary talent and attainments.

Its price after February 1, 1891, will be 50 cents per copy.

All orders received before that time will be filled at 40 cents per copy, postpaid.

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 13th page).

Illinois corn is now officially proclaimed out of danger from frost.

St. Louis banks have been notified not to honor Archbishop Kenrick's checks. Rome has been asked to appoint an administrator.

Minnesota farmers have won their fight for a State elevator. Judge Willis refused an injunction to prohibit its construction.

At the meeting in Milwaukee of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows it was resolved to permit the formation of a grand lodge in Sweden.

Boston police are looking for T. R. Richardson, senior member of a leather firm, who swindled banks and other institutions out of $175,000.

Eleven persons were killed and twenty-seven injured in a collision on the Wabash road, near Kingsbury, Ind., on Friday.

Fourteen members of the mob which killed Solomon P. Bradshaw at Kingston, Ill., have been indicted by the grand jury.

E. A. Ott, candidate of the People's party of Iowa for lieutenant governor, is too young to hold the office and has withdrawn.

Armed deputies guard the jail at Niobrara, Neb., in which nine alleged cattle thieves are confined. Lynching is threatened.

A verdict censuring the Illinois Central and its employes was returned by the jury investigating the disaster at Manteno.

Indictments for fraudulent banking have been returned against the officers of the First National Bank of Cedar Falls, Iowa.

Three new cases of yellow fever have developed at Brunswick, Ga. Citizens were under arms, the police force being demoralized.

Catholics and members of the American Protective Association came into collision in Kansas City. Many heads were broken.

At Frederick, Md., Daniel Jones was given 39 lashes on the bare back for wife-beating.

A substantial improvement both in production and in distribution of products is noted by Dun's Weekly Review of Trade.

The closing of Sunday saloons in Denver, accomplished three years ago, still continues, as second offense brings imprisonment. Dean Hart's crusade on Sunday theaters, at the peril of his life, has closed Sunday theaters also.

Sheriff Whitcomb, of Berrien Springs, Mich., has notified the butchers, the bakers and restaurants, candy and cigar stands, drug stores and all the other business places that they must keep closed doors Sundays hereafter.

The verdict of the coroner's jury which investigated the Big Four railroad disaster at Manteno is a sweeping one, but is apparently justified by the evidence. Two of the trainmen are held to answer for unlawful killing, while others, including officials of the Illinois Central, are severely censured for gross negligence.

On Monday morning, early, the northbound train of the Kansas City, St. Joseph & Council Bluffs railroad was raided by six masked robbers. The trainmen resisted, killed two of the highwaymen and captured three others.

Five non-union seamen at San Francisco were blown up with dynamite and killed by union sailors. One of the latter was arrested.

The Presbyterian ministers of San Francisco and Oakland, the Endeavorers and other societies of religion and reform, have taken their stand for Sabbath closing of California's Mid-Winter Fair.

FOREIGN.

Serious damage has been done to property in Northern Portugal by almost incessant rain, which has flooded large districts, washing away the crops, drowning cattle, destroying houses, and it is said causing the loss of a number of lives.

In answer to inquiries in the English House of Commons, it was denied that there was any danger from cholera.

Official advices received at Buenos Ayres announces the repeated bombardment during the last few days of Rio de Janeiro, and private advices just received say that Rio has practically been captured by the insurgents, who are also in possession of the town of Nictheroy, opposite Rio.

Immense loss of life and property has resulted from floods in New Castle, Spain.

There is an epidemic of cholera in the department of Finistere, France. The disease first appeared at Brest.

The Haytian gunboat Alexandre Petou is said to have gone down off Cape Tiburnon with eighty persons on board.

Parliament has adjourned until Nov. 2. In a circular letter Gladstone thanks his supporters for their attendance and aid.

Fragments of woodwork, coats, and other wreckage have floated ashore in the Gulf of Finland, showing that the Russian warship Pousalka, with ten officers and 150 seamen, has foundered, and that all hands are lost.

A deputation from the unemployed of London waited upon the lord mayor at the Mansion House Saturday. The applications for relief are already 10 per cent greater than last winter. Consequently it is urged that a system of national relief for the unemployed should be organized, the statement being made that if the government could vote half a million pounds sterling per year for the Irish, it surely can vote a million or two for the starving people of England.

The anarchists of Vienna lately undertook an active campaign in Vienna. The police learned that secret meetings of anarchists were held in a house on Siebendrunner street, occupied by two cabinetmakers, named respectively Franz Haspel and Stephen Hahnel. The police waited until the house referred to was well filled with anarchists, and then they surrounded it, broke in the doors, and arrested the anarchists, who made a desperate resistance. When the police had handcuffed and marched the anarchists to the nearest police depot, the detective searched the building and found a printing press, piles of paper, a large supply of type, and heaps of anarchist pamphlets ready for distribution.

In Spain, anarchists undertook to murder Gen. Martinez Campos, a distinguished military hero, with dynamite bombs, during a review of government troops. The general was not seriously injured, and the assassin was captured.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla does what no other blood medicine in existence can do. It searches out all the impurities in the system and expels them harmlessly through the proper channels. This is why Ayer's Sarsaparilla is so pre-eminently effective as a remedy for rheumatism.

WHERE TO FIND THE N. C. A. EXHIBIT.

The World's Fair Exhibit of the N. C. A. is in the northwest corner of the gallery of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, easy of access and within short distances of several other religious exhibits of more or less interest. All visitors will be kindly welcomed to the Association booth by Rev. J. P. Stoddard or his assistants.

ATTENTION, IOWA!

The annual convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held on the second Tuesday and Wednesday of November. Where shall we meet? The Executive Committee desire to locate the meeting where the largest measure of good may be accomplished. Invitations are solicited, and they will be carefully considered. Address all communications to T. P. ROBB.

Bishop H. J. Becker (an old soldier)—Patriotic Orders, such as the G. A. R.

Bishop P. F. Stevens—Some Objections to Secret Organizations.

Rev. M. A. Gault—The Political Influence of Secret Societies.

Rev. John G. Fee—Secret Orders.

Addresses are also expected from Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, and others.

This will probably be the most representative gathering held on this subject for years, and all our readers should plan to attend.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CALL FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19–22, commencing on Thursday at 2 P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath.

Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, Pastor A. L. Smith of South Newmarket, Pastor George L. Kibbee, of Manchester, Ezra T. McIntire of Boston, Pastor J. Q. Adams of Gilford Village, and others have been invited to speak. Barnstead Parade is on the Suncook Valley R. R., about 20 miles from Manchester. Reduced railroad rates expected.

We should be glad to have our friends in neighboring States, who desire to see the church delivered from lodge rule, meet with us. The Gospel will be preached in its purity, and the various reforms presented from a Christian standpoint.

We expect the Lord to be with us in mighty power, to bless and save. S. C. KIMBALL,

Secretary N. H. C. A.

Mr. Gladstone addressed the Midlothian Liberal Club at Edinburgh on Wednesday of last week, and severely criticised the course of the House of Lords in Parliament for defeating the Irish Home-Rule bill, and for equally objectionable action in other cases. In the course of his animadversion, he said: "What were their pleas for that reversal? The peers form their opinions for themselves; they are responsible to nobody, and if it proves wrong they will be neither abused nor made to suffer in any way." Continuing, the premier characterized the action of the lords as nothing less than high treason and warned them that the people would some day make them bitterly lament their high-handed dealings. As peerages are forfeited by attainder for high treason, and the title cannot be subsequently restored except by act of parliament, it is possible that the House of Lords may be put upon trial for this important crime, and permanently dissolved. Mr. Gladstone seemed to be in a mood to proceed to this extremity.

President Cleveland recently addressed a letter to Governor Northen, of Georgia, explaining his position in the present discussion of financial affairs. Among other things he states that he would not knowingly be implicated in a condition that would justly make him, in the least degree, answerable to any laborer or farmer in the United States for a shrinkage in the purchasing power of the dollar he has received for a full dollar's worth of work or for a dollar's worth of the product of his toil. He expresses a wish for a currency that is stable and safe in the hands of the people, and believes the proper place for silver can only be fixed by readjustment of currency legislation and the inauguration of a consistent and comprehensive financial scheme. His views concerning his opposition to free coinage of silver are again expressed and he berates the Senate opposition for not relieving the present unfortunate situation. The letter of the President was in answer to one from Governor Northen, in which it was alleged that defections in the Democratic ranks of that State were owing to the neglect of the Democratic majority in Congress to meet needed legislation.

When Mayor Gilroy, of New York City, the other day, on the occasion of some political holiday in Italy, was asked to allow the Italian ensign to be hoisted on the flag-staff of the City Hall, he very properly refused. As it was an anti-Catholic anniversary he is accused of pandering to Catholic influence; but he meets this charge with the statement that so long as he holds his present office no flag of any monarchy can float above the City Hall. A decent respect for our civil liberty—our political and religious freedom—demands that no other flag should be paramount to our own stars and stripes, or occupy their honored place on any occasion.

AN OCTOBER DAY.

BY THE EDITOR.

I strolled from town to country. All that day
The sun's mild splendor shone upon my way;
A soothing quiet marked the passing hours;
The south wind lightly gamboled with the flowers;
The dahlia's blossoms mocked the faded rose
With colors of the dolphin's dying throes;
The sparrow twittered from the cottage eaves;
The grass was dotted with the falling leaves;
The farmer gathered home his later crops—
The ripened buckwheat and the fragrant hops;
The cattle loitered in the woodland shade,
Or idly by the rippling brooklet strayed;
The light-winged gossamer flew idly by (Fair weather's signal, if it floats on high);
And as the shadows lengthened, Katydid
Most musically Katy's mischief chid;
The little children, trooping home from school,
Released from tiresome books and learned rule,
For hazel-nuts among the bushes sought,
In merry mood, devoid of care or thought.
Low sank the sun adown the gorgeous west,
The while the robin's vesper thrilled his breast;
And then the autumn haze with twilight blends,
As comes the restful night—and so day ends.

FREEMASONRY.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

It is too late for Christian men to attempt to justify their relation to the lodge. The light shines to-day, and in order to walk in darkness they must shut their eyes.

Masonic lodges are corporate bodies. An act, done by them as an institution, brings individual members under responsibility for the same.

If Freemasonry teaches and practices murder of those who reveal its secrets, then all Christians who remain in the lodge are murderers in the eyes of the law. Freemasonry murdered Captain Wm. Morgan. Each member remaining in the order was responsible for it.

The Christian (?) Mason swears under no less penalty. (1.) Than that of "having my throat cut across from ear to ear, my tongue torn out by the roots, and that buried in the rough sands of the sea." (2.) "Than that of having my left breast torn open, my heart taken from thence and given as prey to the beasts of the field and fowls of the air." (3.) "Than that of having my body severed in two, my bowels taken out and burnt to ashes, and the ashes scattered to the four winds of heaven." If a man can, with open eyes, embrace these blood-curdling oaths, and maintain his Christian character and experience, is there anything he could do to mar that experience and character?

Freemasonry rejects Jesus Christ; therefore, as members, each one is guilty of rejecting him. This is too plain to need argument. Yet men desire us to take them to our bosom and recognize them as true Christians, when, in reality, they are Christ-rejectors.

The only consistent position to take is to exclude them from Christian fellowship, until they repent, and acknowledge Jesus in all their ways.

No man can become a Freemason until he first violates the direct command of Jesus, "I say unto you, swear not at all." No man can remain a Mason and follow the injunction, "Be ye holy." I am fully persuaded that no Christian man would want to go from the lodge-room to the judgment-seat of Christ—or exchange the white apron for a shroud.

Then why live as we would not wish to die?

Can it be possible that Christian men are blind to the power that Masonry is wielding against the church of Christ? It is the greatest parasite on the church that we have to-day. Its manifest object is to stab the church, and her inspired patriarchs and prophets, clip the wings of the Apocalyptic angel, and thus balk the Gospel ship speeding on the errands of mercy and salvation to dying men, and in its stead set up a system of salvation by the square and compass. Freemasons have balls and suppers at their gatherings. Christian men are responsible for these. They may excuse themselves that they do not stay to the ball, but their money stays, and that makes them party to the affair.

Freemasonry and Christianity are incompatible.

THE CHRISTIAN RACE.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The Scriptures teach us that it is an exceedingly difficult thing to obtain eternal life. The way is narrow and the gate strait, and few there be that find it. The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence and the violent take it by force. The righteous scarcely are saved. Our life is a work. We must work out our own salvation. We are servants, and our Master will come and reckon with us. If we idle away our time the work will not be done and we lose the reward. Our life is a battle and we are soldiers. If we neglect to watch or refuse to fight, our foes, numerous and powerful, will overcome us. Our life is a race. If we loiter by the way, or do not put forth our energies in effort and exertion, the race is lost. "Let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race set before us."

I. In the race of life we must set aside our besetting sins. Runners in the Grecian games wore sandals weighted with lead or iron and carried weights on their person, so that on the day of the race, when these things were laid aside, the sense of lightness and freedom would facilitate their agility and speed. Besetting sins are the weights that Christians must lay aside. In Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Christian had a great bundle on his back when he left the City of Destruction. It grieved him and hindered him in his journey; and it was not until he came up the hill to the cross that it fell off and rolled into the empty tomb of Christ and was never again seen by him. We must part with our sins or fail. You remember President Finney's method. An anxious inquirer could not find peace. "We will kneel down and pray and you say Amen to the petitions." So he began: "O God, this man promises to give you his heart." "Amen," said the man. "He promises to give you his pocketbook." "Amen," again. "He promises to give you his business." This time no response. Finney looked up and asked, "Why do you not say Amen?" "Because I am engaged in the liquor business and I do not think the Lord would have it." "Well, you must either give up that business or else be lost. There is no compromise."

It might be added that the lodge is just as much a work of the devil as the saloon. If one must be given up so must the other. When the Scotch Privy Council voted to give two-thirds of the ecclesiastical revenue to the ejected popish clergy, and to divide the other third between them and the Protestant ministry, he said: "I see two parts freely given to the devil, and the third is divided between God and the devil." The hoodwinked members of the lodge are doing that all the time. And it is time to demand that they part company with the lodge or the church. They cannot serve two masters. A man had contraband goods on his ship. As he neared land he became alarmed. His conscience smote him and he could not rest. He feared the custom-house officer. He knew he would be detected and arrested. In his distress he took all those goods and threw them overboard. Then he entered the harbor with confidence and peace. Sins are the contraband goods. We must part with them or be rejected. "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but who so confesseth and forsaketh them shall find mercy."

II. In the race we must practice self-denial. "Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things." Corbett, the "world's champion" in the ring, is a strictly temperate man. He drinks no intoxicants. In his rest, sleep, diet and exercise he has an eye to what will build up his physical strength. John L. Sullivan was defeated because he was a glutton and drunkard. There is an annual regatta between the Yale and Harvard clubs. The young men are in training for it all the year. Enforced self-denial is the first requisite. "Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible." "I keep my body under and bring it into subjection." "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." A woman in Scotland teaches school on a salary of $1,000 per year. She lives on $500, and with the other $500 supports a missionary in Ceylon. That is denying self. Three sisters in Scotland concluded that it was not right for all to stay at home. So one went to India as a missionary and the other two support her. That is self-denial. A man who had purchased many degrees in Masonry and had invested thousands in the lodge-insurance policies, came out for Christ's sake and forfeited all his money-interests in it. That is self-denial.

III. In the race we must continue to the end. The runner may do well in the first part of the race, and then grow discouraged and fall back. He will as certainly fail as if he had not started. It is the last part that counts. The winner goes to the finish. "Ye did run well; who hath hindered you?" "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." "He that continueth unto the end, the same shall be saved." "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

IV. In the race we must have fixedness of purpose and aim. The man who diffuses his energies on many objects is a failure. The man who concentrates his efforts upon one object is a success. Paul says: "This one thing I do: forgetting the things that are behind and reaching forth to those things that are before, I press forward toward the mark of the prize of the high calling which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." A runner must not allow any object to turn him aside, no matter how important or attractive. His thoughts and energies must all be bent on reaching the goal. "So run that ye may obtain." The believer has two questions to ask: 1. Is it right? The theatre, ball-room, card table, social drinking, the lodge, the Sunday paper are all abjured because wrong in themselves and of course will hinder him in the race. 2. Will the allowable help me in any particular case? He discards that which is his right when it does not help him forward. "It remaineth that they that have wives be as though they had none: and they that buy as though they possessed not; and they that use this world as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away."

TWO MARCHES ON INDIA.

Reinforcements now appearing—India's "Satan houses" getting angry—Do you expect Satan to cast out Satan?—Large order for N. C. A. literature—An anti secrecy evangelist—Our Canadian brother M. Moss—More men wanted.

Editor Cynosure:—With this letter I send an order for over $130 worth of the N. C. A. literature. This is the largest order I ever sent you, and it is a good omen. God wants us to push on in this crusade against modern lodge-heathenism. It is especially hateful to see this European paganism come here to Asia to help its mother heathenism destroy souls. The Lord has sent us an excellent brother as colporteur-evangelist, Malcolm Moss. He is from Canada, through the Firebrand office of Shenandoah, Iowa. While I was in America he read one of my little "Oriental Evangelists" and was led to offer for India. He is now going about with our books and the Lord is blessing his testimony.

In about fifteen large stations and as many more smaller ones in India Bro. Moss has gone from house to house during this "hot season" here. That means more work and sweat than some of your harvest hands do. Bro. M. is not at all bashful about offering your books on secret societies. He has claimed the "perfect love which casteth out fear." Hence he is bold in the Lord to preach in the midst of contention. Here are some of his experiences as given in the India Watchman:

"A student took some books on Freemasonry, and when I went for payment, he took me into the room of an older man who set upon me with strong and abusive language for selling these books. The presence of Satan was quite manifest, and I saw the murderous disposition of Masonry. The young man said I had come to the wrong place with these books. I told him these evils need to be exposed. He said that some one would be on my track when I left the station. 'You are willing to go niche, I suppose,' [i. e., buried.] I answered that I keep ready for eternity. We are in a work in which we shall have the privilege of not counting our lives dear unto ourselves."

At the next station, Bro. Moss called upon a leading government officer who told him frankly that he was both a Roman Catholic and a Freemason. He inquired kindly after Bro. M.'s work, gave him eleven rupees and a "God bless you" as he left.

His account in the September Watchman gives a hint of some of the hard points of this aggressive evangelism. "Serai" is the small-roomed native travelers' rest house. "Dak Bungalow" is a house prepared by the government for the temporary accommodation of European travelers:

"At B—— I slept two nights on the floor, in the verandah of the railway station; through the kindness of the native clerks, I tried the 'Serai,' but found too many insects for comfort. Dr. L—— kindly gave me Rs. 3 to stop at the 'Dak Bungalow;' but the press manager invited me to stay at his home over Sunday.

"Had a good talk with a civil service officer upon Freemasonry. He went home and prayed over it, and on Sunday he told me that the Lord had showed him that he must give it up. Yesterday the Lord gave me the privilege of leading another young man into Christ's kingdom. It was after the meeting in the church, where we knelt together. This is blessed work!

"After meeting last night, a sister who used to be a Watchman subscriber, wished to have a talk with me on the crucifixion of self. I believe that God made it a blessing to her. Her daughter came and listened, and also the officer who is giving up secret societies. My soul was blessed in speaking with them. After that, a young man who was in doubt came to me. We prayed together, and he received the witness that he was born again.

"At M—— a brother who proved to be a backslider invited me to stay with him. Had a very serious talk with him, which the Lord blessed to his soul. He gave himself to the Lord again, but did not get satisfied. It must be that his tobacco and Freemasonry obstruct the way. We gave him some plain things from God's Word on these subjects, and he prayed that God would give him light. [Is not the surest way of getting 'more light' to 'walk in the light' that God has already given him?"—Ed. Watchman.

Here is a most important point: Can we expect missionaries who are largely under the power of lodgery to "cast out" these same demons in India? Can churches which are saturated with secretism and many other forms of worldliness do all that God wants in spreading his blessed Gospel in poor old priest-ridden India? Do you not see how absurd it is to say that lodge-ridden churches should be left to do all the foreign mission work, while "reform churches" should keep all their workers in the home lands? Bless God, a few of the "radicals" are out in Asia following the tracks of radical Paul, and we'll fight it out on this line if it takes all our lives. Amen!

The "two marches" are (1) the march of N. C. A. literature—as we send it around India; and (2) the march of living testimony against lodgery, as Bro. Moss and others are now lifting up their voices, pens and prayers against these evil systems.

Your readers will be glad to know that the support of a colporteur for three years was raised through friends of the N. C. A. One man alone gave two years' support, and he a poor man living in a leaky log cabin. The other year was given mostly by Sunday-school children. Lord bless the dear young people! I hope some of them may yet come and work for Jesus in India.

Bro. Moss says this is a blessed work; going about from place to place with Gospel books and his personal testimony. "Yes, friends; it is indeed a blessed work. We do sincerely believe that a humble, holy man, going from house to house with a heart overflowing with love, and a box filled with full salvation books, may do far more real work for Jesus and souls than some of our loudly heralded and applauded preachers, whose great ability is mixed with worldly compromise or subtle errors.

But the great wonder is, that such a noble—such a Christ-like work as this, should so suffer for want of good workers.

We want eight more good men at once.

Again I ask the Cynosure readers to pray earnestly that God would send forth more workers to this very needy part of his great harvest-field.

MR. MOODY'S EVANGELISTIC WORK.

About twenty-one weeks have elapsed since Mr. Moody began his great evangelistic campaign in Chicago, and they have been weeks of abundant labors and prayers, as well as glorious successes. At the close of the twentieth Sunday, Mr. Moody said:

"This was the best Sunday I ever had in Chicago. It was a day of power and blessing. There was more melting power in all my meetings—the people just melted down before the Lord. As the reports of the day's work came in from the evangelists, one by one, it soon appeared that the day was the most successful one of the entire campaign—a day of power, a day of conviction, a day of decision for Christ. There were sixty-four different meetings held in forty-six places during the day, with a carefully estimated aggregate of from 62,000 to 64,000 people in attendance. Theaters, churches, and tents overflowed as usual, and the day marked a distinct advance along the whole line of the evangelistic forces."

The mid-day meetings in Central Music Hall are a daily joy and a daily triumph. No more powerful, impressive and effective meetings have been held during the entire campaign than those in the Music Hall. Every day the speakers seem to have given them just the word for the hour, as no program or pre-arrangement could possibly bring it to pass. One of the meetings, which seemed specially marked by its spiritual warmth and moving, melting power, was that of Saturday. Mr. Moody was the first speaker. His heart was almost too full for utterance. The burden of souls was heavy upon him. The despairing cry of Chicago's perishing thousands was in his ears. He spoke with a passionate yearning for the salvation of the lost, and an almost uncontrollable emotion that bowed all hearts into tearful sympathy with the warning utterances of the speaker. He began by reading, from the book of Daniel, the words: "They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." After picturing, with a few graphic touches, the godly old statesman to whom the angel spoke the quoted words, and pointing to the exceeding rewards of service in soul-saving, the speaker said:

"I have taken this theme to-day to encourage us to take hold of the great work that lies at our hands in this city, in these wonderful days. I thank God that I am living in this day and in Chicago. The opportunity of a life-time is before us to do a work for God that shall make all heaven to sing for joy.

"Let us not spend time splitting hairs in theology and wrangling about creeds. Let us go to work and save lost souls. Our Gospel is the only hope of the drunkard, the gambler, the harlot, the outcast, the despairing, the lost, on the streets of Chicago. Oh, let us go and save them! Let us stretch out our hands and keep them from rushing into the pit! All over the city are souls just hungry to hear the Gospel of hope, just waiting for a loving Christian heart to lay hold on them. Mr. Varley tells us that during the week about five hundred men have been blessed in the Standard Theatre meetings. Oh! I'd rather save one soul from death than have a monument of solid gold reaching from my grave to the heavens! I tell you, the monument I want after I am dead and gone is a monument with two legs going about the world—a saved sinner telling of the salvation of Jesus Christ.

"I don't know that I have ever seen a time in Chicago, for over thirty years, when men seemed as ready to be talked to about their souls. Talk to them. Tell them of Jesus, who can save them from their sins and wretchedness. Tell them, on the streets, in the cars, in their homes, in the meetings. Speak a word of hope, and help, and life, to those poor hungry hearts. I believe more can be done in this city during the next six weeks than at any time before, if we all go to work and keep at it. It is our harvest time. It is the day of the Lord. It is the accepted time."

In addition to the nine churches and the five large tabernacle tents now occupied by the evangelistic forces, there are about a dozen other very important centers of operation—the Central Music Hall, in the business part of the city, where daily meetings are held from 11 to 1 o'clock, addressed by Mr. Moody, Rev. John McNeill and others; the Haymarket, the Standard, the Columbia, and Hooley's theatres; the Columbian Sunday-school building, the Hotel Epworth Tabernacle, the Hotel Endeavor Tabernacle, Holmes' Hall and the Bible Institute. The work in the theatres, halls and tents has been especially blessed in its hold on the masses of non-church-goers. Many a poor castaway has been brought to the refuge and peace of God in those places.

THE "PATRIOTIC ORDERS."

The following declarations of the so called "Patriotic orders" are taken from the Columbus (Ohio) Record, the organ of the A. P. A. and other secret political organizations.

We notice that while they claim to be non-partisan societies, they are extremely partisan in their principles:

PATRIOTIC SONS OF AMERICA.—OBJECTS OF THE ORDER.

The Patriotic Order of the Sons of America has for its objects the inculcation of pure American principles and reverence for American institutions; the cultivation of fraternal affection among American freemen; the opposition of foreign interference with state interests in the United States of America, and to any form of organized disregard of American laws and customs; the preservation of the Constitution of the United States and the advancement of our free public school system. Its immediate benefits are home benevolence, the care of its sick, the burial of its dead, the protection of and assistance to all connected with it who may be in need. We have no partisan political claims, obligations or intentions.

Our constitution is plain and easily understood, contradicting none, but sustaining all the constitutional laws of our country.

We invite a careful scrutiny of our work and are willing to stand by the result. The man who cannot endorse our order after due examination must be indeed unworthy of a home beneath the folds of our starry banner. The order is often styled a partisan political one, but this is a great mistake. There is a wide difference between a patriotic and a partisan spirit. Anyone who enrolls under our banner with the idea that it will help him into selfish political objects, will find that he has made a great mistake. Our membership includes men of all political beliefs, and each is free to exercise his privileges according to the dictate of his conscience only. The discussion of partisan politics in the order is prohibited by the constitution.

Efforts have been made to drag the P. O. S. of A. into entanglements with various political parties and societies, but have not been successful. We have no quarrel with any man on account of nationality or religion, but we wish to accord equal justice to all honest American citizens. We ask that Americans be allowed fair play on their own native soil, and we seek, by educating public sentiment, to advance the idea of "Americans for America," rather than to insist upon "America for Americans."

The following was adopted at the first organization as the

PREAMBLE OF THE ORDER.

WHEREAS, The experience of all ages and all countries distinctly showeth that popular liberty—born amid the din of battle, baptized in patriotic blood and rocked by the rude storms of civil strife—demands for its preservation against the rage of party spirit, the wiles of ambition and the stern arm of power, the undivided love of all its votaries and the firm determination of all its friends, in an eternal struggle with all its foes; and

WHEREAS, The history of the world most plainly proves that it is the business of one generation to sow the seed of which another reaps the harvest, be it of grain or tares, or of evil or good;

Now, therefore, We, the undersigned Sons of America, children of its soil, reared beneath the shadow of its flag, loving it as none other can love, knowing it as none other can know, and having an interest in its future welfare nearer, truer, deeper than all mankind beside, do hereby associate ourselves into an order for the purpose of maturing ourselves in the knowledge and encouraging each other in the practice of our rights and duties as citizens of a country in which we are called to exercise among our fellow-men the common rights of sovereignty; in which act of association we severally pledge ourselves to the observance and support of the laws of the land and regulations of this body as becomes the sons of freemen willing to submit to the restraints of social order, and acknowledging no other bonds but those of duty to our God, our country and ourselves.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR MEMBERSHIP.

No person shall be entitled to membership in this ord r except he be of good moral character; 16 years of age; a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being; born on the soil or within the jurisdiction of the United States; in favor of free education; opposed to any union of church and state, and to the interference of any foreign power, directly or indirectly, in the affairs of this government.

We are proscriptive, not for proscription's sake, but to preserve harmony in our ranks and to preserve the character of our order as instituted by its wise and thoughtful originators.

Believing that the American-born naturally feel most attached to their native land, we therefore consider that, while working hand-in-hand with that class of foreigners who believe in free education and the free principles of our government, we do not conceive their admission to our order either necessary or advisable; particularly as there are other kindred organizations in which they can do good in their own way.

HARD ON THE PREACHERS.

Van Bennett in the course of a lecture on temperance said: "Tell me how a preacher can walk in the light to the ballot-box with an old party whisky ticket in his hand? 'He that walketh in the darkness, knoweth not whither he goeth.' I take this view of it, to be charitable to the doctors of divinity, bishops and clergy who vote the Democratic and Republican tickets, they do not know what they are doing, they are walking in darkness. But if you say they do know what they are doing, if they admit they know what they are doing, then I reply they are dastardly hypocrites, and are worse in the sight of God than the saloon-keepers they authorize and protect by their ballots."—Selected.

—An old correspondent writes that after the pastor of the M. E. church in his town had told him and others that he had "left the lodge and had nothing more to do with it," he held a special meeting for Knights Templar in his church, in parade dress, and preached to them. From church they adjourned to a hotel and had a Sabbath banquet. "Once a Mason, always a Mason."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Romanism in New England.—Abandoned farms.—The dime novel.—Scrap books.—A defect in public education.—The Annual Friend.—Are clairvoyants fortune-tellers?

"To win the fight in New England is to win it all over America." This is what Rome says in a leading English paper; and she is about right. And this is just as true of anti-Romanism, anti-secrecy, and the whole list of moral reforms. Every victory Rome gains in this land of the Puritans is worth far more to her than a corresponding one in any other section; and she knows it.

It is said that the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture is kept busy answering the many inquiries regarding her abandoned farms which come from parties, some of whom are farmers in outside States; others, "gentlemen in easy circumstances, who would yield the bustle of the city for the quiet of country life." The trials of a denizen of the city who attempts to become a tiller of the soil without any previous knowledge thereof are not to be numbered; too much sun or too little; drouth that consumes by day and the frost by night; the "yellows" on his peaches and the curculio on his plums and cherries; armies of bugs that lie in wait to devour, and worms in all stages of creeping, crawling ugliness, that descend in solid phalanxes on every green thing that his soul holds especially dear! who is equal to the sum of them? This is the original curse, which can only be taken off by perseverance, willingness to toil early and late, and a patient study of farming as a science through the medium of the best agricultural journals. It would certainly be of incalculable benefit to New England if her farming districts could once more pass into the hands of native citizens of intelligence and refinement instead of illiterate foreigners. Farming combines with literature much better than business. Some of our best-known literary men have been highly successful as farmers and horticulturists. And why not? Literature has a natural affinity for the soil. It always had, from the days of Virgil down to Burns. Many of these abandoned farms can be purchased so absurdly low that one can only marvel why New Englanders at least should join in the insane rush for every newly-opened strip of government land, when they might do so much better at home. The advantages of a New England birthright, and a New England education for their children, should not be lightly given up for the chimerical chance of winning a prize in these land lotteries.

Ten million dime novels are turned out annually—so it is computed—to corrupt our American youth. Indian stories are not in vogue as formerly—the Indian-fighter and desperado of the plains must take a back seat; but as the new fad is for detective stories, involving the most sensational details of crime, there can be little advantage in the change, from a moral point of view. The law deals with the man who sells our children poisoned candy. It is time that it dealt as vigorously with the man who sells them poisoned literature, as well as the agents who distribute it in our backyards to give us the trouble of picking up and destroying the vile sheets. The question has been often asked—to touch on another and pleasanter side of literature—if shut up in prison and allowed but one book besides the Bible, what we should choose. The answers have covered a wide range. Many have selected Shakespeare. Madame de Stael chose Bacon, because in her view he was the most suggestive of all uninspired writers. For my part I should make choice of neither. Give me, instead, a large, well-filled scrap book, full of the gleanings of years, exuding honey from every page, the gathered treasures of every land and time—and self-compiled. That is a very important addition, for no one can compile a scrap-book for you, gentle reader, any more than they can eat your dinner vicariously. A scrap-book must grow up with you, and become a part of yourself, so that whatever page you turn to, your eye will light on something that at one time or another has met your soul's needs—thoughts of the wise and good that have helped, comforted, inspired—not others, but you, your own individual self; poetry that you like, no matter whether or not it has ever taken its place among the gems of literature—and then it will be, as I said, so much a part of your inner life as to be only second to the Bible in your affections.

The chairman of the school board in one of Massachusetts' country towns says of a pile of applications which he has received: "Few of them are correct in grammar, spelling or use of capital letters." The editor of a leading educational journal bears the same testimony. Even our colleges complain that the students enter them poorly equipped in the fundamental part of a good education. The reason probably is that reading used to be taught formerly as one of the important things that young people were sent to school to learn. Now it has been generally given up in our public schools, and, in consequence, we have teachers who are college graduates yet cannot teach reading, and ministers in our pulpits who obscure the beauty of the finest hymn or the sweetest passage of Scripture by their execrable delivery.

The case against Asa Potter, of the Maverick Bank, is disposed of and he is free—unless an accusing conscience makes a prison for him, from which no prevarication of law can release him. I do not know, but the natural supposition is that he is a Mason. One has to guess at the fact generally in regard to defaulters and embezzlers, as Masonry, though willing enough to help them secretly, as required by its oath, is not anxious to openly claim them as members before a public which might draw its own conclusions.

It has been decided that the directors of the misnamed "Annual Friend," of Lowell, must pay back a large proportion of what they have filched from the certificate-holders, but, with the cleverness of accomplished rascals, as they are, they have managed to pass it over into other hands where the officials of the law cannot find it. One of the men, in 1890, paid only a poll-tax. The next year he was taxed for $15,000 worth of real estate. Another who, before he became director, worked in a machine shop for $1.60 a day, received, when he assumed his new office, a salary of about $15 a day—all at the expense of the poor certificate-holders, so sadly gulled by this "friendly" order.

Connecticut has a law, passed in 1875, providing that common drunkards, vagrants generally, and fortune-tellers be committed to the workhouse and sentenced to hard labor for sixty days. The Society for the Prevention of Crime has notified the clairvoyants of New Haven that they are liable to be prosecuted and sentenced to hard labor under this statute. This has greatly alarmed them, and they are now waiting for a test case before they can know whether the law classes them as "fortune-tellers." They are certainly nothing else; but at the worst they may congratulate themselves that their lot was not cast in the Bay State two centuries ago, when a much worse fate than sixty days of hard labor would have probably awaited them.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 27, 1893.

The nineteenth annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia was held yesterday, and the address delivered by the president, Mrs. La Fetra, has been much talked about among those who seldom pay any attention to what is done or said by the members of this excellent organization. The reason is obvious, as may be seen from the portion of the address which follows: "Closely allied to the drink habit, and inseparably connected with it, is the great blight of impurity, which rests like a vast shadow upon our nation, and alas! too densely it hovers over our national capital as well. It lurks in dark places, hiding its hideous form behind official positions, behind wealth, behind business interests, behind that false modesty which can bear the knowledge of the existence of an evil, but cannot bear mention of it in polite society, in the domain of religion or morals, nor in any place where knowledge of its existence would enforce its extermination. The religion of Jesus is first pure, then peaceable, and the brave and loyal Christians should not be peaceable nor speechless in the face of sin or impurity. Our city, our nation needs pure men, and it is our pride, our glory, that we have many such. . . . . Some protest, reaching unto heaven, must be made against all impurity, and I believe the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, with its 200,000 motherly-hearted women, living in every State and Territory, yea, in every Congressional district, as well, should make that protest now. Oh, women of the Southland! let us clasp hands with the women of the North and West and East across the awful chasm made by womanhood betrayed, seduced, dishonored! Let us appeal to our white-ribboners throughout the nation to consider well the home-life of candidates for national honors, and, if possible, prevent the nomination of any man, of whatsoever political party, who has not a pure home record, and whose integrity does not justify the belief that he will treat all womanhood with respect. Where well-grounded doubt exists, it is an insult to the home, the United States Congress, and to the beautiful and pure in our American manhood as well, for such men to ask positions of trust and responsibility; for ours is, after all, the purest and truest manhood under the sun—the best and tenderest fatherhood."

President Cleveland has abolished the tri-weekly public receptions which have so long been held by the President in the historic East Room of the White House. "Seeing the President" has long occupied a prominent place in the program of at least 90 per cent of the strangers who visit Washington; consequently complaints are loud and deep because of the change which deprives visitors of that opportunity.

It is difficult to look in any direction without seeing a picture representing the devastation of the rum demon. The other day a young woman, mother of three small children, appeared in one of our courts for the purpose of formally relinquishing all claim to her children, in order that they might be provided for by the Board of Children's Guardians. The Judge asked her if she fully realized the step she was taking. She answered with tears in her eyes that she did, and that it was the only thing she could do to keep herself and her children from the almshouse. Her husband had become a victim of the drink habit and had deserted her and the children and, although she could get work to support herself, the children were so small that she was unable to leave them to work, so she must give them up. Think of that mother's feelings, ye who do not fully recognize the power of the liquor habit over human happiness, as she said: "My husband provided for his family before he took to drink."

Here is another picture, from far-away Africa, presented to a Washington audience by Rev. Dr. David A. Day, who has spent twenty years at the Muhlenburg mission of the Lutheran church, on the St. Paul river in North Africa: After telling of the success of this mission, which has 10,000 acres of land under cultivation and a manual training-school to teach the children of the natives useful trades, in Christianizing the Africans, Dr. Day said that he feared the sale of American rum to the natives was destined to overcome the work of the missionaries and eventually to sweep away the tribes. He spoke of natives who had, after years of toil by the missionaries, been raised above their natural degradation only to become victims to the white man's rum and to die drunkards. The same ships that carry Christian missionaries to the Africans also carry rum to act as Satan's emissary in undoing the good work of the missionaries; the vessel upon which Dr. Day went to Africa carried 100,000 gallons of rum, thus adding to the difficulties of Christianizing the natives. These are not pleasant pictures, but they are true to life, alas! too true.

REFORM NEWS.

THE LA PORTE (IND.) ANTI-SECRECY CONFERENCE.

La Porte, Ind., Sept. 29, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—A meeting of the Indiana Swedish Lutheran Conference, in session here today, is fairly well attended. The services are conducted in the Swedish language, which I do not understand, but the speeches are full of animation and receive the close attention of the audience.

The forenoon of yesterday was devoted to missions, both home and foreign, and the afternoon to Sabbath observance. The evening session was given to consideration of the lodge system, which brought out a good audience.

Rev. C. Saunders, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church at St. Charles, Illinois, read a paper in Swedish, giving reasons why the church of Christ should require separation from the lodge as a condition of membership. It had evidently been prepared with much study and care, and I recognized quotations from numerous leading authorities in Masonic and Odd-fellow literature.

I followed this paper with a "chart-talk," which received close attention until a late hour, when the conference dispersed, to meet again this morning.

I hope that at least a synopsis of Bro. Saunders' address will be furnished to the readers of the Cynosure, as I am confident that it was an able paper and would do much good.

J. P. Stoddard.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Mass., Sept. 28, 1893.

Dear Cynosure:—I wish to call the attention of our friends who are not taking the Home Light to the importance of this monthly tract-paper. Together with Miss Dirksen, I have had the labor of preparing this paper for the mail this month, and I have found it no little task. The question comes, Does it pay? In direct dollars and cents, I reply, No. Both the editor and publisher give it their service without salary. Why then send it out? Because in this way many may be enlightened and brought to see the importance of our work. It will in many instances, I have no doubt, prepare the way for the Cynosure. It aims, especially, to interest the ladies, and is not without success, as the editor and publisher are assured. Let every friend who does not take it send for a sample copy and canvass in its behalf. It is only 15 cents a year. Ten copies are sent for $1. Get up a club in your town. Who would not give ten cents for a paper for a year? Address Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, 218 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.

During the week past I have attended several prayer, Christian Endeavor and other meetings, and in this way have made the acquaintance of several choice young men whom I am persuading to read our paper. I find that personal work counts.

Last Thursday evening I attended the ordination service of Mr. McNaugher, who comes from the R. P. Seminary to assume the pastorate of the First Presbyterian church, Boston. Rev. J. M. Foster preached the sermon. Rev. Mr. Somerville, of New York, addressed the pastor, and Rev. F. M. Foster, of New York, the congregation. The service throughout was very impressive.

Bro. McNaugher enters upon his ministry under very auspicious circumstances. May God greatly bless him, and make him a power in pulling down the strongholds of Satan and raising the standard of the cross.

Last evening I attended the services connected with the opening of the Shawmut Congregational church reading-room, and, in response to the pastor's request, took part. A pleasant room has been prepared, and provided with the best of books and papers. Young men in that section will have no excuse for seeking the saloon for entertainment. Time forbids much I should like to say in this connection.

The meeting of the Board of Directors of the New England Christian Association, to-day, was very pleasant. It does one so much good when out battling with the adversary in a world unfriendly to Christ, to feel that he has consecrated ones who are standing by his side with their prayers and means. Our dear President, who has stood so faithfully with us in the thickest of the fight, was detained at home sick. Let us prayer for brother Foster's speedy recovery.

I was glad to comply with Bro. Roberts' request to speak in the Industrial Home, of which he has charge, Sabbath evening. Here were gathered many who had spent their best days in the service of the devil. They were trying now to do better. Our good brother and sister Roberts are helping what they can. A new recruit appeared, as I was speaking, in the person of a drunken woman. She was kindly cared for, and will be brought to Christ if human agency can do it.

God bless them! How important the work of starting the young men and women in the right direction, that they may not have to say, like some who come to this home, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and I am not saved!"

Yours as ever, W. B. Stoddard.

REV. WM. FENTON'S WORK IN NEBRASKA.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 27, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—My last letter was dated at Malmo, Nebraska. The day following my lecture at that place, Monday, the 18th inst., I proceeded to Swedeburg and spoke in the Swedish Lutheran Church, of which Rev. J. Torell is the pastor. Rev. F. N. Swanberg, president of the late conference at Wausa and pastor at Oakland, was present and followed my lecture with an address in the Swedish language, which seemed to interest the audience very much.

At the village store I met a Presbyterian elder who wondered if the church would ever do her duty so as to do away with the necessity for secret societies. I replied, not until she put away from her communion her secret society members. He had regarded secret societies as benevolent or charitable institutions; but I asked him wherein their benevolence or charity consisted, and after a few moments' reflection he allowed that they were not charitable institutions at all. A little candid reflection had made an anti-secretist of him; he purchased two books and attended the lecture. The pastor, Rev. J. Torell, has had some experience in opposing the Masonic fraternity. A Freemason had been excluded, on account of being a Freemason, from a church in another part of the State to which Brother Torell ministered, and the Mason threatened to take the pastor's life; but the pastor was heedless of the threats, and he still lives to hate and oppose secret societies.

The next morning, Tuesday, the 19th inst., Brother Torell took me in his carriage to the station, two miles from the church, and I proceeded to Lincoln, the capital of the State, where Rev. G. Peters, the pastor of the Swedish Lutheran Church, had made an appointment for me to speak to his people that evening. Next morning I called upon Rev. Mr. Williams, the pastor of the First Baptist Church, whose church and parsonage are adjacent to the Lutheran Church. He was prompt to say that he belongs to no secret society, but that some of his members are Freemasons, and that members of secret societies are to be found in all Baptist churches. To this I replied that it was a disgrace to the Baptist denomination, and said to him: "How can you fellowship Freemasons as Christians?" He replied: "We will not talk about that now," and said that he was acquainted with the late Jonathan Blanchard at Galesburg and knew all about it. I left some tracts with him and departed. I do not suppose that the false pastors in the days of Jeremiah were any worse than the false pastors of the present day.

Brother Peters received me very kindly and helped me to the depot with my baggage, where I took the train for Shickley on Wednesday. Shickley is the only place on my list where the pastor failed to make an appointment for me to speak. Upon hearing a bell ring, and thinking of course that it was for a prayer-meeting in one of the churches, I set out from the hotel to attend it, when I found that the bell was ringing for a lodge meeting up-stairs in the public schoolhouse, and was informed that a lodge meeting is held in the same place every evening in the week except Saturday evening, at which time the ladies use it. Surely Shickley is a place where the Gospel is needed.

The next morning, Thursday, the 20th inst., after supplying Shickley with tracts, I hastened to Holdrege and was kindly greeted by the pastor, Rev. P. J. Brodine. His church was well-filled with a large, intelligent audience, in which the secret societies were well represented. The Masons kept their jewels, "silence and secrecy," well, as though their lips were closed and sealed by Satan—the lodge-god himself, as are those of every true Freemason.

On Friday evening I spoke in the M. E. Church at Axtell. Rev. V. N. Toren, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church, was active and energetic in securing the church and advertising the meeting. He also entertained me most kindly at his own home, and carried me, with his own team, nine miles, to the next appointment at Fridhem church, Funk.

On Saturday evening I rested at the home of the pastor, Rev. A. Kinell, and spoke in his church on Lord's day afternoon, the 26th inst.

On Monday morning I left Axtell for St. Paul, Minnesota, having spent about a month in Nebraska and spoken in thirteen churches, including one Norwegian Lutheran and two Methodist churches.

The pastors of these Lutheran churches have all received me most cordially and bidden me a hearty God-speed on my way.

Having gone over the eastern and southern portions of Nebraska, I can say that the soil is exceedingly rich and fertile—a splendid farming country. In the eastern portion the corn is good. In the vicinity of Axtell the ground is parched and the grass seared for want of rain; and the crops are almost a complete failure by reason of the drought; one farmer purchased thirty bushels of barley, sowed it, and reaped twenty-nine bushels. They have had no rain in this part of the State for six or seven weeks. The country here is an elevated tableland, and they have to go from 100 to 175 feet below the surface to reach water.

W. Fenton.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

Will some one inform me why it is that secretists, when pressed, instead of defending their orders by argument, insist on comparing the church and the lodge? Why should they invariably select the bride of Christ as the object of their attack? Is it because they consider the church and the lodge rivals for the worship and services of men, or because the whole animus of the secret system is fundamentally antagonistic to Christianity? Speak of the excesses and evils of Masonry, and you are almost certain to be met with: "your churches are full of hypocrites." "If your church members were as good as our lodge members they would be all right," etc. This is false. But, even if it were true, what sense or reason is there in forever insisting on whitewashing the secret brotherhoods with the sins of church members? If I steal, and my neighbor commits a theft, it would make a poor showing in court, or out of it, for me to plead my neighbor's theft in justification of my crime. If I hated my neighbor, and wanted to injure him in every way possible, I might accuse him bitterly, and even wrongfully, when confronted with my own wrong-doing; and if Masonry, Odd-fellowship, the Knights of Pythias, and other orders hate Christ, it is easy to understand why they so persistently assail his church. It is the method of base and cowardly men who are not willing to meet their own records, but seek to shelter themselves from merited opprobrium. It is a confession of inherent weakness, rottenness, and an utter lack of confidence in the cause they seek to bolster up by such "special pleading."

We hear of a "combination of the weak against the strong," but the order is reversed in the lodge. It is the combination of "hale, hearty men, having visible means of support, leaving outside "old men in dotage, cripples, feeble-minded persons and women." Such banding together is a confession of cowardice and incompetency that would be a disgrace to ordinary mortals, but highly becoming to "Patriarchs Militant" and "Sir Knights," who parade the streets decorated with feathers and armed (as

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE SWEDISH LUTHERANS AND THE LODGE.

Wakefield, Neb., Sept. 20, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—Your valuable paper is welcomed in our house every week. In fact, I could not be without it. I heartily endorse it for the constant and effective warfare it is waging against the secret societies. Every disciple of Christ that wants to be true to his Master's cause must enlist against the idolatrous and soul-destroying institution of the secret empire.

I am happy to belong to the Swedish Evangelical Lutheran denomination, a portion of the church of Christ in this country that has taken a decided stand against the lodge system. Lodge members predicted, years ago, that our membership would be greatly reduced within a few years, if we did not change our attitude against said orders. But what are the facts? The membership of our congregations has been about doubled within the past ten years in this country. Trust in God and hold up the truth, and we shall always come out victorious.

Wakefield is a town of about 1,000 inhabitants, but the secret lodges are, however, seven in number. Nearly every man in town, with the exception of the Swedish-Americans, belongs to one or more of these lodges. For this reason our three English congregations and their ministers are entirely controlled by the secret orders, verifying the truth, that "No man can give his chief allegiance to both church and lodge at once." "He will cleave to the one and forsake the other, or hold to the one and despise the other."

The Swedish church is the only one in this town leading the onset upon the secret fraternities. Our public attacks upon them commenced at the beginning of the year, when we detected that five of our Swedish Lutheran members had joined two secret, oath-bound associations, having life and accident insurance as their prominent characteristics. Some of our members said it was not advisable to exclude from church fellowship members from societies of this character; but the pastor held that these minor secret societies are stepping-stones to the more objectionable and idolatrous orders. The church council decided to give the five lodge members thirty days to choose between the lodge a d the church. During this time we detected several others of our members belonging to two other lodges—namely, the Knights of Labor, and the Grange, making in all, thirteen lodge members in the Lutheran church. The lodge members of the town rejoiced when they heard of this report. They expected to see our church divided, or rather swallowed, by the secret orders. The church council did not waver for a moment. The pastor announced in church, on the following Sunday, that all secret members in the congregation will have to decide to leave either lodge or church inside of a certain appointed time. He stated that he would rather have a few church members who were separated from the world, than a thousand lodge members. The last Sunday of May was the appointed time. The thirteen lodge members decided to leave the lodge, which was announced from the pulpit on that Sunday. The concourse of people was that day so large that all could not be accommodated inside of the church building. Twenty new members were on the same occasion received into full membership with the congregation.

The town lodges viewed with ill-concealed envy this decided victory of our congregation.

Monday evening, the 11th inst., Rev. Wm. Fenton delivered an able lecture in our church on secret societies, and especially on the claims of Freemasonry as a religious system. Bro. Fenton proved from Masonic authorities that Masonry was the continuation of the pagan mysteries of sun and devil worship. A large audience was present, consisting mostly of lodge members, and interest was kept up until midnight. Bro. Fenton was interrupted a few times during the lecture by the Presbyterian minister of this town. This minister endeavored to defend the Masons, but he was soon silenced by Mr. Fenton's convincing arguments, based on Masonic authors. I afterwards heard from several lodge members, that they were displeased with this clergyman's action at the lecture, for by his foolishness he started a discussion, damaging the secret fraternities to a large extent. Undoubtedly he expected to gain friends among the Masons, but this proved to be a failure. He belongs to one, or probably two, other secret orders, but he has no influence for good among them. Experience has shown us that a Christian and a clergyman can have more influence for good by staying out of the lodge, and then with the Word of God reprove their evil deeds. Abraham had more influence for good in Sodom than Lot, and this we will find to be the case always. I have found the secret orders to be a powerful vampire, drawing out the spiritual life of every congregation, wherever these orders are protected and defended. The condition of some of the churches in this town verifies this statement.

I expect to reap much good here from Bro. Fenton's visit. May God bless his lecture trip in Nebraska! May our Lord and Saviour also abundantly bless all that are engaged in the overthrow of the monster evil, the secret empire!

LODGE NOTES.

(From secret society papers.)

A "bugaboo" story: "A lodge instituted eighteen years has since suspended 28 members for non-payment of assessments, by their own request. Of these latter ten have died since suspension. The lodge has only lost four brothers by death to whose families the benefit was paid."

The K. of P. Master of Finance (says the Mystic Tie) has suspended, for nonpayment of dues, 300,000 members since the founding of the order. Perhaps the lodge "made them tired" by its insatiate demands for paid-for "benevolence."—EDITOR.

"Did your wife listen to your excuse for staying out so late at lodge last night?"

"Oh, yes, she listened to me and then—"

"Then what?"

"I listened to her!"

"Did you tell her that the lodge had work and was considering the advisibility of creating a ladies' rank?"

"Yes, and she said it was a rank lie."

For feminine inconsistency of purpose, a Chicago woman beats all other records. She had obtained a divorce from her husband, and now that he is dead and she learns that he had a paid-up beneficiary certificate in the Workmen, she asks that the divorce be set aside, so that, as his widow, she may enjoy the benefit of his foresight.

It is reported that during a service in the Masonic temple at La Paz, Bolivia, on the occasion of the funeral of a Chilian merchant, the building was forcibly entered by an Anti-masonic Roman Catholic mob, who drove away the mourners, assailing them with stones and firing upon them with revolvers. The populace then set fire to the temple, and burned it to the ground. A bonfire was made in the street of the valuable furniture and fittings.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1893.

THE FALL CAMPAIGN.

As the time for the fall elections approaches, partisanism comes to the front with all its bitterness and vituperation; but the worst is not visible. The secret conclave and the lodge are "getting in their work," and it is notorious that whatever party is obliged to resort to these clandestine methods always has some dirty work in hand.

In one or two instances, recently, the American Protective Association (the secret anti-Catholic organization, whose principles we print on the third page of this issue) has met with serious rebuffs, which can only tend to concentrate its forces and increase its energies to defeat those whom it was organized to oppose.

The saloon interest, also, is alert for "free whisky" and political domination, and, as a consequence, the prohibition States will be battle-fields of intense interest in the fall contests.

Apathy on the part of Christians, temperance voters and advocates, anti-secrecy men, and reputable citizens of no denomination or politics, will cause serious loss in the coming struggle. It always does. The interests at stake, as affecting the home, the church and the state, are immense and worth many sacrifices on the part of moral and religious voters. The time is come when indecision and unconcern are little short of treason to manhood and good government. The vote, as well as the voice, of every good man is the testimony of his goodness; and if ever the good man should figure as a good citizen, it is when his vote and his prayers harmonize in earnestness and influence.

CHICAGO ANARCHISTS.

Those who read Judge Gary's graphic description of the Chicago anarchists' riot, trial and punishment in a recent number of the Century Magazine will not soon forget the interest with which he invested it, nor the apparent fairness that pervaded his paper. Yet a Chicago lawyer, in the October Arena, takes the judge to task for giving to the world a history replete with warning and honesty of purpose.

Between the time when the last convicted anarchist received his sentence from Judge Gary until the latter published his story of that treasonable and murderous assault upon the city guardians, seven years had slipped by, and the subject could be discussed dispassionately and fairly, as we believe Judge Gary designed.

"The motive, then, or at least the principal motive, of this paper is to demonstrate to my own profession, and to make plain to all fair-minded, intelligent people, that the verdict of the jury in the case of the anarchists was right; that the anarchists were guilty of murder; that they were not the victims of prejudice, nor martyrs for free speech, but in morals as well as in law were guilty of murder." So wrote the Judge.

We think that "all fair-minded, intelligent people" conversant with and observant of the incidents related by Judge Gary will agree that the truth of his narrative is fully sustained by the evidence elicited at the trial. The only objections that can possibly be raised against his position must come from those referred to in the poet's lines, and their aiders and abettors:

> "No rogue e'er felt the halter draw,
> With good opinion of the law."

It is possible that the action of Governor Altgeld in pardoning the anarchists who were working out life-sentences in the penitentiary for committing the crime related by Judge Gary may have intensified the motive which he had in writing his article for the Century; for the attack made upon the judge by the governor was reprehensible and unjust in the extreme.

The article in the Arena resembles the special pleading of a criminal lawyer for his convicted clients; that of the judge, a reiteration of the causes that led to their conviction, and the necessity for their punishment.

Who were these anarchists that any decent man or good citizen should find it in his heart to antagonize law and justice in their behalf? A secret, murderous band of aliens, or renegades, taking up arms to oppose and destroy the powers created in behalf of peace and good government. It is too late to apologize for their acts, or to revive their animosity and arouse them to attempt renewed outrages.

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

The National Economist, the organ of the Farmers' Alliance, printed at Washington, D. C. (issue of Sept. 23, 1893), makes this declaration: "The theory of the Alliance is that when a man thinks he is right, he is right."

This piece of sophistry opens the door to every form of vice and villainy, and is worthy of a secret society which, as we have heretofore shown, has no fellowship with Christ and Christianity, but is, in its entirety and purpose, of the earth earthy and devoted to partisan politics.

This theory of the Alliance will not even bear the charitable construction commonly accorded to Pope's celebrated lines:

> "And, spite of pride, in erring reason's spite,
> One truth is clear, Whatever is, is right;"

which our teacher taught us simply meant that "whatever is right, is right." But such a reconstruction of the Alliance's theory would only make nonsense out of what is a very misleading expression.

It is misleading because it covers too much ground for the sentiments of infidels, scorners, thieves and robbers, as well as of saints; and to say that the thoughts of each and all these classes are right is an absurdity too gross to be treated with anything but ridicule.

Take (for instance) two members of the Alliance when comparing notes. One thinks that a gold standard for currency would be a panacea for our financial disorders; the other thinks that bimetallism is the only true solution of the currency question. According to the Alliance, both are right; for "when a man thinks he is right, he is right."

So we might go on, indefinitely, multiplying instances of this pernicious doctrine, which has neither truth nor common sense for a foundation. But enough. Let us rather heed the words of Solomon: "Eat thou not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats; for as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Prov. 23: 6, 7.

FREE METHODISTS AND REFORM.

The Ohio Conference of the Free Methodist Church, at its recent annual session, made this expressive declaration against secret societies:

> We re-affirm our position as one of radical opposition to all secret societies. We believe they are anti-Christian in character and detrimental to mankind socially, legally and morally: that they are a curse to this nation and ought to be outlawed. The rapid growth of these societies, which are based on selfishness, is a continual menace to our government and perilous to our religious liberties, and ought to stimulate us in our efforts to destroy them.

It also adopted the following resolutions relating to reforms:

> Resolved, 1. That we, as a conference, pledge ourselves to continue the agitation of the anti-secrecy issue.
> 2. That we will make our voting harmonious with our prayers, by casting our ballots with the party that declares in their platform, "The liquor, drink traffic must and shall be destroyed."
> 3. That we will use every righteous, available means to expose the corruption of Romanism and overthrow popery.
> 4. That by precept and example we will endeavor, to the utmost of our ability, to maintain the sanctity of the Sabbath.

CHICAGO TO HAVE MORE SALOONS.

At a fair estimate Chicago has now at least 7,000 liquor saloons.

Not long since it was reported that the brewers under whose auspices a large number of these saloons were opened had found themselves burdened by too many of them, and intended to shut up 300 of those run by the poorer class of keepers. But that was a small matter.

Last week it was announced by a daily paper that "English capitalists are going into the saloon business in Chicago on a large scale. At a meeting yesterday of the mortgage-debenture-holders of the Chicago breweries in London, it was voted to issue $250,000 worth of bonds, bearing 6 per cent interest, the money to be used in opening and purchasing saloons in this city. The plan to be followed" (continues the paper from which this information is derived) "is to establish saloons in all parts of the city and thus insure a steady output for the products of the breweries. It will thus be possible for a man with only $100 or so to have a saloon worth several thousand dollars. The ownership of many saloons would enable a brewery to laugh at cutting of prices."

The Voice says that these liquor-makers and sellers have combined in one immense secret society to insure the success of their diabolical business.

There never was more need of prohibition in its strongest form than now. The entire liquor-making and liquor-selling interests of the nation have apparently combined to rule or ruin us, and aliens are supplying them with the funds for perpetuating this infamous traffic. The danger is great. What will the harvest be?

"BRO. FOSTER'S DISSENT."

In an interview with Bro. Ezra A. Cook, formerly publisher of the Cynosure, and now an officer of the N. C. A., he gave expression to the following views of the Association's exhibit and Bro. J. M. Foster's criticism, printed in last week's Cynosure:

"I have no wish to enter into a rancorous controversy with my esteemed Bro. Foster, but 'charity rejoiceth [not in error, but] in the truth;' and it would not be right to let his statements pass without correction. Christian churches, Christian schools, Christian organizations of various names, and individual Christians, after a campaign which has done more for Sabbath observance than all other efforts in that line for half a century, having legally secured Sunday closing for the World's Fair, put into it exhibits to the value of millions of dollars, after voting State and municipal taxation in its aid. Later, a majority of the Fair Directors wickedly yielded to what they believed to be a 'terrible clamor' for Sunday opening. Suppose that now these Christian exhibitors, finding they could not withdraw their exhibits, as Bro. Foster holds was their duty, had abandoned their property after covering it up, how long would it have stayed covered? Even with one-tenth the week-day attendance guards are unable to protect these covered exhibits on Sunday, and the exhibits themselves, when abandoned, would, if portable, have disappeared before another Sabbath.

"The Sunday-openers would have been jubilant over the complete rout of the Christians, and the Sunday attendance would, without doubt, have been the largest of any day in the week. But these Christian exhibitors did not, like a set of poltroons, abandon everything and run, but, like Christian soldiers, 'fought the good fight,' and by covering their exhibits for Sunday, and getting others who were indifferent to do the same, aided by Christians outside, they defeated the Sunday-openers in fact, if not in form, and the Fair managers wisely and promptly acknowledged their blunder.

"But Satan had caught them in his snare, and they are justly suffering for this wickedness and so are the public.

"I think these Christian exhibitors have done nobly, and I believe that instead of reproaches, Christians everywhere owe them a debt of gratitude.

"Bro. Foster's assumption that by paying the fines imposed by Judge Stein upon the Directors for closing the Fair one Sunday, they would have been allowed to close the gates every Sunday, if true, would brand not only the Fair managers, but this whole Christian community, with infamy. But it is not true. If paying these fines would have given the Directors the right to close the Fair on Sundays, I do not doubt that Victor F. Lawson, one of those Directors, would have promptly paid them all.

"When Washington Hesing, editor of the Staats Zeitung, and leader of the Sunday-openers here, publicly declared that if the Fair gates were closed on Sunday he would not pay his large World's Fair stock subscription, Mr. Lawson, in his own paper, the Daily News, declared that in that event he would pay for Hesing's stock; and he is a man of Christian integrity. Had he not chosen to assume the whole amount of these fines, there are a score of other Christian men who would have raised or paid that amount without delay. But those fines were not, as is assumed, suspended fines, to be collected if the Directors continued to disobey the injunction, but they are a legal lien on the property of every Director who has not paid his fine; and had the Fair been closed on the following Sunday, not only would fines of several times the amount have been imposed, but the Directors would have been arrested, and the Sheriff would undoubtedly have taken possession of the Fair.

"Judge Goggin, who continued the injunction, most emphatically and publicly declared his intention to jail the Fair managers should they disregard it, and armed deputies would, without doubt, have enforced the injunction if disobedience had been attempted.

"At the last meeting of the Directors, the suggestion that as Sunday opening was inevitable, the Fair should be made more attractive on Sunday met with no favor, and the same is true of a proposition to reduce the Sunday admission fee.

"The Fair management could get themselves into jail, and have some more and heavier fines imposed on them, by attempting to close the Fair on Sunday, but could not close it. They are, by making the Sunday Fair as unattractive as they can, and by encouraging exhibitors to do the same, in effect closing the Fair, though in form it is open.

"I heartily agree with Bro. Foster in his condemnation of nude paintings, drawings and statuary, but, judging from the fierce denunciations in Chicago, New York and other papers, of the managers for refusing to allow exhibits in that line infinitely worse than those accepted, they seem to me more deserving of praise than blame. There may be some great art-galleries where there is a smaller proportion of the nude exhibited, but I do not know where they are.

"To say that 'the World's Fair, however, is an entertainment, an exhibition having perhaps a slight tincture of instruction,' may be less unjust than to call a body of Christian worshipers 'a military show,' as infidels do; but some Christian people who have diligently spent a month or six weeks studying this most wonderful collection of animate and inanimate things, from the remotest quarters of the globe, yet visiting no Plaisance theater or any other, getting information that could not have been obtained otherwise without years of travel and thousands of dollars' expense, will agree with me in thinking that after college presidents and other eminent educators, who have seen for themselves, have spoken so highly of 'the inestimable value of the World's Fair to students,' such belittling of it by one who has not attended it shows very bad taste, to put it as mildly as possible.

"I am aware that D. L. Moody is condemned by some for hiring theaters and preaching in them, as the rent-money goes to ungodly men; also for preaching in the great circus tent here, charging that he thus encouraged the circus. And grand, good men condemn all Christians who vote, even when they always vote as they pray, because, say they, 'you are taking part in, and so endorsing an ungodly government.' Such brethren consistently denounce participation by us in the World's Fair Congress on Oct. 5th, and I respect their scruples.

"Let all those who believe in voting and praying 'labor in season and out of season,' and pray for that meeting, and, if possible, attend it."

EDUCATION OF THE NAVAJO INDIANS.

The Indian Rights' Association, under permission granted it by the Indian Department at Washington, is about to carry out a project which is likely to render good service to the cause of education among the Navajo Indians of Arizona and New Mexico. Last spring the present agent, Lieutenant Plummer, appealed to the association for aid to secure the authority of the Indian Department in sending a party of the Navajo Indians on a visit to the East, so that the gross ignorance of a certain number of them as to the power of the government and the advantages of civilization might be dispelled. The association promptly acted on Lieutenant Plummer's suggestion. The department expressed its entire sympathy with the project, but confessed its inability, through lack of funds, to meet the cost. The association then offered to raise the sum of $700 if the department would grant its official sanction to the carrying out of the plan. This the authorities promptly granted. The sum of $624.50 has been raised, and Lieutenant Plummer expects to start with eight Navajo Indians for a visit to the World's Fair about October 9th.

The importance of this movement is greater than might be supposed. The Navajos are in the main a well-disposed and intelligent people; but a portion of them living in the more remote parts of the reservation, and comprising the rising generation, are more or less troublesome through their ignorance; and complications which have arisen between settlers and themselves owing to questions of land and water, largely arising through the uncertain boundaries of their reserve, are more or less threatening. It is the opinion of their agent that this irritation, which, if neglected, threatens, perhaps, serious trouble in the future, can best be allayed by attacking what is its real root, the gross ignorance of the Indians themselves, and their consequent opposition to the education of their people. It is considered not only the most humane, but by far the least expensive method of dealing with the problem.

GOOD WORDS.

The East Ohio Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ convened at Westfield Church, Medina County, Ohio, August 24, 1893, Bishop Milton Wright presiding. Among the declarations of fidelity to the truth adopted by the conference was the following: "We are as much as ever opposed to secret oath-bound combinations, and advise all to stay out and away from any association that meets at night in the highest story of the highest building that can be obtained, thus showing that they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." These are brave words that deserve a universal endorsement.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard, after an active campaign in New England, returned to Washington last week.

—Rev. H. L. Kellogg, formerly editor of the Cynosure, enters this week upon a six weeks' lecturing and canvassing campaign; in behalf of our reform work, in Central New York. We anticipate the best results from this effort.

—Among esteemed visitors at this office last week were Bishop William Dillon and his family (of the Radical U. B. church), president of the Oregon Anti-secrecy Association. The bishop has been east for a few months, arranging his affairs and preparing for his work on the Pacific Coast. He carries to his new field of labor the prayers and best wishes of the many friends whom he leaves behind. We have every reason to believe that his power as a man of God will be felt in the advancement of Christianity and the work of our reform.

—Our friends of the W. C. T. U. will have two grand demonstrations of their beneficent work in this city at an early day. October 16–18 will be occupied by the World's W. C. T. U. convention; October 18–21 by the National W. C. T. U. convention. Addresses from Miss Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Mrs. Livermore, Mrs. Lathrop, Mrs. Mary H. Hunt and others are prominent in the program. Memorial services in honor of Miss Mary Allen West and the dedication of the Woman's Temple are among the special exercises. The Cynosure will be represented at these conventions by Mrs. A. E. Stoddard.

—Our good friend of the Omaha (U. P.) Midland thinks that the American Protective Association is not wholly consistent in its operations. As a foe to the Church of Rome, as a secret, oath-bound society, with selfish political aspirations, it opposes the secret, oath-bound Society of Jesus (the Jesuits), the most dangerous element of the Roman Catholic propaganda, while, at the same time, it "favors, supports and defends Freemasonry, whose oaths are as dangerous and unpatriotic as the reputed oaths of priests or Jesuits, and whose members use the lodge to secure political powers;" which only serves to prove what the National Christian Association has always claimed, that all secret societies are inimical to church and state.

—The large number of unemployed persons in Chicago—variously estimated at from 20,000 to 100,000—has awakened a wholesome sympathy in the bosoms of well-to-do citizens, and contributions for the relief of the sufferers are freely offered. As might have been expected, numerous fraudulent applicants for charity requested sustenance; but as public benevolence takes more active and extended forms these barnacles are gradually disappearing. Many cases of terrible suffering have been discovered, and there is room for a still greater and judicious distribution of food and raiment among the poor.

they tell us) with inoffensive weapons, made of tin, pewter or some kind of "pot-metal." Brave fellows, surely, combined to protect their royal persons and prerogatives from assaults by old men, women and feeble-minded people who are barred from entrance at the doors of their noble, benevolent and educational asylums.

This reminds me of the claim frequently made at the Fair, that the work of Odd-fellowship is educational, referring to the ceremonies at different stages of the initiation. I sought, by the aid of my informants, to ascertain just where and how this education is acquired. I asked, "Is it at the blinding of the eyes or the encircling of the candidate with a chain and the threat to burn him as a spy at the stake, that ignorance gives place to knowledge? Or is it at the side of the coffined skeleton that "the mists are rolled away." Or is it in the Encampment when, personating Isaac, the candidate is laid upon the altar for sacrifice, that he experiences such a wonderful change. Or does it occur in the kitchen department, when the Rebekahs dispense the dainties and delicacies at the festal board"?

Failing to obtain the desired information my next effort was to obtain a ticket of admission to the "Odd-fellows' National ball." Having met one clergyman who had come from the "Green Mountain State" to grace the pilgrimage and "spread" by his clerical reputation, and being informed that there are many "gentlemen of the cloth" in the order, I fancied there would be suggestions or a clue to its educational methods in seeing these devout ministers dancing "polkas" and "hornpipes" with saloon-keepers under the inspiration of "Old Rosin the Bow" and the "Devil's Dream." But here again I failed, as tickets were reserved for the noble brotherhood and special friends. Denied admission to the "light fantastic toe" department, I sought the bill of fare, at least to feast my eyes upon a list of the dainties and delicious nectars provided to give zest and tone to the royal banquet; but to no purpose. I began to realize that I was only a "cowan," and might endanger their whole educational system, as I had never given my "word of honor that I wouldn't tell."

Determined to make thorough work, I approached a very corpulent member, uniformed and bespangled, who spoke very imperfect English, and asked: "Do you dance, sir?" He assured me he was perfectly guiltless of such antics; whereupon I said: "What do you think of this benevolent order spending such a large sum for a "spread," when so many widows and orphans and poor people are suffering for bread?" "Oh, the boys must have their fun anyhow," was his reply. And so, I suppose, it was that preacher and fiddler, by profession, deacon and horse-racer by practice, dames and daughters of Rebekah went in together for a "big time," educating one another, under a solemn pledge of secrecy and the pagan creed of A. B. Grosh, viz.: "What regeneration by the word of truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship," which makes the lodge a devil's college, in which he occupies and "educates" his pupil in fun and frolic until he graduates him into that bottomless abyss "where their worm dieth not and their fire is not quenched;" and "what shall the harvest be" for those ministers who are "unequally yoked," and dance attendance, if they do not actually participate in the revelries of their ungodly and profane "brethren?" It is written, "To whom much is given, of him much will be required," and there is a class of whom it is said: "I will laugh at their calamities and mock when their fear cometh."

Let us pray God to have pity on those preachers who give character to the graceless if not bacchanalian festivals of secret lodges, lest it be said of them as of Judas, who for popularity and gain betrayed his Lord, "It would have been better for him if he had never been born."

James P. Stoddard.

The Home.

THE CROSS AND THE CROWN.

The cross for only a day,
The crown forever and aye;
The one for a night that will soon be gone,
And one for eternity's glorious morn.

The cross, then, I'll cheerfully bear,
Nor sorrow for loss or care.
For a moment only the pain and the strife,
But through endless ages the crown of life.

The cross till the conflict's done,
The crown when the victory's won.
My cross never more remembered above,
While wearing the crown of his matchless love.

His cross I'll never forget;
For marks on his brow are set,
On his precious hands, on his feet and side,
To tell what he bore for the church, his bride.

My cross I'll think of no more,
But strive for the crown set before;
That ever through ages my song may be
Of his cross that purchased my crown for me.

The work of redemption done,
His cross and his crown are one;
His crimson and gold will forever blend
In the crown of Jesus, the sinner's friend.

THE BAPTISM.

Among the old Covenanters it was the custom that infants about to be baptized should be carried to the font by young maidens. After the ceremony the infants were delivered into the arms of their fathers.

The rite of baptism had not been performed for several months in the kirk of Lanark. It was the hottest time of persecution, and the inhabitants of that parish found other places in which to worship God and celebrate the ordinances of religion. It was now the Sabbath day, and a small congregation of about a hundred souls had met for divine service in a place of worship more magnificent than any temple that human hands had ever built to Deity. Here, too, were three children about to be baptized. The congregation had not assembled to the toll of the bell, but each heart knew the hour and observed it, for there are a hundred sundials among the hills, woods, moors and fields, and the shepherd and the peasant see the hours passing by them in sunshine and shadow.

The church in which they were assembled was hewn by God's hand out of the eternal rocks. A river rolled its way through a mighty chasm of cliffs several hundred feet high, of which the one side presented enormous masses and the other corresponding recesses, as if the great stone girdle had been rent by a convulsion. The channel was overspread with prodigious fragments of rock or large loose stones, some of them smooth and bare, others containing soil and verdure in their rents and fissures, and here and there crowned with shrubs and trees. The eye could at once command a long stretching vista seemingly closed and shut up at both extremities by the coalescing cliffs.

This majestic reach of river contained pools, streams, rushing shelves and waterfalls innumerable; and when the water was low, which it now was in the common drought, it was easy to walk up this scene with the calm, blue sky overhead, an utter and sublime solitude. On looking up the soul was bowed down by the feeling of that prodigious height of unscalable and often overhanging cliff. Between the channel and the summit of the far-extended precipices were perpetually flying rooks and wood pigeons and now and then a hawk, filling the profound abyss with their wild cawing, deep murmur or shrill shriek.

Sometimes a heron would stand erect and still on some little stone island, or rise up like a white cloud along the black walls of the chasm and disappear. Winged creatures alone could inhabit this region. The fox and wildcat chose more accessible haunts. Yet here came the persecuted Christians and worshiped God, whose hand hung over their heads those magnificent pillars and arches, scooped out those galleries from the solid rock and laid at their feet the calm water in its transparent beauty, in which they could see themselves sitting in reflected groups, with their Bibles in their hands.

Here upon a semicircular ledge of rocks, over a narrow chasm, through which the tiny stream played in a murmuring waterfall and divided the congregation into equal parts, sat about a hundred persons, all devoutly listening to their minister, who stood before them on what might well be called a small, natural pulpit of living stone. Up to it there led a short flight of steps, and over it waved the canopy of a tall, graceful birch tree. This pulpit stood on the middle of the channel directly facing that congregation, and separated from them by the clear, deep sparkling pool into which the scarce-heard water poured over the blackened rock.

The water as it left the pool separated into two streams and flowed on each side of that altar, thus placing it on an island, whose large, mossy stones were richly embowered under the golden blossoms and green tresses of the broom. Divine services were closed, and a row of maidens, all clothed in purest white, came gliding off from the congregation, and crossing the stream on some stepping stones, arranged themselves at the foot of the pulpit, with the infants about to be baptized.

The fathers of the infants, just as if they had been in their own kirk, had been sitting there during worship, and now stood up before the minister. The baptismal water, taken from the pellucid pool, was lying consecrated in a small hollow of one of the upright stones that formed one side or pillar of the pulpit, and the holy rite proceeded. Some of the younger ones in that semicircle kept gazing down into the pool, in which the whole scene was reflected, and now and then, in spite of the grave looks or admonishing whispers of their elders, letting a pebble fall into the water that they might judge of its depth from the length of time that elapsed before the clear air-bells lay sparkling on the agitated surface.

The rite was over, and the religious service of the day closed by a psalm. The mighty rocks hemmed in the holy sound and sent it in a more compacted volume, clear, sweet and strong, up to heaven. When the psalm ceased, an echo like a spirit's voice was heard, dying away high up among the magnificent architecture of the cliffs, and once more might be noticed in the silence the reviving voice of the waterfall.

Just then a large stone fell from the top of the cliff into the pool, a loud voice was heard, and a plaid hung over on a point of a shepherd's staff. Their watchful sentinel had descried danger, and this was a warning. Forthwith the congregation rose. There were paths dangerous to unpracticed feet along the ledges of the rocks leading up to several caves and places of concealment. The more active and young assisted the elder—more especially the old pastor and the women with the infants—and many minutes had not elapsed till not a living creature was visible in the channel of the stream, but all of them hidden, or nearly so, in the clefts and caverns.

The shepherd who had given the alarm had lain down again in his plaid instantly on the greensward upon the summit of these precipices. A party of soldiers were immediately upon him and demanded what signals he had been making and to whom, when one of them, looking over the edge of the cliff, exclaimed: "See, see! Humphrey, we have caught the whole tabernacle of the Lord in a net at last. There they are praising God among the stones of the river Mouss. These are the Cartland craigs. By my soul's salvation, a noble cathedral!"

"Fling the lying sentinel over the cliffs. Here is a canting Covenanter for you, deceiving honest soldiers on the very Sabbath day. Over with him—out of the gallery into the pit." But the shepherd had vanished like a shadow, and mixing with the tall green broom and bushes was making his unseen way toward the wood. "Satan has saved his servants, but come, my lads—follow me. I know the way down into the bed of the stream and the steps up to Wallace's cave. They are called the 'Kittle Nine Stanes.' The hunt's up. We'll be all in it at the death. Halloo—my boys—halloo!"

The soldiers dashed down a less precipitous part of the wooded banks a little below the "craigs" and hurried up the channel. But when they reached the altar where the old gray haired minister had been seen standing, and the rocks that had been covered with people, all was silent and solitary—not a creature was to be seen.

"Here's a Bible dropped by some of them," cried a soldier, and with his foot he spun it away into the pool. "A bonnet—a bonnet," cried another; "now for the pretty sanctified face that rolled its demure eyes below it." But after a few jests and oaths the soldiers stood still, eyeing with a kind of mysterious dread the black and silent walls of the rock that hemmed them in, and hearing only the small voice of the stream that sent a profounder stillness through the heart of that majestic solitude.

"Curse these cowardly Covenanters! What if they tumble down upon our head pieces of rock from their hiding place? Advance? Or retreat?" There was no reply, for a slight fear was upon every man. Musket or bayonet could be of little use to men obliged to clamber up rocks along slender paths, leading they knew not where, and they were aware that armed men nowadays worshiped God—men of iron hearts, who feared not the glitter of the soldier's arms, neither barrel nor bayonet—men of long stride, firm step and broad chest, who on the open field would have overthrown the marshaled line and gone first and foremost if a city had to be taken by storm.

As the soldiers were standing together irresolute, a noise came upon their ears like distant thunder, but even more appalling, and a light current of air, as if propelled by it, passed whispering along the sweetbriers, and the broom, and the tresses of the birch trees. It came deepening and roaring on, and the very Cartland craigs shook to their foundation as if in an earthquake.

"The Lord have mercy upon us—what is this?" And down fell many of the miserable wretches on their knees and some on their faces upon the sharp pointed rocks. Now it was like the sound of many myriads of chariots rolling on their iron axles down the stony channel of the torrent. The old gray haired minister issued from the mouth of Wallace's cave and said, with a loud voice, "The Lord God terrible reigneth."

A waterspout had burst upon the moorlands, and the river in its power was at hand. There it came—tumbling along into that long reach of cliffs, and in a moment filled it with one mass of waves. Huge, agitated clouds of foam rode on the surface of a blood red torrent. An army must have been swept off by that flood. The soldiers perished in a moment—but high up in the cliffs, above the sweep of destruction, were the Covenanters—men, women and children uttering prayers to God, unheard by themselves in that raging thunder.—From "Lights and Shadows of Scottish Life."

NOT ALONE.

A good minister was once sent to a wild and dangerous part of Australia, on an errand of duty and mercy. He traveled up too poor to be in any great danger from bush-rangers or robbers, but as he came back he had to bring in his saddle-bags a large sum of money, not his own, but belonging to the dying man he had been sent for to comfort. He knew that a dangerous robber was aware that he was riding along the lonely track through the bush with all this money about him, and when he got to one part of the road he felt so frightened that he thought he was not trusting God as a Christian should. He wanted a little quiet, so he got off his horse and stood by it, with his eyes shaded against it, praying for faith and courage not to be afraid of bush-ranger robbers, and to be guarded against them. He prayed till he felt calm enough to ride on, and then he mounted his horse, and reached the town in safety with the money he had in charge.

Sometime later he was once more called to visit a man on a sick bed, and he recognized him as the robber of whom he had been so afraid in his ride. This man had told him that he had felt he could not die without confessing that on that day he had followed him, intending to rob and murder him, but he could get no opportunity.

"Why did you not do it when I got off my horse?" asked the minister in surprise. "I could not then," said the bush-ranger, "there were too many of you."

"What do you mean?" said the minister; "I was quite alone in the bush—standing with my head resting against my horse's side for a long time. You could have killed me then."

"You were not alone," said the bush-ranger.

"I saw you standing as you describe, but there was a man standing on each side of you."

Certainly there had been no other men with the minister in that hour of terror when he cried to God, but it is just barely possible that God did really open the robber's eyes, and show him his angels guarding his servant as he went on his dangerous duty, as Elisha's servant's eyes were opened to see celestial guardians around his master. But, whatever may be the explanation, God did send his angels to frighten away the robber, and by so doing he saved him from a great crime, as well as the good minister from death.—Selected.

The above reminds us of an incident in our own experience. We were preaching in the city of T. A wicked man living unlawfully with a woman used to come to the services. He got greatly enraged at our preaching; and one night while waiting at the depot to go to western Kansas to hold a camp-meeting he followed us around and by his vicious looks and constant dogging of our steps showed that he meant personal violence. After being seated in the car a tall, strong man took his seat behind us and wanted to know "if we knew of our danger of assault from that man." We told him of his character and he said: "I am a sheriff from Kentucky. I am used to dealing with such men. I saw he meant mischief, and as he followed you I followed him and would have fixed him if he had offered to touch you." So if God did not have an angel from the skies to protect us he had a messenger from Kentucky in the person of the sheriff. God knows how to take care of his servants till their work is done here and then eternally hereafter. Hallelujah.—The Way, the Truth, the Life.

GOOD RULES.

Never betray a confidence.
Never neglect to call upon a friend.
Never leave home with unkind words.
Never laugh at the misfortunes of others.
Never give a promise which you do not intend to fulfill.
Never send a present hoping for one in return.
Never speak much of your own performance.
Never fail to be punctual at the time appointed.
Never make yourself the hero of your own story.
Never pick your teeth or clean the nails in company.
Never question a servant or child about family affairs.
Never present a gift saying it is of no use to yourself.
Never read letters that you may find addressed to others.
Never fail, if a gentleman, of being polite and civil to ladies.

THE BLESSEDNESS OF FORGETTING.

If you would increase your happiness and prolong your life, forget your neighbor's faults. Forget the slander you have ever heard. Forget the temptations. Forget the fault-finding, and give little thought to the cause that provoked it. Forget the peculiarities of your friends and only remember the good points that make you fond of them. Forget all personal quarrels of histories that you may have heard by accident, and which, if repeated, would seem a thousand times worse than they are. Blot out, as far as possible, the disagreeables of life; they will come, and they will grow larger as you remember them, and constant thought of the acts of meanness, or, worse still, malice, will only tend to make you more familiar to them. Obliterate everything disagreeable from yesterday: start out with a clean sheet for to-day, and write upon it, for sweet memory's sake, only those things that are lovely and lovable.—Lutheran Observer.

THE LITTLE RED POCKETBOOK.

A few years ago there died in Philadelphia a little girl six and a half years old. Among her possessions was found an old red pocketbook containing fifty-seven cents; also a scrap of paper on which she had printed the story of what led her to save the money. Only a little while before her illness she had applied for admission to a large Sunday-school in the city, and was told that all the classes were full and the building was too small to organize new ones. Much disappointed, but with the simple faith belonging to childhood, she began saving her pennies with the purpose of enlarging the church, in order that she and other poor children might be accommodated. After her death the story became known, and benevolent people added to the humble fund, until, in six years, it had grown to $250,000. With this there have been built in Philadelphia a church capable of seating 8,000, a large Sunday-school room; a hospital for children and a college building at which 1,400 students attend. In the hall of the latter stands a full-length portrait of the little girl, Hattie May Wiatt, whose fifty-seven cents seemed to increase almost as miraculously as the loaves and fishes which the little lad once brought to Jesus.—Congregationalist.

A WORKMAN'S PRAYER.

My hands would labor for thee, Lord!
The rich and great
Have thought to build a house for thee,
In which to wait
Upon thy holy name—a place
As fair and grand
As man can plan and execute,
And wealth command.
They give the choice design, and pay
The mighty cost:
I am a workman paid to work
Through heat and frost.
Oh Lord! I would the service give,
But thou dost know
And choose my poverty. Wilt thou
Accept it so?

I mix the mortar with my love,
Which, tho' so small
A thing, thou wilt receive and bless,
It is my all.
And when with rev'rent care I lift
The heavy stone
My heart sends up an earnest prayer
That what is done
May hasten on thy kingdom, Lord!
Oh, consecrate
My little portion of the work
Upon this great,
Majestic building wrought for thee!
May all that gaze
Upon it be uplifted—may
They chant thy praise!

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION SENTIMENT.

[From the Voice.]

A dispatch from Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, Sept. 11, said:

The great Iowa Methodist conference, drawing to a close in this city, has adopted resolutions repudiating the Local Option plank and anti-Prohibition candidate of the regular Republicans. The following are extracts from the resolutions adopted:

"In opposition to all contrary statements, we maintain that prohibition has been of inestimable value to Iowa in the banishment of the saloon from the larger portion of the State, and would have been in every community had honest and persistent efforts been made. It is our abiding conviction that there is no form in which the liquor traffic can be legalized without sin; so that we protest and refuse to be bound by any political platform that proposes the return of any legalized saloons to any city or hamlet in our commonwealth, and we are not in favor of banishing the saloon from one community and fastening it upon another.

"We will use all lawful means and influences to secure the election of such executive and members of the General Assembly as will pledge themselves against any backward movement on this great question, so dear to the hearts of all who love home and country, and to defeat such candidates as are in favor of any form of licensing the liquor traffic.

"In the murder of Dr. Haddock, and especially in the late murderous attempts of the liquor traffic upon the homes and lives of our friends in Muscatine, we recognize a faint intimation of the real character of this monster iniquity that has grown gray in the work of wrecking homes and damning souls. We hear in these outrages the voice of God calling upon us to press forward with intensified purpose to work for its extermination.

"All admission or assumption made by any political platform that prohibition cannot be enforced is utterly untrue, and as such is opposed to the dignity of Christian civilization. It is utterly inconsistent for any Christian to vote for the legalizing of sin, and we stand upon the position taken by our church on this great question."

This report was unanimously adopted. The conference is the oldest in the State, and includes such important cities as Burlington, Muscatine, Ottumwa, Mt. Pleasant, Keokuk and Fort Madison.

DesMoines, Iowa. Sept. 9, 1893.—A ringing communication from Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, president of the Iowa W. C. T. U., repudiates the Local Option position of the Republicans and calls upon all White Ribboners of the State to work for straight Prohibition candidates for State and Legislature.

East Liverpool, Pa., Sept. 7.—The Methodist Protestant conference, in session here to-day, adopted the following temperance resolutions:

"Resolved, That we look with suspicion upon every professor of religion who refuses to use his political power for the suppression of the evils of intemperance; and,

"Whereas, Believing that the balance of power is held by the Christians of our land; therefore,

"Resolved, That the evils of intemperance are largely due to the criminal neglect of Christians who fail to discharge their political duties at the polls."

"At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.—The Bible Reader.

A newspaper paragraph states that the mayor of Lancaster, Ohio, proposes to his city council a novel method of enforcing temperance laws. He says that if the council will pass an ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquors on Sunday he will himself visit the saloons on Saturday night, at or before midnight, and will seal every saloon door in town. At 6 o'clock on Monday morning he will himself make the rounds, inspect the seals, and break them.

Rev. H. A. Davis of Red Key, Ind., was invited to make an address at Spencer Park before the Trades Assembly on Labor day, Sept. 4. The invitation was extended and accepted after the assembly had voted unanimously not to sell or allow to be sold on the grounds any intoxicating liquors whatsoever on that day. But the beer business was brought again before the assembly, reconsidered, and decided in favor of selling beer. Whereupon Bro. Davis promptly recalled his consent to make the address.

Lady Somerset sends word from London that the health of Frances E. Willard is so feeble that she will have to cease work for a year. This news will be received with regret by her numerous admirers.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Faith brings peace; peace, joy. Vs. 1, 2. Peace follows justification through faith as its natural result. Our sins are pardoned; we are at one with God. "Into this peace wherein we stand." It is the peace of the rock that cannot be moved—an abiding peace. Peace, in its turn, brings forth joy. The rendering of the Revised Version, "let us rejoice," makes it another of Paul's many exhortations to a life of Christian joy. What should we think if a poor man who had fallen heir to a great estate, which would in a short time be put into his possession, should seem no more happy than before he received the news? What could we think, except that he did not believe, or at least only half believed, that it was really so? And the world will be sure to judge us in like manner, if professing to believe ourselves heirs to a heavenly inheritance, we fret and despond over our trials like them who have no such blessed hope.

2. The fruit of tribulation. Vs. 3–5. "Let us also (R. V.) rejoice in our tribulations." In peaceful contemplation of the heavenly life, with nothing to annoy us, it is easy enough for Christians to rejoice. The true test comes when things go contrary to our wishes, and trials and afflictions befall us. Can we bear them all with a sense of exultant triumph as so many stepping-stones to victory? Even the great Captain of our salvation "was made perfect through suffering," and it was just before his crucifixion, when he began to feel the shadows of Gethsemane falling dark and heavy on his soul, that we are told he "rejoiced in spirit." Tribulation—letting this word stand for all the crosses and trials which are an inevitable part of human existence—"worketh patience." It gives us that fortitude and endurance without which we cannot be good soldiers of Jesus Christ. "And patience, experience;"—a tried, tested, proved character, like silver that has been through the refiner's furnace. "And experience, hope." Every battle gained brings us nearer the end of our warfare. The blessedness of an assured hope is not for the lazy Christian, but for him who is constantly making progress—slow, perhaps, but sure—towards the goal; who, through the discipline of sins conquered and trials faithfully endured, is conscious that he is growing daily more and more into the likeness of his Saviour. "And hope maketh not ashamed." How often men build great hopes on the foundation of some worldly expectation, and when it fails them they have not only the bitter disappointment to bear, but the still more bitter mortification and chagrin. But a hope founded on Christ, and tested by years of service, will never disappoint us, because it is founded on nothing less than the love of God as manifested through him, "which is shed abroad;" literally, as Godet has it, poured out of God's heart into ours. "By the Holy Ghost." This is the heavenly agent, the divine channel through which this love is communicated to us. It is through his abiding presence with us that we receive all these fruits of faith—the earnest of the fruits of faith—the earnest of the fruits of the heavenly Zion.

3. The exceeding love of God and his Son for sinners. Vs. 6–8. "For when we were yet without strength"—perfectly helpless to save ourselves—"Christ died for the ungodly." All sin is weakness, and the whole human race is born into this condition of moral feebleness.

> "But as feeble babes that suffer,
> Toss and cry, and will not rest,
> Are the ones the tender mother
> Holds the closest, loves the best,"

so the sight of humanity's helplessness called out God's tenderest compassion. "In due time." Everything in its season, from the time of harvest to the redemption of a world. God's great plans were ages in unfolding. Then let us be patient when we see small results from our labors. The "due time" may not have come. "For scarcely"—or hardly—"for a righteous man will one die," etc. The difference between "righteous" and "good" seems to be that between an individual who always does the just and right thing in his dealings with his fellow-men, but never goes beyond the limits of strict justice, and another who is not only all this but something beyond;—whose heart prompts him to do deeds of kindness and self-sacrifice for others to whom he is under no obligation. Such an one might call forth an ardor of devoted, affectionate gratitude, which would make it easy to die for him. But God's love commends itself to us as higher than any human love, in that "while we were yet sinners"—neither "righteous," nor "good," but the exact opposite, "hateful and hating"—"Christ died for us."

4. The largeness of our salvation. Vs. 9–11. "Much more then," if God so loved us while in that condition, must he love us with our changed and renewed natures. And if through the death of his Son we were saved, how confidently can we look for complete salvation, and an "abundant entrance" at last, through a present, ever-living Saviour.

Literature.

The Family Circle: Original and Selected Anecdotes. Written and Edited by H. L. Hastings, Editor of the Christian. Pp. 318. Boston: H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill. Price, 85 cents.

During his twenty years' work as the editor of various moral and religious publications, Mr. Hastings, of course, found in books and papers coming his way much worth preserving in a more permanent and convenient form; and then numerous incidents and anecdotes came to his knowledge and he wrote them out, or had them furnished to him for publication. This is why we have in this comely volume more than 200 choice anecdotes, sketches and suggestions, comprising a great variety of subjects, and teaching wholesome lessons in practical life. In the family, especially to the younger members, we believe it will afford a rich fund of entertainment, and leave the best impressions upon their minds regarding Bible Christianity, purity and usefulness—lessons never to be forgotten during the battle of life—lessons that will tend to lead the reader to the Rock of salvation for help and guidance.

Address to the American People on the Signs of the Times. By a Business Man. Pp. 61. Paper. Published by its author, W. D. Rutledge, 219 Chestnut street, St. Louis, Mo. Price, 15 cents.

Mr. Rutledge is a Christian and a business man. His religious experience possesses some remarkable features and is told with an enthusiasm that bears testimony to its fullness and satisfaction. Called of God, as he believes, to the work of an evangelist, he consecrated his talents to the Lord's cause, and one of the results of this consecration is this little book of warning against the sins of the world and the flesh which beset our fallen humanity on every hand. His warnings are intelligently and earnestly given against the lodge and the allurements to live a godless, worldly life. The Public School question is prominently discussed, with impressive warnings and suggestions founded upon existing facts and figures, which should be read and heeded by all Protestants. The price of this pamphlet places it within reach of most readers who love the Lord and are consequently interested in whatever promises to hasten the coming of his kingdom.

Current Periodicals.

Scribner's Magazine for October maintains the excellence of previous issues, and is replete with articles of sterling worth and interest, as follows. The illustrations are numerous and quite up to the high standard of this publication: The Northwest Mounted Police of Canada, by J. G. A. Creighton; The Mystery of the Red Fox, by Joel Chandler Harris; The Man of Letters as a Man of Business, by W. D. Howells; Glimpses of the French Illustrators (first paper), by F. N. Doubleday; In Viger Again, by Duncan C. Scott; Carleton Barker, First and Second, by Jno. K. Bangs; Historic Houses of Washington, by Teunis S. Hamlin; Scott's Voyage in the Light-house Yacht, by Robert Louis Stevenson; The Art of the White City (World's Fair), beautifully illustrated, by Will H. Low; Shriven, by H. C. Bunner; with others, editorials, etc. New York: Chas. Scribner's Sons. Price 25 cents.

The October Worthington's Magazine presents the usual number of acceptable features, both of pen and pencil. Mrs. Livermore concludes her interesting sketches of fifty years ago in Virginia; J. Stanley Brown contributes a second finely illustrated paper on the Pribolov (sealing) Islands; Sara A. Underwood offers a deserved tribute to Woman at the World's Fair; A French writer has a readable sketch of Some Nihilists whom he had met; there is a clear biographical sketch of Richard Owen, with a portrait, and the following short stories and poems: Autumn Song, by Richard Barton; A Manifest Destiny, a Story, by C. G. Dubois; Butterflies, by Herbert Bashford; Autumn (a poem), by W. S. Johnson; The Country Road (a poem), by Ella Gilbert Ives; Morning and Evening (a poem); The Tater-Bug Parson, a Tennessee story, by John P. Russell; Was it Consecrated Ground? a story, by M. B. Sanford; A Poet's Work; and the ordinary ten family departments, well-filled with pleasant comment. Hartford, Conn.: A. D. Worthington & Co. Price 25 cents.

The October number of Historia, devoted to illustrated historical stories, ably maintains the interest which this class of literature is sure to evolve. Youths in their teens, or even younger, will find a rare fund of entertainment in its seven well-written stories, viz.: How Joe Warren Captured the British, by Harold Bernard; A Trial by Battle, by Arthur Radin; Napoleon, First Consul and Emperor, by H. T. Rhodes; The Baron of Pentagoet, a Narrative of New England; Buccaneer Sir Henry Morgan, by Alexander Templeton; Henry Bernard, A Tale of the French Revolution, by Joseph Masters, and King Philip's War, by Cherry Odgers. Published at Room 20, Times Building, Chicago. Price 10 cents.

The Arena for October presents the following papers: The Psychology of Crime, by Henry Wood; A Ready Financial Relief, by W. H. Van Ornum; Judge Gary and the Anarchists, by M. M. Trumbull; Richard A. Proctor, Astronomer, by Rev. Howard MacQueary; Silver or Fiat Money, by A. J. Warren; Mr. Ingalls and Political Economy, by Wm. J. Armstrong; The South is American, by Joshua W. Caldwell; A Continental Issue, by Richard J. Hinton; Geo. Wentworth, by Dr. J. S. King; In de Miz, by LaSalle C. Pickett, with a portrait of the author, and others, with Book Notices, by several writers. Boston; The Arena Publishing Co. Price 50 cents.

St. Nicholas for October opens with an interesting paper, The Story of a Grain of Wheat, from its sowing to the flour-barrel, introducing views of the Washburne Mills in Minnesota. Other instructive and entertaining articles, copiously illustrated, are: Santo Domingo and the Tomb of Columbus; The Rajah of Sarawak; The White Cave (concluded); Fritz, the Master Fiddler; Toinette's Philip (continued); with several "in lighter vein"—jingles, sketches, poems, etc. An excellent number. New York: The Century Co. Price 25 cents.

Religious News.

BAPTIST.

—Work of the Missionary Union. The Standard says: "Besides the twenty or more missionaries whom Dr. Clough secured while in this country, there have sailed, or will have sailed, by November 21, this year, a total of ninety missionaries, including both men and women. Seventy of these are new workers, and twenty old ones returning to their old fields. Two-thirds of these will sail from Atlantic, and one-third from Pacific ports. About twenty of this number will sail from Boston, Saturday, September 30. The party going out to Western China under Mr. Upcraft, numbering in all fifty persons, three of whom, however, have gone via England, will sail from San Francisco, November 21. On the overland tour to the Pacific they will hold numerous meetings, beginning at Chicago, October 22, and going on through La Crosse, Winona, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Helena, Spokane, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland, Oakland, and San Francisco, holding service at each place."

CONGREGATIONAL.

—It is proposed to hold a series of missionary conventions in Indiana, early in November, in the interests of the home work, State and national.

—Rev. Leroy Warren, D. D., who has been superintendent of missions in Michigan since he was thirty years of age, has resigned. During twenty-five years of service he has had but two months of vacation. The net gain of Congregational churches has been 179, which is eleven more than that of any other State in the Union for the same period. For a considerable part of the time Michigan has had more home missionaries in the service than any other State.

JEWS.

—Prof. Lexis, the well-known statistician of Gottingen, has computed new data in regard to the Jews. According to his report in the Handwoerterbuch der Staatswissenshaft, the number of Jews on the globe is 7,403,000. The entire population of the earth is computed at 1,480,000,000; the Protestants at 153,000,000 and the Roman Catholics at 233,000,000. In Europe there are 6,800,000 Jews, of whom 3,600,000 are found in Russia, 1,860,000 in Austro-Hungary, 568,000 in Germany, 400,000 in Roumania, 97,000 in the Netherlands, 80,000 in Turkey, 56,000 in France, 46,000 in Great Britain, 40,000 in Italy, 24,000 in Bulgaria and East Rumelia. In the other European countries the Jewish contingent is less than 10,000.

The Iowa State Dairy Association will meet at New Hampton, November 14, 15, and 16.

The anti-Chinese agitation in La Grande, Oregon, culminated when an armed mob of two hundred men met outside the city limits at midnight of Sept. 25th, marched to the Chinese quarters and, after looting the houses, marched the Chinamen to the city limits and ordered them to leave. The officers attempted to quell the riot, but were overpowered. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the ringleaders. About thirty Chinese sought refuge in the house of Chinese Missionary Trumble. When the mob demanded their delivery Mrs. Trumble appeared with a Winchester rifle and announced that the first man to enter the house would be shot. The mob dispersed.

Turkey has been compelled by the United States government to make reparation for outrages perpetrated on American missionaries.

The Inter Ocean of Monday exposed a well-plied horse-trade swindle, being carried on in Chicago. It is advertising very common horses for sale, giving them a high pedigree, which pedigree is bogus. In this manner horses of ordinary value are sold for double price.

St. Joseph, Missouri, was visited by a destructive fire on Monday. It is estimated that $1,000,000 worth of property was burned—and all from a burning cigarette carelessly thrown among rubbish.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

President F. H. M. Henderson, Bowdon College, Ga.:—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

President Noah Porter, Yale College:—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

President Hitchcock, Amherst College:—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart burning among the students.

Joseph Moore, President Earlham College:—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

Howard Crosby, D. D., Chancellor University, New York:—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

Prof. J. R. Jacques, Illinois Wesleyan University:—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

Dr Beyschlag, Professor in the University of Halle:—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and open thing in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

Pres. J. Blanchard:—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The Cains of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrods have denied justice and practiced oppression, But both are combined in the lodge.

Prof. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary:—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

Prof. Burt G. Wilder, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.:—I am willing to hazard my position....upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

Prof. S. C. Bartlett, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary:—There are certain other wide-spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

Prof. J. G. Carson, D. D., Xenia, Ohio:—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

President C. G. Finney, of Oberlin, 1868:—We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment."

PROPHECY.

A STUDY.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER,
(College Agent N. C. A.)

In this booklet is found some views of truth not peculiar to the author, though for the first time put into book form; yet views which will doubtless be new to many. Its cheapness puts it into the hands of any earnest Bible student who desires light on certain phases of Christology. A hint only can be given of the contents by the following readings:

1. Prophecy: A Study of Christ's Com ings.
2. From Earth to Heaven.
3. The Resurrection.
4. From Law to Gospel.

The Greatest Thing in the World

The Perfected Life;

The Greatest Need in the World.

Both by Prof. Henry Drummond. Bound in chaste white vellum paper, each 20 cts.

These are not to be judged by the size, unless rubies are counted for the weight thereof. The first has been very largely circulated, the second is now only just published and deserves the same wide reading—both are gems such as are only found at rare intervals. If you have not read them, do so at once, you will be a better man or woman for the reading.

Home and Health.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

Avoid dangerous extremes in diet. Doubtless many people eat too much and too frequently, but many others suffer from insufficent diet. We should try to have such food as agrees with us, and eat regularly and sufficient to sustain the physical powers in strength and vigor. Some may be able to exist on one meal a day, but for the majority three meals, the last one of light food, will be found most satisfactory.

One of the best things to do these fine, golden, autumn days is to get out of doors as much as possible in a comfortable dress and take breathing exercise. In fact, it is good any time of year, but these days especially invite us out. We feel a great deal better every way for five minutes of deep, full breathing in the open air.

Do not start on a long journey by rail or without plenty of extra wraps. The weather is likely to change at any time, and nights are often cool when days are warm. A shawl strap with heavy shawls or rugs and a pillow will be found very useful where a sleeping-car is not taken.

Many people suppose they are hungry when they are only tired. Frequent eating between meals is very unhealthful as it encourages irritation of the stomach and bowels. A few minutes' rest will do more good than something to eat when you are overtired.

The much-gored skirt now worn is certainly better than the trails of last year, and if modified, and not so close fitting at the top, is a very sensible fashion. As some wear them they are far from being "modest apparel" however, as the figure is immodestly exposed.

If graham bread is not easily digested, try the whole wheat flour. In this you get all the wheat but the outer shell of the grain, and it is rich in phosphates which are lacking in fine wheat flour.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.
BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: Earnest Christian: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: 'A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction

Farm Notes.

WHY THE BOYS LEAVE THE FARM.

The answer is self-evident—perpetual toil in good weather all through the busy season, and perpetual loneliness in bad weather in most of the winter season. The time when the farmers have leisure is, in half the country, the very time when they cannot get away from home by reason of their isolation and bad roads; yet such is the hunger of the heart that the boys revolt against this unendurable loneliness and even now often walk miles through the rain or snow to spend half a day in sitting around the stove in a country store. Already, in many sections, the young people of both sexes have broken through the barriers and established farmers' clubs and little societies of one sort or another, and improved roads have done much to aid this relief. But why should not this natural tendency be reasonably directed, and all ages and both sexes enjoy their long winter evenings together?—Forum.

FRUITFULNESS OF SQUASHES.

The Hampshire Gazette furnishes a good suggestion for squash-growers in its statement that the main vine of the squash chiefly bears male blossoms, while the side branches produce the fruit. Keeping the main vine well pinched back, so as to encourage more side branches, is therefore a good way to make the vines more fruitful.

PROTECTION AGAINST INSECTS.

The old-fashioned bitter herb tansy has other uses than that of mixing with liquors for drink. Rubbing tansy on horses will drive the flies away, and it has a like effect on cows. It may be this is just what is needed to save cattle from the horn-fly in localities where this new enemy of stock has proven injurious.

ROASTER PIGS FOR PROFITS.

It is often the case that pigs fit for roasting, especially when there is a good demand for them, clear more profit to the owner than they will at any later period. This is especially true of fall pigs, which are hard to winter without stunting them. Crowd the pigs for roasters all that is possible. The better they are, the larger price they will bring per pound.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

Mrs. Rev. W. M. Howie, of 3557 Prairie avenue, is giving rooms, breakfast and evening dinner for $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75 per day, according to rooms occupied. By the week, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00. Parlors and bedrooms are all convenient, and furnished for rest and comfort. The residence is four miles from business center, and three from Fair grounds. The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

LE CARON, THE SPY.

A STARTLING REVELATION.

More enticing than a romance, filled with the strongest evidences of the power and evil of sworn secret societies, and plainly revealing the danger to any government growing out of political conspiracies, is the

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by persuing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers." Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS
OF
FLEMING H. REVELL.

Modern Ideas of Evolution.

As related to Revelation and Science. By Sir William Dawson, L. L. D., F. R. S., etc. 12 mo, cloth, $1.50.

In popular style, a testing by scientific facts and principles, the validity of that multiform and brilliant philosophy of the universe, which has taken so deep a hold of the science and literature of our times.

The New World of Central Africa

By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness; with a history of the first Christian mission on the Congo. Maps, Portraits and numerous engravings. 537 pages, 12 mo, $2.00.

This comprehensive volume is as fascinating as the most entertaining romance. Its vivid portrayal of the dark side of African history makes one's blood tingle, while its earnest appeals create an inspiring sympathy with the effort to evangelize its teeming millions.

Power From on High.

By Rev. B. Fay Mills. White vellum paper, 20 cents.

This little work, revised from stenographic notes of Mr. Mills' address before the National Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E., is exceedingly effective.

Matthew Henry's Commentary.

An entirely new large type edition of this inimitable Commentary, in six large 8vo. volumes, fine cloth, $15.00; or, in half Morocco, $18.00.

"Biblical students who are most familiar with the very best commentaries of this generation are most able to appreciate the unfading freshness, the clear analysis, the spiritual force, the quaint humor, and the evangelical richness of Matthew Henry's Exposition of the Old and New Testaments."—New York Observer

"First among the mighty for general usefulness we are bound to mention the man whose name is a household word—MATTHEW HENRY. He is the most pious and pithy, sound and sensible, suggestive and sober, terse and trust worthy."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer. 32 mo, 50 cents.

"It is sufficient to say its one direct aim is the present enjoyment of the precious promises. Mr. Meyer's earnest and persuasive teaching in this direction is admirably condensed in these brief chapters."

NEWS OF THE WEEK (Continued from 18th page).

John Connors and Eva Flint are held at Auburn, Indiana, charged with complicity in the express robbery at Kendallville.

At St. Louis, Mo., Marion Hedgepeth was found guilty of train robbery and sentenced to a term of twenty-five years.

Pending the action at Washington there is a disposition among bankers to move cautiously and curtail loans.

At Hazel Patch, Ky., a Louisville and Nashville passenger train was wrecked and four people are reported killed.

Near Gulfport, Miss., a passenger train went into an open switch. Three were killed and eight others injured.

President Cleveland has written a letter to Governor Northen, of Georgia, explicitly defining his ideas concerning finance. In criticising this letter to Northen, the London Standard predicts that it will retard rather than aid repeal of the silver bill.

Fire which swept the western portion of the Cherokee strip caused the loss of many lives and destroyed settlers' property.

Democratic committeemen are working on a new tariff bill, which they hope to be able to present for consideration soon.

Incendiaries fired the stables of the Stark county, Ohio, fair, causing the destruction of prize cattle and a loss of $75,000.

Diphtheria has again appeared in Terra Haute, Ind., and citizens fear a recurrence of last year's deadly epidemic.

Cigar-makers at Milwaukee have endorsed Governor Altgeld for releasing the Anarchists. They style the act as "fearless."

Frank Kendrick, a bank cashier at Syracuse, N. Y., has confessed that he is a defaulter for $30,000.

Joseph S. Hardin, the last of the Centralia train robbers, was captured at a house in Cincinnati.

Northwestern lumbermen have organized an insurance company of their own, patterned after the English Lloyds' plan.

Snowstorms are reported in portions of Pennsylvania and New York; cold also prevails thereabouts.

Business interests of the country are still hoping for action by the United States Senate upon silver repeal.

Forest fires are raging near Winchester, Ohio, and many residents have been driven from their homes.

Five Negro murderers were hanged in Montgomery county, Georgia. Residents turned out in crowds to see the execution.

Harley Johns and Sim Reynolds were sentenced to two years in prison at Macon, Mo., for attempting to wreck a train.

The Michigamme river, in Northern Michigan, overflowed on Thursday night, and burst through into the Mansfield mine, where the flood drowned twenty-eight of the miners at work there. By this disaster, the mine, valued at $600,000, was totally destroyed.

FOREIGN.

Attempting to escape from a synagogue at Warsaw, supposed to be on fire, nine persons were killed and 100 injured.

Members of the Italian government have been accused of receiving bribes from the recently suspended Bank of Rome.

Reports that the United States would take a hand in the Haytian troubles has caused a great stir among the people there.

In a battle at Santa Fe the Argentine insurgents were routed after a sharp engagement and their leaders captured.

France is accused of treating Siam ruthlessly, and the situation is again becoming strained.

The great German war-vessels have been found defective in construction.

The authorities of Vienna are doing everything possible to get to the bottom of the recent anarchist plot which threatened to destroy the House of Parliament together with a number of most prominent buildings on the famous Ringsstrasse. The police of the Austrian capital now claim that the Czechs were also implicated in the recent anarchist movement.

Advices from Rio de Janeiro indicate that the outlook for a modification of the situation in Brazil is brighter.

The Argentine government ironclad Independencia, now at Rossario, has captured the rebel warship Andes. The latter vessel was seized at Buenos Ayres while lying discharged and out of commission. When the Independencia was sighted by the rebels on board the Andes, the latter's officers took to the boats, and managed to escape ashore; the crew, however, was captured and will be tried by court-martial and sentenced to long terms of imprisonment.

The Soleil says that France is pushing forward with a great deal of vigor the erection of forts on the Alpine frontier.

M. de Villieres, the special envoy of France to the government of Siam, presented the draft of another treaty to the Siamese government, declaring that it must be accepted without alteration by Sunday next.

According to the military code, Pallas, the Spanish anarchist, who has been tried by court martial for throwing two bombs at General Martinez Campos, will be shot.

The formula of Ayer's Sarsaparilla is well known to the medical profession, and universally approved. The reputation of the firm guarantees excellence and uniformity in the medicine, and the world's experience for nearly half a century has fully demonstrated its value.

Talks to S. S. Teachers.

After a long and unavoidable delay, the author,

Rev. J. G. Terrill,

is ready to issue the above-named book. This book is the result of twenty years of experience in the practical work of the Sunday-school, the Teachers' Meeting, Conventions, and Lectures to Teachers. The work will be of 200 pages or more, divided into five departments:

I. The Sunday-school Organization and Management.
II. Methods of Work.
III. Studies in Human Nature.
IV. Rules of Interpretation as Applied to the Bible.
V. Illustrative Exercises, for Primary Classes and Children's Meetings.

As to the subject matter, the manner of treatment, and the price of the book, the author has kept in view the wants of the officer and teacher of ordinary talent and attainments.

Its price after February 1, 1891, will be 50 cents per copy.

All orders received before that time will be filled at 40 cents per copy, postpaid.

Too Slow in making clothes, this was. It had to go. And yet people thought it a pretty good thing in its day. Some of them couldn't believe, all at once, that there was anything better. Just so with every improvement. The old way always has some benighted ones who cling to it to the last.

Too Fast in ruining clothes, un-making them—that's the trouble with the washboard. But it's going now and going fast, to join the spinning-wheel. Women find it doesn't pay to rub their clothes to pieces over it. They can wash better with Pearline. Less work, less wear, no ruinous rub, rub, rub.

That's the modern way of washing—safe, easy, quick, cheap. No wonder that many women have thrown away the washboard.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19–22, commencing on Thursday at 2 P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath.

Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, Pastor A. L. Smith of South Newmarket, Pastor George L. Kibbee, of Manchester, Ezra T. McIntire of Boston, Pastor J. Q. Adams of Gilford Village, and others have been invited to speak. Barnstead Parade is on the Suncook Valley R. R., about 20 miles from Manchester. Reduced railroad rates expected.

We should be glad to have our friends in neighboring States, who desire to see the church delivered from lodge rule, meet with us. The Gospel will be preached in its purity, and the various reforms presented from a Christian standpoint.

We expect the Lord to be with us in mighty power, to bless and save. S. C. KIMBALL,
Secretary N. H. C. A.

NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

It is proposed to hold the next New York State Anti-Secrecy Convention at Utica. Officers of the State Association should at once address Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, at Schuyler's Lake, Otsego, Co., N. Y., and Rev. W. B. Stoddard, the Eastern agent, at 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass., with reference to the proper time and details of organization.

Elsewhere in this issue we print a summary of the proceedings of the Lake Front Congress of Christians opposed to secret societies. Next week we begin the publication of several of the papers read at this gathering, the consensus of which indicates the progress of thought along the lines of our reform.

Great diversity of opinion exists in the religious press as to the effect that the World's Fair Parliament of Religions, which closed Sept. 28, will have upon Christianity. It is more to the purpose to inquire what will become of those whose religions, as presented at the parliament, were in opposition to Christianity? The latter will stand forever, and its work is to convert the followers of all other religions to the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is also the duty of Christians to see that this work is done.

It is seldom that we have occasion to record such a fearful disaster as that which occurred last week on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, between New Orleans and Mobile, through the agency of a wind storm and tidal wave. Certainly we have no previous instance, in this country, where a commotion of the elements, in such a brief space of time, destroyed at least 2,250 human lives and property valued at $5,000,000. The giving away of levees and the flooding of the shores wrought most of this terrible havoc, drowning the inhabitants by hundreds. No sensible man can class these horrors as judgments upon the people, but they serve to remind the world of the power and majesty of God and warn the unsaved to be ready for death and the judgment.

A fierce war between Spain and her ancient foemen, the Moors, is now disturbing the peace of Europe. It is also more bitter because of its religious character. Following the lead of Mohammed, the Moslems take the sword in defence of their faith, and as Spain is a formidable military nation, the contest is likely to prove a bloody one. The conflict appears to have had its origin in a fruitless attack of the Riff tribes upon the Spanish garrison at Melilla, on the northern coast of Morocco. This was followed by an artillery fire from the fort upon a Moorish village, by which a mosque was destroyed. Instantly the entire Moorish population was aroused. The usual call to prayers by the muezzins was supplemented with a call to arms and a rally round the green flag of the prophet, and 12,000 of them at once surrounded Melilla, and the neighboring roads were alive with large forces hurrying to their support. Of course so formidable a demonstration caused a commotion in Spain, and naval and military preparations for war upon the Riffs were vigorously made. The situation at this writing is deemed critical.

GRACE AND TRUTH CAME BY JESUS CHRIST.

BY REV. ALEX. THOMSON.

The Light of God, most wonderful,
Came to the world of men,
And pierced, as with a glory-shaft,
The heavy dark's domain;
He placed beneath the reeling dome
That arched above our race
The staunchness and the glory of His pillars, Grace and Truth;
And o'er the dome of human life
The victory-flag unfurled,
For the power that now upholds it is
The power that made the world.

Oh, weak was human nature,
With its heavy load of fears,
With its faltering step uncertain,
With its smiles and with its tears;
And dense the cloud of ignorance
That settled over all,
Like the curtained chamber of the dead,
A black and heavy pall;
But the torch of Truth came flaming,
With its light on many things,
And the dove of Grace flew downward,
Shaking blessings from its wings;
For the Son of the Eternal,
In his everlasting youth,
Brought his wondrous grace to cheer us,
And, to guide us, noble truth.

Now we see the wondrous meaning
Of the hidden things of Him
Who maintains his gracious counsels
In a hundred shadows dim,
Till the time of their appearing,
When he takes the veil away,
And their splendid corruscations
Pale the glory of the day.
Now we see the truth far-reaching—
God, the Father of us all;
Not a nation move without him—
Not a single sparrow fall;
Now we know the foe that clogs us,
All the way we take,
With thirst for blood of human souls
The whole world cannot slake;
Now we know of that dread prison
Whose dark arches never rung
With the laughter of an infant,
Or the song of happy tongue.

But we know our foe is mastered
By our living, loving Lord,
And the legions of perdition
Routed by his victor sword;
When the night of death dark gathered
With impenetrable fold
So the Resurrection lightens
All the east with ruddy gold;
For the grace of God that bringeth
Rich salvation unto men
Is the bow that lights and gladdens
In the cloud gloom and the rain.

THE PROCESS OF MASONIC PERSECUTION.

All Masons are bound by their obligations to make the enemies of the order their own, and to point out to the fraternity all expelled, suspended and persecuted members as "unworthy" of confidence or intercourse. This cannot be done openly, as their proceedings would be revealed to the uninitiated. It must be done clandestinely, by secret signs, specimens of which are given in the "Secret Monitor" degree of Richardson's exposition. If done openly, it would not be Freemasonry, according to Webster, who defines it as a communication by preconcerted signals. It must be done Masonically. The notoriety of their methods has added a two-fold definition to our language.

The reader can easily imagine their proceedings, as they appear to the initiated. As soon as the expelled Mason leaves his door, he is pointed out by a Masonic acquaintance to a strange member by a double rap, two-ply remark, or cat'o-nine-tail flirt of the fingers, and the stranger passes it to a second, and the latter to a third, and so on indefinitely. When the obnoxious party enters an assembly, he is pointed out by twenty acquaintances to twenty strangers, and by the latter to twenty others, and then to each new arrival by a general concert of signals. In the street car he is pointed out by an acquaintance to a stranger, and by the latter to another at the second block, and so on to the extent of the city. When he enters a car for a journey, an acquaintance points him out to a stranger, and the latter to another at the next station, and the second to a third at the succeeding one; and so on, across the continent and beyond. There is no cessation in time or place, for the conspiracy pursues the victim with the habit of discipline to the end of his days, and materializes in impediments to business, or injuries, according to the odium in which he is held by the order. The boycott is furthered by female adherents, which gives to it its anti-social features, and makes it equivalent to the Druidical prohibition of fire and water, said to hurry its victims to the grave.

But the enemies of Masonry are not confined to members. and they are evidently outsiders to point out. The Morgan controversy proved that it had its jacks to ape its ways in pointing out and persecuting its enemies. It undoubtedly operates outside the order in two ways. It is said to be the only society that permits outsiders to use its signs, and is consequently a secret empire by mutual consent and operation. Who ever heard of a jack Odd-fellow, or a jack Knight of Pythias? If so, it is a misapplication. The reader can, therefore, conceive a promiscuous throng engaged in pointing out the enemies of Masonry, and material for Masonic riots, false witness and the crimes outside the order.

It is time that less attention was paid to theory and more to the practice of Masonry. The former is merely intended to befog the inquirer and divert attention. What would be thought of a minister who prayed one-half of the time and broke the commandments the other half? Yet this is paralleled by Masonic writers in their virtuous professions. We would judge a minister by his practices and not by his prayers, and this is what we should do with Masons. The bright side of the institution is made so for the unwary, but the dark side would put to shame "the father of all evil."

Some engaged in the Anti-masonic reform are insufficiently informed of the real nature and extent of Masonry. Others are the spies who are everywhere present to detect the enemies of the order and wrangle about methods for its benefit. A third class are striving for applause or profit, but are secretly wedded to the evil and fear most knocking the bottom out of their own iniquities. It is evident that neither class will do material injury, but limit themselves to profitless theories, in which the institution has its stronghold, and disregard practice and essentials.

The most active and zealous pointer of the enemies of Masonry that the writer ever met was a reverend gentleman and pretended reformer, a Mr. H—, whom it would be difficult to interpret, in view of the Bible test, that a wicked man winks with his eyes, speaks (raps) with his feet, and teaches (commands) with his fingers. But perhaps he had been commissioned by the Lord, and his proceedings are explicable by the initial chapters of Hosea, which are recommended for perusal as aptly illustrating present events. They are as applicable to Masonry as to Baalism, and an example of symbolic (i. e., indirect) language, of which Masons speak and largely avail themselves.

Some think that the ministers who have joined this "Baal-peor" (Ronayne) should be judged leniently because the offence is so common among all classes. But they are the sentinels on the walls; and as in the case of those in the wars of the world, destruction or the gravest consequences to the hosts behind follow their treachery or desertion, and they should be visited with the severest penalties. In either case the safety of all depends upon them. In the wars of the world the treacherous sentinel is shot without mercy, and in the other case, he should be reprobated and execrated above all men. He sacrifices the sleeping multitude and makes a mockery of the reverence and livelihood accorded him. On initiation nothing, as stated by Masons, surprises and shocks the neophyte so much as the knowledge of the common level of ministers in his iniquities and degradation. Plain Dealing.

THE REFORMER'S END.

The ultimate hope of a reformer may be the complete abolition of the sin against which he contends. He cannot always see this with his own eyes—that may be for his children's children—but there are more immediate rewards that he himself can enjoy. One is the beginning of the end, or the reduction of the evil, while another is saving men all the way along. Paul could not see the complete overthrow of paganism or the entire abolition of sin in his lifetime; yet it was a joy to strive so that he might "by all means save some."

This is a defence against discouragement; for, while the end is too far off to see, and distant results seem uncertain, and while progress is slow, or even retrogression, and discourages for the time being, there is still the chance to rescue those who but for us would have been destroyed.

A temperance worker can rejoice in this, when he sees saloons standing open, legislation retarded, or the execution of law nullified. Some are sober, nevertheless, who might have been drunkards; the saloons lack customers whom they would have had, and for a few who are already rescued the dilatory legislation is no longer needed. He has "saved some."

The same immediate end allures and cheers a worker in lodge reform, even though he may find, in the evil he contends against, elements so permanent that from the ages when Israel was snared to the end of all time in which sin reigns, absolute extinction of the essence of lodgery cannot be expected. He can hinder the mischief it does, even when he cannot eradicate the agency. He can warn a few who are unwary; he can break the snare for a few already entrapped; he can "by all means save some."

Meanwhile, by this very work he is also hastening the time when the great organized agency of evil itself will be diminished and weakened, and when more will be saved because their enemy will have less power to do them harm.

Even if his ultimate hope should never be realized, his work will not have been in vain, and he will not have been completely disappointed.

It is wise, then, for the reformer to fix his attention and hopes largely on this nearer aim. Evangelists are a class of reformers who turn their own thoughts chiefly this way, paying less attention to questions concerning the final conquest of the whole world than to those affecting the life of their contemporaries in a single little town. Yet, in this very way, the whole world is, in effect, being saved. Temperance workers, to a large extent, imitate them, and lodge reformers will save themselves from discouragement and mistakes if they fall into line, and make it a large part of their work merely to "save some." Graphite.

"NEW ENGLAND."

Reading Elder Kimball's article in the Cynosure of September 28, I regret that he allows his curiosity to overshadow the real question. It is of no possible interest who I am.

Elder Kimball admits that he cannot deny my assertions. He notes that Senator Chandler is not a Mason, which I admitted. It is good Masonry to have one leading man who is not a Mason—even several—to point to when occasion requires. How many more can Elder Kimball name?

He says it is not good Anti-masonry to exaggerate the power of Masonry. Have I exaggerated? If the worthy President of the N. H. C. A. "believes that the anti-secret forces can control public affairs," I am glad of it, and hope to see them do so soon.

Elder Kimball is curious, also, to know if I am "a confessed Christian and a confessed Anti-mason." Why? Facts are facts, truth is truth. I intended to, and believe I did, state facts. I am not afraid of the light, but until Elder Kimball, or some other person, shows that my assertions were not true, there really seems no good reason why I should not still remain New England.

THE ANARCHISTS OF VIENNA.

The arrest of fourteen anarchists in Vienna on the 23d of September, and the capture the following day of sixty-eight members of a secret society at Bruenn, the capital of Moravia, has revealed the existence of a wide-spread anarchist plot. On the 25th seven others of the gang were arrested. The proof against them all is said to be overwhelming, and the persons concerned in the plot are known to be anarchists of the worst type. One of the men arrested is a leading manufacturer of bombs, who lives in Prague, and another named Stulka is a skillful mechanic.

Every one of the prisoners was found to have in his possession bombs or cartridges that were ready for use. To the inside linings of the overcoats worn by Stulka and a man called Hahnels were attached strong plaited wires with hooks at the ends. It is surmised that these were devices to allow of the suspension of bombs.

In Stulka's room were found rolls of zinc and lead, and glass and metal cylinders. The police seized a number of bombs made of tin, charged with ecrasite and picric acid. A large, finely finished steel bomb was also found. This contained a liquid that has not yet been analyzed. An oblong tin box was discovered, the contents of which were apparently intended to have been exploded by electricity. Conducting wires were attached to the box, which contained several glass plates and small quantities of ecrasite and picric acid.

A mass of papers was also seized. Among them were documents showing beyond doubt that the members of the club were affiliated with a Bohemian secret society known as the "Omlading." It is probable that the anarchists were about to take advantage of the political turmoil in Bohemia to start a campaign of terror against the government. The police declare that the conspiracy they have unearthed is the most formidable plot the anarchists have ever concocted in Vienna.

THE "PATRIOTIC ORDERS."

The following declarations of the so-called "Patriotic orders" are taken from the Columbus (Ohio) Record, the organ of the A. P. A. and other secret political organizations.

We notice that while they claim to be non-partisan societies, they are extremely partisan in their principles:

JUNIOR ORDER UNITED AMERICAN MECHANICS, INSTITUTED MAY 17, 1853—WHAT IT IS.

It is neither a labor, partisan nor sectarian organization. It is a purely patriotic and benevolent institution, existing for the protection of Americans and American institutions, and the promulgation of a spirit of patriotism among the youth of to-day. It is not bigoted in its beliefs and principles, as many seem to imagine, but is friendly to all good citizens, whatever their creed or birth.

It opposes unrestricted immigration, believing that a large proportion of the foreigners who come to our shores are deficient in the qualities essential to good citizenship in this country, and for that reason favors the adoption of some system for the separation of the "wheat from the chaff."

Love of country and the protection of its interests is the platform upon which the order stands, and invites all who are of the same mind to enter its ranks.

ELIGIBILITY FOR MEMBERSHIP.

Any white male person born in the United States of North America, its territories, or under the protection of its flag, who shall have attained the age of 18 years, who is of good moral character, a believer in the existence of a Supreme Being as the creator and preserver of the universe, in favor of free education, opposed to any union of church and state, shall be eligible to membership, but no person shall be received to beneficial membership who is over 50 years of age.

OBJECTS.

1. To maintain and promote the interests of Americans and shield them from the depressing effects of foreign competition.

2. To assist Americans in obtaining employment.

3. To encourage Americans in business.

4. To establish a sick and funeral fund.

5. To maintain the public school system of the United States of America, to prevent sectarian interference therewith, and to uphold the reading of the Holy Bible therein.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

The constant landing upon our shores of the hordes of ignorant, vicious and lawless criminals of the old world should be viewed with alarm by the loyal and patriotic citizens of this country.

We affirm a warm and hearty welcome to all immigrants who desire to better their condition and become a part and parcel of our nationality, but we have not one square inch of room for the Anarchist, the Socialist and the Nihilist, or for any one who is not willing to bow allegiance to that flag which is powerful enough to shield and protect them, as well as us, in the exercise of all civil and religious liberty.

We affirm our devotion to the public school system of this country. We believe in compulsory education, and that all teaching in our schools should be in the English language, to the end that future generations may be able to take their place in the ranks of our country's workers, educated in the history, the customs and manners of Americans.

We guarantee to every man the liberty of worshiping God according to the dictates of his own conscience, and would give every assistance to protect all in the exercise of this liberty, but we object most strenuously to the interference of any church, no matter under what name it may exist, in the temporal affairs of this country.

We believe that the Bible should be read in our public schools, not to teach sectarianism, but to inculcate its teachings. It is the recognized standard of all moral and civil law; we therefore believe that our children should be educated in its teachings, but that no dogma or creed should be taught at the same time.

We believe that patriotism and love of country should be instilled into the hearts of children, and that with the sacred words of "Mother, Home and Heaven," our children should be taught that our flag is the symbol of all that makes a "home" for us. We should place a flag upon every public school in our land, and a Bible within, and the object lesson therein set forth should be a beacon light in every storm that threatens to engulf us.

In this noble and patriotic work we ask the cordial and hearty co-operation of all good citizens. In this grand work we need the helping hand of all organizations holding the same views and principles. We have no time for jealousies and bickerings, but with a united front we should march forward, shoulder to shoulder, remembering that "United we stand, divided we fall."

In the strictest sense we are a national political organization, but we oppose with unanimity the slightest taint of partisanship. "Our country" is our motto, and we keep this motto steadily before us. We are cognizant that there are great and powerful enemies within our midst, requiring the strictest surveillance of all who are at heart, word and in deed American. We, as members of this order, affirm our allegiance to the objects of the order, as paramount to any partisan affiliation, and urge upon the membership, harmonious, united and intelligent action in carrying out these principles.

The order is established in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Delaware, New Jersey, West Virginia, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Texas, Louisiana, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Washington and California. The membership is about 150,000, and 1,550 councils.

PRINCIPLES OF THE A. P. A.

1. Nationality is not a bar to membership in the order. No man is asked where he was born.

2. We interfere with no man's partisan politics.

3. We attack no man's religion so long as he does not attempt to make his religion an element of political power.

4. We unite to protect our country and its free institutions against the secret, intolerant and aggressive efforts that are persistently being set forth by a certain religio-political organization to control the government of the United States and destroy our blood-bought civil and religious liberty.

5. We are in favor of preserving constitutional liberty and maintaining the government of the United States.

6. We regard all religio-political organizations as the enemies of civil and religious liberty.

7. It is, in our opinion, unwise and unsafe to appoint or elect to civil, political or military office in this country, men who owe their supreme allegiance to any foreign king, potentate or ecclesiastical power, and who are sworn to obey such power.

8. We are in favor of maintaining the principle of ONE general unsectarian free school organization, and will oppose all attempts to supplant it by any sectarian institution.

9. We are opposed to all attempts, local or national, to use public funds for any sectarian purpose.

10. We are in favor of laws taxing all church property.

11. We are in favor of changing our immigration laws in such a manner that they will protect our citizen laborers from the evil influences of cheap pauper and criminal labor, which through the instrumentality of European propagandist societies, and in this country by the aid of strikes, and the subtile influence of priests, are rapidly supplanting our free and educated American citizens in every line of industry.

12. We believe there should be an educational qualification to the elective franchise that will require every "American citizen" to be Americanized.

13. We are in favor of putting into office honest and true patriots, who are best qualified to fill the position regardless of political parties.

14. We are willing to be governed by these principles in our future political action.

15. Our mission is to awaken the people of free America from their lethargy, indifference and over-confidence. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," yet the Protestants of this republic have ceased to be vigilant, and in conscious strength are either intently chasing the almighty dollar, or quietly dozing, while we swiftly drift toward a more tremendous and terrible crisis than this country has yet known.

IS RELIGION DYING OUT?

The able and excellent article in your July number by Rev. B. B. Tyler proves conclusively that it is not. The church of Christ can never be destroyed. "No weapon that is formed against it shall prosper." "He was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil," and "He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied." Doubtless statistics do prove that the increase in the number of churches, in church membership and church wealth, as well as in the Christian ministry, is in a greater ratio than the increase of population. But, to my mind, the apparent inference is misleading and far too optimistic. The general conditions of society do not show an increase of Christian influence corresponding with this increase of numbers. While the quantity of our religion has increased, its quality seems to have deteriorated. The salt seems to have lost its savor. Without depreciating the wonderful activity of a portion of the church, I think, in common with many others, that the general tone of piety is deplorably low—in fact, Laodicean—and that the element of self-sacrifice has largely dropped out of the average Christian experience.

In proof of this there are certain obvious facts that it would be as hard to get round as the good brother's statistics. I notice:

1. Increase of Christian influence ought to indicate more of purity and stability in the family relations. On the contrary, divorces have very largely increased, and their frequency has become a source of alarm. Not until within a few years did we hear the monstrous question, "Is marriage a failure?"

2. More of true religion ought to indicate greater sacredness of human life; but statistics show that the number of suicides is largely increasing, both in Europe and our own land, while the increase of homicides is beyond all precedent. Lynching has become terribly prevalent, and all forms of crime have continually increased.

3. More religion ought to indicate greater quietness of spirit and freedom from mental disease; but, instead, the proportion of insane persons has nearly doubled, being one out of 127, when formerly it was not more than one in 250.

4. More religion would indicate, other things being equal, more general contentment and greater loyalty to civil authority. On the contrary, the past year has been one of exceeding unrest. Three times have large bodies of troops been called out to repress domestic insurrection.

5. More religion ought to diminish the consumption of intoxicating drinks. Every genuine revival of religion has had that influence. This was notably true of the widespread revival of 1857-58. Yet in spite of the vast temperance work, the amount of alcohol consumed per capita has steadily increased for the last thirty years.

6. Perhaps no more marked evidence of declining Christian influence can be found than is indicated by our two great national fairs. The great majority of the people regard the first day of the week as a sacred day. Such was the deference to the Christian sentiment in our land, that in 1876 the Centennial Fair was closed on Sunday from the first to the last, and the people accepted it as a matter of course. In 1893 the Christian influence, even when supported by national legislation, was powerless to secure Sunday closing. Nothing but the stern logic of profit and loss would suffice.

In view of these sad things (the other side of the picture) I am sorry to say that I cannot join in the refrain:

"The morning light is breaking,
The darkness disappears."

In the midst of this gloom I look for the coming of the Holy One. "Even so, come quickly, Lord Jesus."—Rev H. H. Hinman, in the Church Union.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

"Why do publishers of religious papers continue subscriptions until orders are received to discontinue them?" That is a fair question and deserves a fair answer. We have four main reasons for our rule. First, We can trust our subscribers. They are honest and reliable. They will pay for what they receive. If secular papers had as good a class of subscribers as we have, they would be willing to trust their patrons also. Second, We want to accommodate and please our subscribers. The vast majority of them want the paper without any intermission. Many would be grieved, and some offended, if we would withhold their copies or drop their names because they did not renew the very week that completed the time for which they had paid. Perhaps not more than one in three hundred wants his paper stopped without his order. Third, Our plan is in accordance with the right principle. Every family should receive a religious paper regularly. Every Christian family is expected to have its church paper every year. So a subscription is not generally made for a definite time, although the payment is so made. A subscription does not expire, because it is not limited. It must be killed. A subscription to a religious paper is like a subscription to a pastor's salary, in that it continues from year to year, unless ordered discontinued. Fourth, This is the best business plan. It is best for the subscribers and the publisher. It is the almost universal method of religious papers and some of the best secular papers after years of experience. Many patrons who want their papers continued to them, fail through oversight, inconvenience, absence from home and other causes to renew promptly. To discontinue their papers and then to look after them, secure them as new subscribers and put their names on the list again, would cost one-third more on total subscriptions. We would have to charge every subscriber, whether paying in advance or not and whether wishing to continue indefinitely or not, two dollars a year. By our plan, each subscriber saves fifty cents a year on subscription and expends only a cent for a postal card, when he wishes to discontinue. If the dozens who want their papers stopped find it a trouble to notify us when it may be done by a card, think how much trouble it would be for the thousands who wish to continue to go to town, get an order or draft and mail it promptly the week their time was out, or else miss the next number. Our plan saves us money, which lessons the cost of the paper to the subscriber and enables us to make a better paper.—Omaha Midland.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Political parties and candidates in New England.—A deficiency in our English tongue.—Prohibition in Maine.—The Yankee dialect and Shakespeare.—A question.—A new Messiah.—Pythianism and the churches.

If the Democratic party should win the victory in Massachusetts this fall she will have for her Lieutenant-Governor a man who is a graduate of Holy Cross College, and it is safe to say did not go through the curriculum of that institution without imbibing some of the principles of his Jesuitical instructors. The step is not a very long one to nominating a Roman Catholic for the Chief Executive, but it will not be well for the party which does it. As Whittier said years ago, in reference to the slave power,

"The spirit of her early time is with her even now."

She is still the heart of New England, and not as yet of New Ireland.

The nominee of the Prohibition party, Rev. Louis A. Banks, is one who has lifted up his voice among other good and true men in Music Hall against Romish encroachments, and his record has been along that of an all-around reformer. I am not sure of his exact attitude on the lodge question, but know that he does not sympathize with secret methods. He was a pastor in Seattle during the anti-Chinese riots in 1885-86, and preached on the subject eloquently and fearlessly, in spite of threats to take his life "if he didn't keep his mouth shut." After he had finished his sermon he turned out with other armed citizens to protect the Chinamen from the rage of the mob until the Federal troops arrived. As a reform preacher, he has met the usual stereotyped objection to such work in the pulpit, and thus trenchantly disposes of it: "When I was in Seattle, in the days of the anti-Chinese riots, and denounced the murders of the Chinamen from my pulpit, I was piously advised to devote myself 'to saving souls.' When in Boise City, Idaho, I denounced the growing disposition to cringe to the Mormon sentiment there, some of the time-serving, political newspapers severely reminded me that it was my business 'to save souls.' And now in Boston, when I denounce the cruel combinations of capital which defeat honest and free competitons in the labor world, and defend the laborer's right to share in the advantages that have accrued from the inventions of our day, I am not astonished to hear the old tune: 'It is your business to save souls!' Very few ministers—and, indeed, I doubt if there are any—have preached against popular evils without noticing this tendency "to turn the ministry aside to dealing with ghosts," as Mr. Banks sarcastically puts it.

The Prohibitionists have acted wisely in thus nominating a "Labor candidate" of the highest type, and one who ought to poll a large vote from the working class for the ability and wholehearted zeal with which he has espoused their cause.

The present unjust discrimination against new or "minority" parties must continue; for so the full bench of the Supreme Judicial Court has decided, in the late test case brought by Dr. A. A. Miner, whose name as candidate for Senator was not put on the official ballot because the certificate of his nomination did not show that the twenty-five voters were present which the law, as it now stands, requires at every caucus. It is hard to see why Dr. Miner is not right when he says that the Australian Ballot law, until it is modified in this particular, is unconstitutional, as it practically disenfranchises the minority voter.

Our English tongue, copious as it is, has failed to provide for a good many contingencies that may arise in the use of language. For instance, a Mason or Odd-fellow can speak of "the fraternity," but there is no corresponding term for the use of the sisters who belong to the back-stairs degrees. They cannot fraternize with or even "fellowship" one another. And how can domestic service ever be lifted to the dignity of a science, which we are continually being told is all that it needs in order to bring peace and joy into households afflicted with poor help or no help, until it has received a proper scientific name? A nameless science is as badly off as Romish theologians make out unchristened infants. It must always be doomed to wander on "the border lines of knowledge," pent up in a limbo of chaos and half-digested notions—neither one thing nor another. But the proper scientific nomenclature has at last been discovered. It is Oekology. This is a discovery made at the Hub, of course, but it is an excellent one and meets, as advertisers and agents say, "a long-felt want of the public." I once had help who objected very decidedly to having her services designated as "kitchen-work." It sounded too menial. Oekology, now, would have made everything right.

A big molasses hogshead aroused the suspicions of some Maine officials, the other day, who opened it and found another barrel inside filled with "the ardent," the bungholes of both being placed opposite so as to admit of drawing it without any trouble. Prohibition doesn't prohibit in Maine when they have to resort to such shifts to evade the law. Oh, no. Still we should feel reasonably well-satisfied with prohibition in Boston if it drove her liquor venders to have recourse to devices as ingenious.

I have always contended that our Yankee dialect is worthy of study, from the fact that it is really the old English which our ancestors used centuries ago; and I find, to my great delight, that a correspondent of the Transcript, after giving his days and nights to a Shakespearian Concordance and picking out some hundreds of so-called Yankee words and phrases, has come to the same conclusion. "Madded," in the sense of to make angry, is a very common Yankeeism. It is also purely Shakespearian. So are "heft," "tomboy," "gadding," "everlastingly," "flibbert-tigibbert," "dished;" and a host of others. Our Yankee dialect is fast passing away, and I feel, in view thereof, not a little sympathy with the Celt who sees his own musical Irish tongue disappearing before the all-conquering Queen's English. A people driven to extremity before their foes will always retreat to the hills. It is something so with a language when hard bestead, and, therefore, to hear the Yankee dialect in its native perfection one must seek the hill country of northern New England. It ought to be a fascinating study for the philologist. The Southern dialect, of which writers from that section have of late years given us a disagreeable surfeit, lacks dignity and pedigree, but our Yankee dialect has both. Talk of old things! Did you ever think that we daily toss about in our common speech words that our Anglo-Saxon forefathers and foremothers used before Shakespeare, or even Chaucer, was born? A bit of ancient tapestry or faded parchment we handle reverently. Why not use, with equal reverence, our grand old mother-tongue that is older than they, and will live on in perennial youth when they have crumbled into dust.

The writer of the fashion notes in a certain paper tells approvingly how a young woman, with more feminine ingenuity than means, contrived to imitate for herself a twenty-five-dollar imported hat so closely that no one could tell it from the original. The question arises, how many other young women may be led by this mischievous item to spend precious time in trying to ape fashions beyond their means.

Henry B. Foulkes' strange statement at Onset Bay Camp-meeting, that he is the Messiah, has caused a great fluttering among the theosophists, in whose ranks he has so long been a leading mind, as well as that "liberal" element which has such an affinity for anything in the line of the marvellous or supernatural which does not bear the stamp of revelation. As a rule, these new Messiahs have been confined to the West, and it is something unique to hear such a proclamation on New England soil. It simply emphasizes the danger of meddling with such delusions. The unfortunate victims stand in danger of losing their heads here as well as their souls hereafter.

"Be exceedingly cautious," says the Pythian Herald, "in relation to the churches or cisms that preach anathema on Pythianism." This allusion is especially aimed at the Romish church and the Kilkenny cat-fight now going on between Rome and the Knights of Pythias; but the advice is very good, taken the other way. Should not our churches be exceedingly "cautious" of an order which practically anathematizes the name of Jesus Christ, and holds its members in a despotic subjection as contrary to the Christian law of liberty as it is opposed to our free republican government? OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 4, 1893.

Representative McCreary's bill, which is intended to be a substitute for the Geary Chinese registration and exclusion law, has been favorably reported to the House of Representatives and will probably be taken up soon after the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws, now under consideration, is disposed of, unless Congress takes a recess, which it may do if the Senate succeeds in disposing of the Voorhees silver purchase repeal bill by the 15th or 20th of the month. This bill extends for a period of six months from date of its becoming a law, the time within which the Chinese now in the United States may register; strikes out the word "white" wherever it is used in the Geary law, descriptive of the radical character of the witnesses to be produced by a Chinaman in support of his right to remain in the country, and more clearly defines the meaning of the term "Chinese laborer." The vote of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was with one exception unanimous for the bill. The exception was Representative Geary, of California, author of the present Chinese Exclusion law, who gave notice that he would oppose the bill with all the resources at his command. But the bill will probably become a law, as there are numerous Representatives and Senators who voted for the Geary bill who will be glad of the opportunity to modify that law.

A series of interesting public meetings are being held this week in two Washington churches —one Congregational and one Methodist—to popularize the Auxiliary League of the Salvation Army, a branch of which was established here a few months ago. The meetings are conducted by female officers of the Salvation Army, assisted by members of that organization, and include afternoon meetings for ladies and children and evening meetings for the general public. The object of the Auxiliary League, as stated by the principal speaker at these meetings, is to be a link between the churches and the Salvation Army, made up of those sympathizing with the objects of the Army though not necessarily approving its every method. The work of the Army in its various branches explained in an entertaining manner by the several speakers, and the result will be a considerable increase in the membership of the Auxiliary League, which already includes some of our ministers and prominent business men. Few who have studied the work of the Salvation Army in the slums of our large cities will deny that it accomplishes much good, however repugnant some of its methods may at first glance appear to persons of quiet and refined natures. It is the ignorant, depraved and unrefined that the Army seeks to save, leaving the organized churches to look after the refined, and probably in accordance with the old-time injunction to "fight the devil with fire," it has adopted unrefined methods to do it. I was once very much prejudiced against the Salvation Army, but long ago learned to respect it and its members because of the good results I have seen of their work, and became convinced that they, too, are engaged in the Master's work. The Salvation Army may be said to represent the brass bands, or, if you please, the drum and fife corps of the great army of Christianity which is battling daily and hourly with the cohorts of Satan and his lieutenants, rum, crime and moral depravity, and there is little doubt that their noise adds to the fighting quality of many of the soldiers, just as I have heard military veterans say that the inspiring music of a brass band at times had turned an ignominious retreat into a brilliant charge leading to victory. Let no man despise the instrument that helps to make men and women better.

An eleven-year-old boy was picked up on the street, one day this week, in a helpless state of intoxication, and is now being treated in one of our hospitals for alcoholism; one of the brightest young stenographers employed at the Capitol became a victim of the drink-habit, and in spite of all that numerous and good kind friends could do to save him he now fills a drunkard's grave. These are only two of the week's many victims sacrificed —one utterly, and the other partially, to the rum idol. They happened to be brought to the surface by the secular press, just as were several murders and numerous petty crimes, all chargeable to the drink-habit, and they are given place here in the hope that they may serve to spur on some man or woman who is growing weary of fighting the powerful rum-power. Suppose that eleven-year-old drunkard had been your son, or your brother? Suppose that bright, young stenographer had been your brother, or your husband, or your son? They were both somebody's sons, and doubtless those two mothers had indulged in as bright hopes for the future of their boys as you do for yours or for those of your friends and relations. Beware of rum; it is no respecter of persons. *

WORLD'S CONGRESS OF CHRISTIANS,

OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

This gathering, as previously advertised, was one of the series of "Auxiliary Congresses" held at the Art Institute on the Lake Front in this city, in connection with the World's Fair.

The first session began on Thursday, October 5, at 2 o'clock P. M., in "Hall 4" of the above Institute. The second was held in the evening of the same date, at 7:30.

The papers read at the Congress were as follows: "Patriotic Orders, Such as the G. A. R.," by ex-Bishop H. J. Becker, of the United Brethren in Christ, who was not present at the Congress. "Secret Orders," by John G. Fee, who was also necessarily absent. "The Political Influence of Secret Societies," by Rev. M. A. Gault, who was likewise unable to attend. "The Creed and Canon of Freemasonry," by Rev. Jas. P. Stoddard. "The Great National Danger," by Rev. Henry L. Kellogg. "Christ the True Basis," by Mrs. N. Arlonine C. Brightman. "The Duty of Christians Respecting Secret Orders," an address by Pres. Charles A. Blanchard, closed the sessions. Edmond Ronayne also made two extempore addresses—one in line with Mr. Fee's paper, and another, harmonizing with the general discussion of the evils of the lodge system.

The congress was both a disappointment and a success—a disappointment in the absence of some of the distinguished men from whom we had hoped to hear—including Rev. Joseph Cook—and a success in that while other celebrated men were at the same time holding the attention of great audiences in the adjoining Hall of Columbus, the persons who listened to our proceedings were highly respectable in numbers and character, and, in the main, in sympathy with our reform. Dwight L. Moody was holding the attention of the Congress of Missions during our evening session, and attracted many who would gladly have been with us.

But if there was a scarcity of new auditors and speakers, we found that the "old guard" had lost nothing of their earnestness, eloquence or clearness of statement. The manner in which able objectors were met and silenced was in itself a triumph.

The able papers by John G. Fee, ex-Bishop Becker, Rev. M. A. Gault and Rev. H. L. Kellogg, and the strong speeches of Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, Edmond Ronayne, and Jas. P. Stoddard, had all of the old-time ring, and met with hearty responses. John G. Fee, speaking of judges and jurors in our law courts, stated that both are so often swayed by their secret society oaths that it is impossible to hope for justice from them. The evidence of this perversion of justice is plentiful. Mrs. Brightman called to mind the fact that women are to be important factors in the work of putting down secret societies. She held that secret vows are not necessary in benevolent societies.

In the course of his address Mr. Ronayne briefly scanned his own personal history, and spoke of his early training in the Roman Catholic church (introducing specimens of the mummery taught by it), in which he received warnings against Freemasonry as an enemy of the church. Coming to Canada, he became a teacher of mathematics and geometry; and finding that Masonry claims also to teach geometry, he resolved to investigate it, and united with a lodge. He then gave a thrilling account of his initiation, dwelling upon its various phases as set forth in his "Handbook"—the disrobing of the novice, the other preparations to which he was subjected, the rite of circumambulation, etc., to the conclusion. He then dissected the various performances through which he had passed, and called attention to the fact that each and all of them were of pagan origin. Leading thus up to the theology of the order, he said that Hiram Abiff, or Mah-hah-bone, is the god of Freemasonry, of which he is really and truly the deity. He spoke eloquently upon the other principal characteristics of Masonry, which left men always "seeking truth," but never finding it. As for its religion, it is devoid of Christ and his Spirit. It is not founded on the Bible, nor has it anything in it in harmony with Christianity, but is wholly infidel. To an objector, he replied, in substance, with great tenderness, that Christ alone can open the grave and restore to us our loved and lost ones. Not so does Masonry teach. The "grip of the lion's paw," in the tragedy of Hiram Abiff and the Master's word, are the Masonic resurrection power.

Regarding the murderous character of the order, as exhibited in its oaths, an objector stated that in the initiatory degree, and so in the other degrees, the novice simply consented to undergo the death penalty in case he revealed the secrets of the order. But the speaker called his attention to the wording of the oath—"binding myself under no less a penalty," etc., implying much more than his mere consent. If that was all that his obligation meant, it was blasphemy; if it meant more, it was murderous. In the case of a derelict Mason who had incurred this fearful penalty, some one had to inflict it, and would the lodge hire a butcher from outside to perform this bloody deed, when every other member considered himself bound by his obligation to assist in doing it? The case of William Morgan showed conclusively the force of this inquiry.

When the reading of Bishop Becker's paper ended, a member of the G. A. R., who claimed to be a clergyman, objected to it as a whole, claiming it to be untrue and slanderous. The chair insisted that such wholesale denunciation could not be allowed, but objections must be particularly stated. After considerable quibbling, the objector mentioned certain ceremonies, referred to by the bishop, as never occurring; but several old soldiers in the audience promptly certified to the fairness and accuracy of the paper.

When President Blanchard began his address, this same objector made a strenuous effort to monopolize the time by fault-finding and quibbles. He said that he was not a Mason, and did not rise to defend the order; but he proceeded at once to do so, as well as to uphold the other orders, denouncing all opposers of secret societies as disturbers of the peace and an injury to the community. When the G. A. R. was again referred to, he could not keep his seat, though he dared not deny a single statement—he could only quibble and protest.

President Blanchard's address was, in spite of these interruptions, a clear, convincing and eloquent oration, in which it was shown that secret societies are the enemies of the church of Christ and exist in defiance of his commands. At its close several persons began to question this objector about the G. A. R., as he professed to know all about it. These querists were all opposed to secret societies, and the seceding members of the G. A. R. had retired; but most of those present had read the published ritual of the order, and produced such abundant evidence of its truth, that he diverged from his position. First asking his questioners, separately, if they were converted men, he assured them that none but a converted man can understand the Bible, and none but a member of the G. A. R. can comprehend its ritual, however carefully he may read it. On being asked why, if none but members of an order can understand it, he professed to know so much about Masonry, which he had zealously defended, though not a member of the fraternity, he denied that he had spoken in its defence. Some one here denounced him as a trickster for his lying and quibbling, when he asked if such denunciation was authorized by Christianity, and was assured that Christ and Paul had certainly warranted such characterization; and as for the scribes and Pharisees, whom Christ denounced as a generation of vipers, they did not deserve it more than he himself did.

We were especially glad to greet Mother Laura Haviland (who, though eighty-five years old, retains her mental vigor in a marked degree), and Father Geo. W. Clark, also an octogenarian, who sang for us the old songs which thrilled the friends of freedom half a century ago.

Of the many congresses held in the Art Building, this was surely not the least important, nor the weakest in the impression left on the public mind.

Several of the papers read at this Congress will be printed in the Cynosure.

REFORM NEWS.

OUR WORK IN EASTERN OREGON.

Weston, Ore., Sept. 30, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—After quite a silence, I improve the present in renewing my covenant obligations with you and your readers, by writing you from this extreme Far West. I have been glad to note your continued antagonism to, and warfare upon, the lodge question. I am persuaded that you, together with your successors in office, will ever be bold in your denunciations against this giant evil, which is becoming so popular in this day and age among worldlings and lukewarm Christians.

There are quite a number of the Lord's witnesses who are not in sympathy with oath-bound secrecy scattered up and down on this Pacific coast, who are willing to speak out against this sin of the age. But not being organized until quite recently, they have labored under great disadvantages.

I was rejoiced when I received the intelligence, through Bro. Samuel Mathew, of Canby, Oregon, that an organization would be effected in convention in August, 1892. The second session has been held, with encouraging results. This is a work which was very necessary.

Those who oppose anti-secret principles are legion, and they are organized, armed and equipped for the warfare; therefore, if we who are weak numerically are to work successfully in counteracting and in breaking down these strong forces of Satanic influences, we must be organized, united, courageous and ever upon the alert.

Furthermore, we thanked God and took courage when we were informed that we had a Gideon in the person of Rev. P. B. Williams, of Portland, Oregon, and an indefatigable worker who had volunteered his services to enter the field as a lecturer and to attack the hosts of the Philistines. But where—oh, where?—are the three hundred who will extend him their sympathies and render him such assistance by their earnest prayers and means as is necessary until victory for Christ our King perches upon the banner? was a question. Well, our faith enabled us to believe that the number and necessary means could be commanded in due time. However, I am aware that there is a tendency on the part of some to shirk these awful responsibilities which too often fall upon the few. But, brethren, now is the time for us to awake to the fact that business in this particular line of work is the urgent need of both the present and future time.

The enemy have had their own way on this Pacific slope, until there is a perfect craze for secret societies among the populace. Even the children are being taught the elementary principles, preparatory to be inducted into the high orders as soon as they reach their majority.

Upon us who will be true to New Testament teachings on this subject grave responsibilities rest. Let the work be supported and done with dispatch, "for the King's business requireth haste."

Let the various departments of the work be

CORRESPONDENCE.

VISIT OUR BOOTH.

Wenona, Ill., Sept., 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—The writer feels warranted in saying our booth, because he felt prompted to contribute towards carrying on the work so ably done by Brother Stoddard.

Every Cynosure reader should visit the booth when at the Fair. Many of us feel discouraged because few, in its immediate neighborhood, lend a helping hand. Many times we are almost ready to say that the cause will never win.

Stop awhile in front of this booth and hear what is said by people as they pass along, and you will go home better prepared for the contest.

The writer was honored with an invitation from Brother Stoddard to step in and have a chat. He had often met and entertained this veteran reformer in his own home in years gone by when Brother Stoddard was helping "to turn the world upside down" in our Western States. A familiar talk over past work and future prospects of the cause would have been very enjoyable to the writer. However, we soon saw that such a thing was among the impossibilities. No sooner would Brother Stoddard seat himself for a rest, after answering some inquiry in regard to his work, or replying to some objection to it raised by a passer-by, than another friend or foe would step up and demand his attention. Now one would read the testimony of Moody, of Phillips, or some of the sentiments written on the cards in front of the booth. A colloquy would likely follow between the agent and passer-by. Next, a friendly hand would be extended across the stand, and words of encouragement be spoken to Brother Stoddard in regard to his work. Again, some deluded lodge advocate, with glaring eye and frowning look, would square himself for an argument.

Brother Stoddard seems to possess the happy faculty that enables him to keep cool and pleasant. A hasty retreat on the part of the irate lodge man is sure to be the result. There seems to be no conceivable argument which they do not present, but the agent is ready for a reply.

Mrs. Stoddard occupies an adjoining booth. She represents the "Home Light," a four-page monthly published at 218 Columbus avenue, Boston. Every Cynosure subscriber should secure one or more copies for distribution among his neighbors. It is devoted specially to enlightening the women of our country in regard to secret societies. The paper is not only valuable in itself, but is calculated to lead to the purchase of more extensive reading-matter upon the subject.

S. J. WHITE.

THE EVIL OF THE WORLD.

DE KALB, Iowa, Sept., 1893.

The prayer of Jesus for us to be kept from the evil of the world cannot be effectual in our behalf if we do not help answer it. Those who "walk in the counsel of the ungodly" and expect the benefit of his prayer have a vain hope. They cannot truthfully say, as did the Psalmist: "I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer." And if we do the same, it will keep us, by grace, "from the evil of the world."

This prayer is a part of the atonement, but it is answered in behalf of the Christian only on condition of keeping "himself unspotted from the world." God will do his part, if we do our part, to answer this prayer, so vitally fraught with eternal interests. It is of all-importance that we trust in Jesus Christ with full confidence that the prayer will be answered. But if we walk according to "the counsel of the ungodly" and compromise with evil in any degree, our confidence is not full. And it will do no good to sugar-coat "the evil of the world" with the Gospel. All power is with those who are "unspotted" in keeping "from the evil of the world," and "all things work together for good to them that love God," whether they be few or many.

Lodgery is the organized "evil of the world;" a religious institution, purely of the world, not of the church of Christ; and though he "ever taught openly and in secret said nothing," because of the deception of lodgery, the devil is enabled to "appear as an angel of light," and cause church members by the wholesale to compromise with "the evil of the world," in the direction of disobeying the command of God, to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness." That is according to "the counsel of the ungodly." "The evil of the world:" "the friendship of the world," is rebellion to God.

Confidence in Christ begets the feeling that he would "rather reprove them." But to ignore Scripture that is the sure foundation to help us "serve the present age" is to hinder the prayers of the greatest of all preachers in our behalf. "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate" from "the evil of the world," "that your prayers be not hindered," and receive the benefit of the atoning prayer by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects. By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

In British India the ancient Brahmanic religious belief still counts 211,000,000 in its different sects. The Buddhist form of belief is held by 7,000,000 in Farther India (Burmah), not in India proper. The ancient faith of Zoroaster, dating back to the time of Cyrus and Darius, is professed by 90,000, who bear the name of Parsi or Persian. The followers of Mohammed number 57,000,000; the empress of India has a far greater number of Mohammedan subjects than the sultan or the shah. The ancient pagan or nature worshipers number 9,000,000.

THE VERY BEST TIME

to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is now, if you feel that your blood is out of order. Don't wait until you have to cure disease; it's easier and better to prevent it.

With the first blotches or eruption, or the dullness, weariness, and depression that are some of the symptoms, you need this medicine. It will rouse every organ into healthy action, thoroughly cleanse and repair your system, and build up needed flesh, health, and strength. It's the only guaranteed blood remedy. In the most stubborn Skin or Scalp affections; in the worst forms of Scrofula; in every disease caused by a torpid liver or impure blood—if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

No substitute urged by a tricky dealer, though it may be better for him to sell, can be "just as good" for you to buy.

A certain and lasting cure, for the worst Catarrh in the Head, is guaranteed by the makers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1893.

MARRIAGE AND DIVORCE.

An able presentation of this subject by a delegate to the World's Parliament of Religions, on a recent Sunday afternoon, was an interesting contribution to social science. Perhaps he gave too much credit to the Roman Catholic church, as distinguished from other Christian bodies, yet the subject is one of vital importance, and we ought to welcome any solution of this great social problem: What shall we do to increase the sacredness and perpetuity of the marriage relation? He held that the family was the prime factor in human society, and that the indissoluble marriage is the condition of its highest well-being.

He said that there are three aspects of the marriage relation: 1. That of the man and the woman in their covenant with each other. 2. Their relation to the state and to civil society. 3. Their relation to God, who instituted wedlock for the highest well-being of his creatures.

He held that since God has declared that what he has joined together no man may put asunder, therefore the marriage covenant is indissoluble, and that the duty of cohabitation might be abrogated by the persistent guilt of either; yet the right of re-marriage does not exist, and ought never to be conceded. He pointed to the vast increase of divorces during the last few decades, and showed that from 1867 to 1886 it was more than twice as great as the increase of population, amounting, in the last-named year, to one in nine of the whole number of marriages. There is no reason to think that the last seven years have shown any improvement in the stability of the marriage relation. He cited many distinguished jurists as authority for the statement that the only true remedy for this great and growing evil was the entire prohibition by legislative authority, of the re-marriage of any person who has been divorced. This opinion is based on two well-ascertained facts: (1.) That it is generally the guilty party that seeks separation; and (2.) That the motive of such divorce is a desire for re-marriage.

There is one other argument against the re-marriage of divorced persons, except to each other, to which I have seen no allusion. It is, in brief, the duty of forgiveness and reconciliation on the part of all those who are separated. If re-marriage takes place, such reconciliation and reinstatement in the former relation becomes impossible. Our Lord has said: "If thy brother sin against thee seven times in a day, and seven seven times in a day say, 'I repent,' thou shalt forgive him." Surely the duty of husbands and wives is not less binding. The un-Christian companion may not be willing to accept this code; but he or she who is a follower of Christ, however greatly sinned against, will find no warrant for any other than a patient waiting for a possible repentance on the part of the sinning companion.

THE BIBLE AND THE RAINMAKERS.

Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kan., has printed a little tract, for free distribution, in opposition to the science (so called) of rainmaking by artificial means. It is written in the form of a dialogue between a minister of the Gospel and a "rainmaker;" and while the latter sets forth all the advantages of such an invention as a public benefaction, the minister opposes his right to do so, and denounces the practice as wicked in the sight of God. The Scriptures quoted by the minister are as follows, and the reader may judge for himself how far Mr. Tris is supported in his argument: Job 5:10; Job 28:26; Job 36:26, 27; Job 38:28; Deut. 28:12; 2 Chron. 7:13, 14; Jer. 14:22; Psalm 135:7; Ps. 148:8; Ps. 30:22; Jer. 10:13; Matt. 5:45; Gen. 2:4,5; Gen. 5:29; Gen. 6:17; Gen. 7:11, 12; Gen. 9:12–17; Jer. 33:19, 20; 2 Sam. 21:1–10; 1 Kings 17:1; 1 Kings 18:1; James 5:18; Lev. 26:19; 1 Kings 18:41–46; Amos 4:7; Matt. 24:7; Mark 13:8; Rev. 16:8, 9; Rev. 11:6–13; Zech. 14:16, 17. From all of which the writer argues: "That God alone is the Sovereign Lord, and that rainmaking is not only a humbug, but is one of the follies and open blasphemies of the closing years of the nineteenth century."

THE GROWTH OF CRIME.

Recent statistics show that in all the States, except those which have laws prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks, the increase of crime is much greater than the increase of population. The number and variety of crimes committed in the last few months is beyond all precedent. Crimes against life, both homicide and suicide, have increased most of all. That train-robberies, which, a few years ago, occurred occasionally in our Western wilds, have become common in the vicinity of Chicago, and that it should be thought necessary to have armed guards for outgoing trains, is a matter of astonishment and alarm.

The common and growing practice of assassinating (or lynching) persons supposed to be criminals, bad as it is, and tending to subvert all law, is an evidence that the mass of the people, even those who constitute the lynching parties, have an inherent sense of justice, and are impatient with the slow course of the law in providing adequate punishment of the perpetrators of crime. This practice of lynching, though not confined to any one section of the country, is more common in the South than elsewhere; and Negroes—sometimes entirely innocent of the crime with which they are charged—are the most common victims. During a single month, twenty-four Negroes were put to death by Southern mobs.

At Roanoke, Va., eleven of a lynching party were killed by the officers, in a vain attempt to defend a criminal, who was subsequently murdered and burned.

Not simply these crimes themselves, but the benumbing influence which they have upon the public conscience, and the growing want of confidence in the security of the laws, are certainly just occasion for sorrow and alarm.

What are the remedies for this condition of affairs?

1. A certain class of reformers point to the unhappy relations of labor and capital, and the consequent poverty and suffering, as the most common cause of intemperance and crime. This class tell us that until there is a proper settlement of the labor question, our efforts in behalf of temperance and general morality will be in vain. There is a modicum of truth in this view.

Poverty is sometimes the cause of drunkenness and crime, but it is far oftener the result. If we compare the first twenty-five years of the present century with the last twenty-five, we shall find that the people of the United States are now better paid, housed, fed and clothed than then. They have incomparably better advantages for education and the knowledge of current events; and yet there is greater general discontent; the marriage tie is less secure, and suicide and crime in all its phases are more common.

2. Others tell us that the cause of crime is the general inattention to religion, and that the remedy is in the more general and faithful preaching of the Gospel of Christ. There is a much larger measure of truth in this view. The Gospel of Christ is the remedy for all moral evil; and it is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." But it should be remembered that the Gospel of Christ is much more generally, widely and intelligently preached than it was ninety years ago, and that the percentage of population who are members of evangelical churches is more than twice as great to-day as it was then. Somehow, "the salt seems to have lost its savor." At all events, it fails to make the world much better.

3. Again, our prohibition friends tell us that alcohol is the poison that has corrupted society and the body politic; and that the remedy is the legal prohibition of its sale for drinking purposes: Confessedly, this is a most important means to the securing of good morals and good government. As such it should have our profound sympathy and earnest co-operation.

But it should be remembered that prohibition, when it comes, will be a result, rather than the cause, of social and political reform. It will be unwise to mistake the means for the end.

4. The true remedy is doubtless the Gospel of Christ, not only preached with faithfulness to all the people, but practically applied to all the relations of life. So long as it shall be regarded as in harmony with Christianity for men to join such secret societies as Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship, etc., and that the church may not inquire what they are, and what they do, we may be quite sure that such societies will be used by bad men to promote and protect crime. Their exceeding prevalence, and their tolerance in the churches, is probably one of the most common causes of crime. The practical application of our religion to our political relations, not only in securing righteous enactments, but especially in the enforcement of all righteous laws, is one of the most pressing needs of the hour. The people need special education on the sacredness of law.

5. Finally, Christians should turn their thoughts to Him who shall come to destroy that lawless one "whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to naught by the manifestation of his coming." 2 Thess. 2:8 (R. V).

Let our prayer be, "Even so, come quickly, Lord Jesus," for in him only we can hope.

GRAND LODGE TYRANNY.

The power of the Grand Lodge occupies a discussion of considerable prominence in the October issue of the Voice of Masonry. "Is it true," asks the writer, "that 'each Masonic body is independent of the others?' Clearly not. The Grand Lodge is the supreme governing power in Masonry, and all others exist merely by sufferance from it. It is the conservator of all Masonry, the only true and legitimate source of Masonic authority, the foundation upon which all Masonry is built, and the laws it enacts are the supreme law in Masonry, which cannot be questioned in any other body whatsoever."

"In whatever organization a Master Mason may find himself, his first duty is to the lodge, and there is no power on earth which can absolve him from his promise of obedience, and this includes Masons of every degree who may find themselves, whether affiliated or not, under its jurisdiction. Whenever, and wherever, any body of Masons sets up its authority against it and undertakes to nullify its laws, it may and should crush it out of existence, notwithstanding that any vow or obligation, contrary to the supreme allegiance it owes to the Grand Lodge, is a mere nullity."

Mackey's Encyclopædia of Freemasonry (Article "Grand Lodge," p. 320) says: "A Grand Lodge is invested with power and authority over all the craft within its jurisdiction. It is the supreme court of appeal in all Masonic cases, and to its decrees implicit obedience must be paid by every lodge and every Mason situated within its control. The government of grand lodges is, therefore, completely despotic."

At the installation of all "Worshipful Masters" (says the same authority, same page), "all elected Masters are required to make the following declaration: . . . . 'You (I) promise to pay homage to the Grand Master. . . and to his officers, when duly installed, and strictly to conform to every edict of the Grand Lodge.'"

It is true that in the "charge" delivered to the initiate in the first degree of Blue Lodge Masonry he is told that he must be "true to your government," "just to your country," "discountenance disloyalty or rebellion," "submit to legal authority," and "conform with cheerfulness to the government of the country in which you live."

Should the Masons at any time agree upon some overt act—not in opposition to the government, perhaps, but against the peace and welfare of those who oppose their pretensions and evil deeds of darkness—and the forty-four grand lodges of the several States should unite in the project and order a general onslaught, in what a predicament would all the subordinate lodges find themselves! Their members are not sworn to obey the laws of the Federal government, but every man has sworn to render implicit obedience to the Grand Lodge of that jurisdiction. They have sworn to recognize murder, in a horrible form, as a proper punishment for recalcitrant members of the fraternity; and under the autocratic government of the Grand Lodge they have more than once committed murder, although the Master of the lodge at his installation agreed to obey the moral law.

Every man who joins the Masonic fraternity, having taken its obligations and listened to its hypocritical "charges," has henceforth a divided duty—to obey the laws of God and man where they do not conflict with the rulings of the Grand Lodge to which he owes his sworn allegiance. His first and paramount duty is to the fraternity; his second, to have no Masonic charity towards those who oppose its tyranny, in or out of the lodge, but to make their lives a burden, as in the case of Sam'l D. Greene when in the fear of God he had broken the seal of their secrecy.

He has surrendered to the lodge his right to exercise private judgment, and, if he is a Mason at heart, Christianity and Christian benevolence have lost their influence over him. He prefers the lodge to the church upon the most flimsy subterfuges, and fails to recognize the common claims of humanity between man and man. And it is painful to reflect that the church, in her degeneration, too often fails to recognize her duty to separate such men from her communion.

The power of the Grand Lodge, like the trail of the serpent, is over them all.

MR. MOODY'S OFFER.

The extensive evangelistic work that has been in progress in Chicago during the last five months has attracted hundreds and thousands of ministers, teachers, and other Christian workers from all parts of America and Europe. October will be the last month of these evangelistic efforts. There are still other thousands of ministers to whom the work would doubtless be a great blessing, both as an object-lesson in evangelism, and an experience. We therefore invite all ministers of the Gospel now engaged in pastoral work to spend some time during this last month of the work in Chicago, and offer them accommodation at the Bible Institute, 80 Institute Place, at the lowest possible rates, not exceeding five or six dollars a week, the boarding being on the European plan.

Admittance will be free to all the daily Bible lectures, and various meetings of the Institute. It is the opportunity of a lifetime to come in touch with a Gospel movement on such a grand scale, and all who can should get the benefit of it.

—The State Convention of Young Men's Christian Associations is now in session at Elgin. The work in Illinois appears to be in a flourishing condition.

—"The oldest Odd-fellow in America is dead." —Exchange. The oldest Odd-fellow in America still lives. His time for a first-class obituary in the lodge papers has not yet come.

—Occurrences of the following tenor are frequently found in the secular press, and are no credit to the churches under whose auspices they are conducted. At New Hope, near Woodstock, Va., last month, the Knights of Pythias, in considerable numbers, laid the corner-stone of a new house of worship for the Southern M. E. Church, the local pastor delivering the address. It is only another instance in which the lodge and the church have united their forces, to the everlasting disgrace of the latter.

—The eight-hour law of Kansas, which prevented workingmen from laboring more than eight hours a day, has been declared unconstitutional by Judge Reed, of a local district court. Such a law, probably originating in the secret labor unions, too effectually suppressed the exercise of private judgment on the part of the workingman, and created a tyranny over him which neither divine nor human law could sanction. Perhaps it is better that no person engaged in manual labor should, in the interest of health and comfort, work for more than eight hours a day, but to be bound by an aggressive rule to work no longer is, as the judge decides, unconstitutional and an aggravation.

—Christians who have found in the polygamous doctrine of the Mormons a direct opposition to the teachings of Christianity, and have influenced the Federal government to suppress it, will hardly favor the claims of Mohammedanism (so ably presented during the World's Fair Parliament of Religions by its votaries) as a substitute for their own glorious religion, inasmuch as the Alcoran commands the Moslem "to take in marriage of the women who please you two, three or four; but if ye fear that ye cannot act equitably, one, or those whom your right hand has acquired," i e, slaves. Mohammed's interpretation of his own rule is in evidence, since it is well authenticated that at one period he had in his harem no fewer than nine wives and two slave girls. Not all Mohammedans, it is said, are polygamists, but the practice is thoroughly sanctioned among them by the prophet's precept and example. And polygamy is by no means the only reprehensible feature of this pretentious religion, which its adherents are busily proselyting in this country.

—Friends of the "peace movement" in America may be encouraged by the following hopeful utterances of George T. Angell, the gentle president of the American Humane Society: "It is in the power of the Christian churches to prevent every war between Christian nations." His plan include sermons and prayers in every nominally Christian church, and in great union meetings of Christians in every city and town, with petitions to governments, signed by all Christians, for settlement of all controversies by arbitration. This course, he says, "will stop every war between Christian nations." How cheerful such a colossal church union in so good a cause would be to John G. Fee and H. H. Hinman and all who believe with them that the work of righteousness is peace in the churches and among all nations.

—September 18, 1893, was the one hundredth anniversary of the laying of the corner-stone of the United States Capitol at Washington, and dispatches were sent the daily press as follows: One hundred years ago to the day and hour, Washington, the first President of the Republic, as Grand Master of the Free and Accepted Order of Masons, wearing an apron and sash woven by the wife of La Fayette, laid the foundation stone of the great marble pile that is now the admiration of the world." To offset this Masonic falsehood, it is necessary only to say that Gov. Joseph Ritner, of Pennsylvania, in response to a communication from the legislature of that State, prepared a vindication of Gen. Washington from the stigma of adherence to secret societies, in which he proves from authentic documents—among other facts—that Washington was never Grand Master or Master of any particular lodge. The story has been ably refuted, but persistently reappears so often in Masonic publications that we think the fraternity would rather believe a lie than otherwise. Governor Ritner's report can be obtained at this office; price, 10 cents.

—A schoolmistress, possessed of an independent spirit, teaching in a public school at Pawnee, Sangamon county, Ill., habitually opens the school each day by reading a short passage from the Bible, and is then joined by her pupils in repeating the Lord's prayer. As many of the patrons of her school are Roman Catholics, complaint was made to the directors, accompanied by a demand that the Bible reading be stopped. To this the teacher replied that as long as she taught the school she would open it every morning with a Bible lesson. The Catholic citizens then appointed a committee to confer with the State Superintendent of Schools, Henry Raab, at Springfield, who told them that the law neither prohibits nor authorizes Bible reading in the public schools, and the teacher was at liberty to do as she wished. They returned home, vowing all sorts of vengeance, and threatening to pull down the American flag that floated from the school-house. This declaration of war aroused the spirit of antagonism, and the other teachers decided to also read the Bible daily to their scholars. Any attempt to remove the flag, as threatened, will be deemed a renewed call to hostilities.

thoroughly prosecuted. All cannot labor in the same sphere. But let each and all, according to their means and adaptability use the appliances at their command.

What are our real needs?

Well, we are in need of a great many things. We need more men on this coast who will not be ashamed, under any circumstances, of their anti-secret proclivities; those who are sound on this question from center to circumference; men who will condemn this evil of the lodge in friend and foe, in themselves as well as in others; men and women whose consciences are as "steady as the needle to the pole;" who will stand for this grand cardinal doctrine of the Bible, if the heavens totter and the earth reels; those will have the courage to defend this truth, in the spirit of Christ, in the pulpit and through the religious press, and look the world and those who worship the image of the beast right in the eyes.

Yes, we need brethren and sisters, the fathers, sons, mothers and daughters in whom the current of everlasting life runs still, deep and strong; those who will not fail nor be discouraged "till judgment be set in the earth."

W. H. Pruett.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

In consideration of the right of others to be heard, I will report briefly.

A morning caller was very friendly, and, after examining our rituals, became quite communicative. He seemed not to understand our position, and talked freely of the different degrees and rites indicated on our charts. He assured me of his thorough knowledge of both the York and Scottish rites, and that he was one who had been active in introducing the Mystic Shrine into this country. As to the Egyptian rite of Memphis, he said: "I am thoroughly acquainted with its history and work. It is the invention of Henry L. Seymore, and has no claim to antiquity or to respectability." When I spoke of the action of the Massachusetts Grand Lodge, in withdrawing Masonic communication from members who consorted with C. C. Burt and Dr. Darius Wilson in this new scheme, his reply was not indicative of "brotherly love." Some remarks that I made led him to deny, in most emphatic terms, that I had ever seen an official statement of the action of the Massuchusetts Grand Lodge in the case, though he had previously admitted that such action had been taken. A further comparison of views resulted in the speedy exit of my unknown instructor with the remark: "I have known some men—colored men, and others—who got rich by minding their own business." I assured him that that was exactly what I was doing, and thanked him for his unintended assistance.

Later, a gentleman who remained for an explanation of our objects, etc., gave his name and address, and passed on, as hundreds of others do. Returning a half-hour later, he said: "I am a member of the Grand Lodge, and came to this city to attend that body. We adjourned last night. The approximate expense of that meeting was stated at THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS. You are right in saying that there are many homes that are suffering for the money and the companionship that is consumed in the lodges. I heartily wish I was out of it."

While talking to a company of some fifty I noticed the eager and intelligent face of a middle-aged lady, who seemed intent to catch every word. She pressed through the crowd to the front, and when I alluded to the baneful influence of the lodge upon the home, she spoke freely and forcibly on the subject. I saw that the cause had fallen into competent hands and quietly listened while she silenced and routed every opponent. She remained to inform me that her husband was at that very time in the Grand Lodge, and that it was a frequent occurrence for him to leave her with the care of her four little children and remain at his lodge until after midnight. Her story was a pathetic one, revealing, as it did, a sample of what the lodge is doing in a multitude of homes and hearts in our land.

Another lady, very matronly in appearance, attempted a defence of the orders. It was amusing to note her utter ignorance of that which she espoused with such fervor and advocated with so much zeal. Of course it required very little tact to bring out the ridiculousness of her position, to the amusement of bystanders, and gain for myself an expression of her opinion of a man who would oppose the secret orders. J. P. Stoddard.

Membership in the secret lodge is certainly incompatible with usefulness in the Christian church. If I ever doubted this fact, many years of experience has put it beyond question. No Christian is able to maintain the divided allegiance which is involved in such a double association. The heart cannot be halved; and he who attempts to love the church of God with one hemisphere of his heart, and the secret society with the other, will speedily find that he is very much more of a lodgeman than churchman.—Rev. A J. Gordon, D D., pastor Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, 1891.

The Home.

AT EVEN BY THE SEA.

Beside that quiet wave-kissed shore,
In distant Galilee,
When evening's purple shadows stole
Across the murmuring sea;
Upon each sick and suffering one
In that sweet tranquil hour,
The pitying Saviour's tender hand
Was placed with healing power.

Close to the great Physician's side
The lame and suffering pressed,
Eager to feel that wondrous touch,
Lest they should be unblessed;
But on each one the Saviour's hands
With healing balm were laid,
And sin and suffering alike
The gentle touch obeyed.

No more the loving Saviour treads
In blessed Galilee,
Healing each sorrow brought to him
At even by the sea;
We cannot follow in those steps,
And bring at close of day
Each weary pain and heart-ache sore
At his dear feet to lay.

Yet, pitying Christ, I bring to thee
My sin-sick, suffering soul
For one touch of thy healing hand,
That I may be made whole.
Look on me in thy tenderness,
And mercy show to me,
As when of old thou healed'st the sick
Beside the quiet sea.

O tender Christ, deny me not!
Only one touch I crave
Of that dear nail-pierced hand which hath
Almighty power to save;
Thy pitying love is still as great
As, when in Galilee,
Thou healed'st all who came to thee
At even by the sea.

CHRIST THE IDEAL.

The universality of the doctrine and the example of Jesus Christ is good proof of his own divinity. They belong to all ages of the world, and in this respect differ from the ideals of men. At the anniversary of the Christian Evidences Society in London, the Dean of Armagh cited the example of Socrates in proof of the fact that the noblest earthly ideal cannot be universal.

"Is there," said he, "any well-instructed man n this audience who would like his sister to take Socrates for her model—Socrates, who would drink with a company till most of them were under the table, and then go swaggering off to discourse on virtue, never dreaming that he had committed an offence against good morals? A century since such reference to Socrates' conduct would not have been written. One hundred years ago the world's ideal of moral virtue in regard to partial intoxication was not much in advance of the Greek standard, and we are assured that a century hence the standard of virtue will have so far advanced in reference to things permissible for good men, that the average Christian of to-day will be a puzzle to the good people of those times who will not easily understand how Christian men could possibly be ignorant of the immoral nature of some things in their lives. It is to be hoped that Christian charity will grow equally with spiritual illumination, or else the Christians of the coming centuries will be a sad set of Pharisees. But how significant the fact that no Christian fears the day when the moral standard of the world's best life shall be able to shame the conduct of the Son of Mary, the Galilean peasant."—Indian Witness.

LIFE'S OPPORTUNITIES.

Some one has said that "every face ought to be beautiful at forty"; and another that "no old person has a right to be ugly, because he has had all his life in which to grow beautiful." That is to say, that life's opportunities of nobleness, of even forty years of opportunity, if well used, are enough to make so much beauty within that it cannot help coming through to the surface in graceful habits of the nerves and muscles. The transfiguration of a pleasant smile, kindly lightings to the eyes, restful lines of self-control about the lips, pure shining of the face as great thoughts kindle inwardly—these things no parent makes inevitably ours, and no fitful week or two of goodness, give them, and no schooling of the visage either; but only habitual nobleness and graciousness within; and this will give them all. Nor does a wise man think he has watched the quick expressions which flit across the face unconsciously. The truth will out, and in these flashing motions sometimes we catch the rascal under a handsome mask, and sometimes catch the angel where we had not looked for one.—Rev. W. C. Ganet.

NAPOLEON'S TESTIMONY FOR CHRIST.

Beauterne, a Roman Catholic, published in 1843 some table talk of Napoleon I., as reported by Count Montholon, his confidant. One extract has often been misquoted; it should read thus:

One evening, at St. Helena, the conversation was animated. The subject treated was an exalted one; the divinity of Jesus Christ. Napoleon defended the truth of this doctrine with the arguments and eloquence of a man of genius, with something also of the native faith of the Corsican and the Italian. To the objections of the speakers who seemed to see in the Saviour only a sage, an illustrious philosopher, a great man, the emperor replied:

"I know men, and I tell you that Jesus Christ is not a man. Superficial minds may see some resemblance between Christ and the founders of empires, the conquerors, and the gods of other religions. That resemblance does not exist. Any one who has a true knowledge of things and experience of men, will cut short the question as I do. Which of us, contemplating in the spirit of criticism the different religions of the nations, cannot look their authors in the face and say, 'No, you are neither gods nor the agents of the Deity. You have no mission from heaven; you are rather the missionary of lies. Assuredly you have been kneaded out of the same clay as other mortals?'

"I see in Lycurgus, Numa, Confucius and Mohammed, merely legislators; but nothing that reveals the Deity. On the contrary, I see many relations between them and myself. I make out resemblances, weaknesses and common errors which assimilate them to myself and humanity. Their faculties are those which I possess; but it is different with Christ. Everything about him astonishes me; his spirit surprises me; and his will confounds me. Between him and anything of this world there is no possible term of comparison; he is really a being apart. His ideas and emotions, the truth with which he announces, his method of producing conviction, can be explained neither by the organization of man, nor by the nature of things."—Selected.

GOODNESS OVERCOMES.

One way you cannot overcome, for I have tried it. You can never overcome evil with evil. If the child is wrong and you punish the child, or show an unrighteous anger in your action, it knows instantly that it is not good. Many a time in my life I have been angry with my children because they did not do right; I do not mean holy anger; but it never did, it will not do—evil must be overcome with good.

I think, really, when we become what God wants us to be, we shall not talk so much to our children about God as we shall talk to God about our children, and the children will feel that subtle power of goodness that is in us. After a long life and a great deal of observation and experience, I give it as my testimony that there is nothing so powerful in this world as goodness to overcome evil.

If you simply be what God wants you to be, and then be brave enough to take your stand and to say, "No!" the battle can be won. Stand as beautifully as you can—but stand.

I have known wives and mothers to yield to their husbands and to their children, and do the things their own conscience told them were wrong, and I never knew of a case where they won them. If we win them to Christ, it must be by being loyally true—loyal to Jesus Christ, loyal.

Did you ever think what a short time it is before we will be where the opportunity of overcoming will be gone?

As we passed out of church one day, my son said to me:

"It is a startling thought to look over a congregation and think not a single person who is here will be here in seventy-five years from now."

Where will we be in seventy-five years from now? None of us here. Fifty years—not many here—then, what does it matter? Don't it matter everything to us? Overcome evil with good all the time. Listen: "Be of good cheer; I have overcome—" "I have overcome."

If we would but take our stand, with God in us, for God is in us! Every good thought and holy aspiration that dawns on us, of a true life, a noble life, is God in us. Now, take such a stand and say, "I shall overcome sin, and sin is selfishness."

Now you can overcome selfishness. Oh, the overcoming. I know dear friends that wear white robes and that walk the city of the New Jerusalem, but here we need souls in white to walk the streets of this city of New York to-day!

Overcome evil with good. Wherever you see evil in your own selves, in your families, in society around you, take your stand with God, and do all that is possible to "overcome" that evil.—Margarette Bottome.

STAYING POWER.

Delsie Downs stood on the corner of the road at the turnpike waiting for the four o'clock stage to pass. When the old stage-driver reined up his horses to take in his passenger, a look of surprise came over his face.

As he took Delsie's valise in his hand and held the stage door open for her to get in, he asked: "Going visiting, Delsie?"

There were no other passengers that afternoon, and, as the young girl had known the old stage-driver all her life, she was glad to have some one to unburden her troubled heart to.

"I don't know, Mr. Davis, where I shall fetch up. I've started for the city. I've made up my mind that it is time for me to start for somewhere. The truth is, that I cannot stand Aunt 'Mandy's aggravating ways another hour."

The driver kept drumming on his dashboard while Delsie was talking. When she finished he said: "But what's your Aunt 'Mandy going to do without you?"

"That's her lookout, Mr. Davis. She never appreciated anything I ever did for her. I didn't mind the work; I could get on with that well enough; but she is so unreasonable and fussy, that she keeps me stirred up all the while. I want to go and work somewhere where folks are pleasant. Many times I've gone upstairs and picked up my things, and said to myself: 'Now, I'll go to the city, and get a situation; I won't stay and be imposed upon another hour.' But when I began to pick up, I'd wonder what Aunt 'Mandy would do without me, for nobody else would go there and put up with her ways. Then I'd make up my mind to bear it a spell longer. But to-day she tantalized me so much that I just made up my mind that I'd go, and I'm going."

"Your Aunt 'Mandy must have took on bad when you left, Delsie."

"She didn't know it, Mr. Davis. I'm so chicken-hearted that if I told her I was really going, and she made a fuss, I'd be just foolish enough to take off my things and stay."

"You've done first-rate for the old lady, Delsie. All the folks in town will agree to that."

"Why didn't any of them say so when they came in, and knew I was so tired? When anybody is trying to stand up under a crushing load, it would lighten it a good deal, I'm thinking, if somebody came in and gave a lift by a few words of encouragement. If folks thought I was doing anything worthy of mention, why didn't they tell me so once in a while. It would have helped me to endure it all."

"Well, that's just what they ought to have done, Delsie. But I suppose they took it for granted that you knew that you were doing a good work. Folks take too much for granted in this world."

"What a fuss folks made over Agnes Wilcox when she came home from college with the prize. And what a time there was over Lucy Whitcomb, Mr. Davis, when she came home visiting after she started that dressmaker's shop in the city, and did so well. I think, maybe, if I have a chance, I can do something, too, and come back to this town and surprise the folks. That man who lectured at the schoolhouse last winter talked about going to work and finding out what there in us, what strength of character we've got, and what we're capable of doing."

"Well, now, Delsie, let me tell you that it ain't half as hard to march behind the music as it is to trudge along without any tune. It takes lots more strength and Christian grace to put up with an aggravating old body like your Aunt 'Mandy than it does to go out and work where other folks are stirring about lively. We all get tumbled up and down in our minds, sometimes. John Bunyan said he did, and he was about as good a man as we've heard tell of. Delsie, you're running away from the place the Lord laid out for you. There's nobody that'll do for your Aunt 'Mandy as you have. Your mother thought a sight of her—she was her only sister—and when she died of the fever, your Aunt 'Mandy took you home. You were only a baby, and she has done the best she could for you. It's all because of those infirmities of the flesh she's got that she's so trying. What would any of us be if we'd been bedridden for ten years? It takes more strength of character and Christian grace to have staying power than it does going power, child. Hadn't you better get off right here and run back to your work, cross the lots, slip up the back stairs and take off your Sunday clothes, put on your work-a-day dress again, and kneel down and ask the Lord to give you staying power? There are lots of folks' names written up in heaven who never made any noise in the world—folks like you that are set off in corners and lonely places, doing some important work for the Lord, of a kind that don't set 'em up much, may be, but they'll be better known by-and-by. Want to get off, Delsie?"

"Yes, Mr. Davis, I guess I'd better go back, and try to stick to my place a spell longer."

"Pray for staying power, Delsie. I'll bring your bag around when I come back from the station to-night."

Two years passed. Aunt 'Mandy had accomplished her warfare with the ills of the flesh. The small amount of property left had been willed to Delsie, but it was going to be necessary for her to earn something to add to it. The place was advertised to be sold at auction, and Delsie sat alone the evening before the sale, wondering what she was going to do. A knock at the door caused her to look up and see the old stage-driver standing on the threshold.

"Good evening, Delsie. I came around to tell you about two lady passengers I had to-day. They came from the city, and are going to bid on this place to-morrow, and make what they call a 'Working Girls' Rest' of it. They asked me if I could recommend any good young woman who would take charge of it for 'em; they said somebody who had a faculty for getting along with folks' odd ways and peculiarities. I told 'em, 'Delsie Downs is just the one for you. She's got lots of staying power in her.'"

And that is the way that the name of Delsie Downs has become during the past few years so sweet to many a weary city worker who found new strength and cheer by a few weeks' stay at "Good Rest." Her corner of the earth is no more a lonely, unknown one. It is one of God's beautiful hospices which make the way to the Celestial City so much easier for many a travel-worn pilgrim.—American Messenger.

THE ELEPHANTS LAUGHED.

Mr. O'Shea, the well-known war correspondent, tells the following anecdote of an adventure with a herd of elephants:

"A young friend asked me once to show him some elephants, and I took him with me, having first borrowed an apron and filled it with oranges. This he was to carry while accompanying me in the stable; but the moment we reached the door the herd set up such a trumpeting—they had scented the fruit—that he dropped the apron and its contents, and scuttled off like a jack rabbit. There were eight elephants, and when I picked up the oranges I found I had five and twenty.

"I walked deliberately along the line, giving one to each. When I got to the extremity of the narrow stable I turned, and was about to begin the distribution again, when I suddenly reflected that if elephant No. 7 in the row saw me give two oranges in succession to No. 8 he might imagine he was being cheated, and give me a smack with his proboscis—that is where the elephant falls short of the human being—so I went to the door and began denovo as before.

"Thrice I went along the line, and then I was in a fix. I had one orange left, and I had to get back to the door. Every elephant in the herd had his greedy gaze focused on that orange. It was as much as my life was worth to give it to any one of them. What was I to do? I held it up conspicuously, coolly peeled it, and sucked it myself. It was most amusing to notice the way those elephants nudged each other and shook their ponderous sides. They thoroughly entered into the humor of the thing."—From the Million.

THE NEARNESS OF HEAVEN.

They whose hearts are whole and strong,
Loving holiness,
Living clean from soil of wrong,
Wearing truth's white dress—
They unto no far-off height
Wearily need climb;
Heaven to them is close in sight,
From these dull shores of time.

Only the anointed eye
Sees in common things—
Gleams dropped daily from the sky;
Heavenly blossomings.
To the hearts where light has birth
Nothing can be drear;
Budding through the bloom of earth,
Heaven is always near.

TEMPERANCE.

THE QUESTION FOR PATRIOTS.

Amid all the clamor of parties and the contentions of demagogues, there is one question that ought to go straight to the heart of every patriot like an arrow to its target, and the question is this:

Do you want a government run by the gin-mills?

There is but one organization that dares openly and avowedly to defy the laws of the commonwealth, and that is the organization of liquor-dealers. Anarchists try it and they get hung in Chicago or hunted like rats into their holes in New York. Plain ordinary citizens and tax-payers, if they propose to violate the laws, feel the necessity of keeping quiet about it. When monopolies evade the laws they hire skilled lawyers to cover up their tracks, and they do not go shouting out aloud on the house-tops what they propose to do. Railroad corporations and banking corporations may dodge the laws, but they never dare to stand out in the open and defy them and declare their intention of spitting upon them. But it was only a few months ago that the official organ of the Liquor Dealers' Association of this State and the liquor-dealers themselves were proclaiming their own crime before the public, admitting that they were persistently breaking the excise law, and declaring that if the police did not exact less in the way of blackmail for it they would break Tammany Hall. That was in a Democratic city; but in the Republican city of Philadelphia, in 1888, out of 3,442 applicants for license, the police reported 3,000 who were known violators of the excise laws. In a community wherein all other classes have to respect the law or evade detection and one class alone are allowed to override the authority of government, and to do it openly and derisively, are we not right in declaring such a class to be the dominant political factor?

Is there any other class so masterful in politics? Tammany Hall is a power, and never stronger politically than it is to-day, but when the liquor-dealers began to threaten, it began to tremble; for deprive Tammany of the gin-mill keepers on its general committee, who outnumber vastly the men of any other trade, profession or calling on that committee, and Tammany Hall would go down like a house of cards. Grover Cleveland is reported to have defied Tammany Hall; but you never heard of even Grover Cleveland's summoning enough courage to defy the liquor trade. On the contrary, when Washington Hesing, of Chicago, representative of the brewing interests, went to him in 1892, demanding that he insert in his letter of acceptance a declaration against "sumptuary laws" and affirming that his failure to do that in 1888 had lost him the election, the man who has made a reputation among friends and foes for political courage of an unusual degree cowered before this threat and complied with the demand. James G. Blaine was a man who seemed at times almost reckless as to the enemies he might make; but when in 1884 he walked up to the ballot-box in Augusta and refused to vote for the prohibitory law, which he himself acknowledged had made Maine the soberest and most moral community among Anglo-Saxon people the world over, he also paid tribute to the masters of American politics—the liquor-dealers.

Patriots of America, do you want this government run by the gin-mills? That is the question of the present and of the future. All this prating about "personal liberty" is to avoid that thundering inquiry. The saloons are in control of every strategic point in politics. Find us, if you can, a leading politician in either old party that dares to stand out in the open air and tell the public that the saloon is a curse to our civilization. They know it is a curse and in their hearts they despise it; but they know too that it would break their political necks in a twinkling if they dared to make such an utterance. Every "boss" in American politics, from Tweed down, has been a "boss" by reason alone of his control over slum elements, and the statesmen who are guiding the destinies of America to-day are statesmen chosen for their inoffensiveness or positive friendliness to the liquor power. The 240,000 gin-mills of this land, if each controls but ten votes or is the medium through which ten votes are to be "influenced," would swing a vote of 2,400,000, and they can do it and will do it at any time for "boodle." The Prætorian Guard of Rome, offering the emperorship of the world to the highest bidder, hardly equaled the scene in this loved land in which the saloons, organized by counties, by States, and nationally, auction off political favors to the biggest "barrel."

Men say they don't think it hurts to drink a glass of beer once in a while. But does it hurt to have this country run by the gin-mills? That is the question. Any man who cares more for his occasional glass of wine or beer than he cares for decent government is a man who is in imminent danger of spending to-morrow night in the gutter or the station house. Men say, "liquor doesn't hurt me"; but does it hurt them to have the government run by the gin-mills and to have the gin-mill politicians decree legislation for the greatest republic of all time?

The only way to get rid of saloon rule and saloon politics is by getting rid of the saloons. And the only way to get rid of the saloons is to vote into power the only party that says: The saloon must go.—The Voice.

OUR LIQUOR BILL.

In 1890 the American people consumed 87,829,562 gallons of distilled liquors, 27,850,873 gallons of wine, and 855,992,335 gallons of malt liquors. The grand total of our consumption was 971,272,770 gallons of liquor, or more than fifteen and one-half gallons on the average to man, woman, and child. The government received on the above liquors, as taxes, a total of $123,000,000, or $24,000,000 more than the pension payments for that year, and $4,000,000 more than the pension payments for 1891. Only a very small portion of the money spent in drinks goes to the government. The chief profit is to the manufacturer and the vender. The government gets one dollar for each barrel of beer sold; but 32 gallons will make over 500 glasses, which, at five cents a glass, brings twenty-five dollars. If the 30,000,000 barrels consumed last year had all been sold by the glass, the cost to the consumer would have been $750,000,000. The share of the government being only $30,000,000, the drinker gave to the vender twenty-four dollars, while he gave the government only one dollar. The government gets ninety cents on each gallon of whisky sold; but the gallon makes one hundred and twenty-five ten-cent drinks to the consumer; so that in order that the poor drunkard may give ninety cents to the government, he must give the saloon-keeper $12.50. While the government obtains its $123,000,000 from tax on liquors, the consumer must pay hardly less than $1,000,000,- 000 for his drinks, or more than eight times the total sum of our pensions.

The financial statement for one year: Total value of the corn crop, $754,433,451; total value of the hay crop, $408,499,565; net earnings of all railroads, $318,125,339; total value of the cotton crop, $292,139,209; total expense of public schools, 132,251,738; total receipts of Western Union Telegraph Co., $22,389,029; total value of the barley crop, $37,672,032; total internal revenue from liquors, $107,695,910; total tariff duties on foreign imports, $226,540,036; total cost of running the government, $297,736,486; total value of the wheat crop, $334,773,678; interest bearing debt of the United States, $725,318,110. Spent for intoxicating liquors, $1,000,000,000.—The Safeguard.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Christian consecration.—vs. 1, 2. There were two sacrifices under the old Jewish law: the burnt-offering of atonement for sin, and the peace-offering of reconciliation and forgiveness. We need not and cannot bring the first. Christ, our great atoning Sacrifice, has been offered once for all; we can and should bring the second, but it must be a living sacrifice of all we have and are to Christ's service. He freely gave himself for us; then it is surely only our "reasonable service" that we give ourselves to him. "Be not conformed," or "fashioned," "according to this world." Do not adopt the world's principles, or look at things from the world's standpoint, or be swept along with the world's current. "But be ye transformed." Look at things from the heavenly standpoint; measure your words and actions by the great Pattern; swim against the current as the icebergs do, which have their bases fathoms deep in ocean so that they can swim against the surface stream. "That ye may prove"—or "test"—"what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Knowledge can only come through obedience. It is only as we keep ourselves separate from the world that his will becomes "good," "acceptable," "perfect" to us. There is also in testing the idea of distinguishing between the true and the counterfeit; between what is really God's will for us and our own inclinations, or false teachings of others regarding it.

2. The duty of humility.—vs. 3–5. We are to think of ourselves "soberly," not with pride or self-conceit; nor, on the other hand, with false humility, hiding our talent in a napkin. Every Christian should know his own gift or gifts, remembering that he as a member of Christ's body must have some special office assigned him, and that it is not only folly, but it is sin, to plead that he has no gift. It may be a very humble one, but the humblest gifts are like common blessings, the most useful and hardest to despense with. "According as God hath dealt to every man"—no one left out—"a measure of faith." Each one is given, as it were, a golden measuring rod, by which to measure his own ability for spiritual service. Faith means here a capacity for discerning what we are called to do.

3. Of diligence.—vs. 6-8. "Gifts differing according to the grace that is given unto us." Every gift is of grace, direct from God. The great point is to be diligent in the exercise of that gift. "Whether prophecy;"—this refers to anything spoken by divine authority—"let it be according to the proportion of faith," and not from our own human impulses. "Our ministry;"—this may mean any kind of service, but probably has special reference to the temporal affairs of the church—let him wait on it, or be occupied with it. The same rule is given to the teacher and exhorter. Let him put his whole heart into his service, whatever it may be. Halfway service is neither acceptable nor "reasonable" service. "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity"—not ostentatiously, not, like a Pharisee, to be seen of men. "He that ruleth with diligence." This refers to those who hold official positions in the church. They are not to treat such offices as mere sinecures, but try to fulfill every duty connected therewith. "He that sheweth mercy with cheerfulness". The Greek word is stronger, and means "hilarity," as it was a privilege to be embraced with the greatest joy. The reference may be to personal ministrations to the poor, the sick or the afflicted.

4. The practice of Christian virtues.—vs. 9-15. "Let love be without dissimulation." This is the same thought which John brings out, in another form, in the first of his epistles, ch 3, v. 18: "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." "Abhor that which is evil," etc. A holy character is both negative and positive. There can be no real cleaving to good unless we hate its opposite, and vice versa. We sometimes say of people, in reference to their mental constitution, that they are badly balanced. So there are Christians who are unbalanced. They use up all their strength in denunciations of sin, instead of cultivating positive Christian virtues; or else they are satisfied to live a life of negative goodness, and never raise their voices in testimony against sin. "Be kindly affectioned one to another," as brothers and sisters of one great family. "In honor preferring one another," or, rather, taking the lead in showing honor one to another. "Not slothful in business." This has been commonly understood as having reference to our calling in life, but it is rather the statement of a deep, underlying principle. Business means zeal, purpose, action; and the meaning of the whole may be thus summed up: "Be diligent in all you undertake, and let everything you undertake be done for God's glory." "Rejoicing in hope." If we have a bright hope it will sustain us in tribulation. "Instant in prayer," or persevering. If we are constantly cutting off our channel of communication with heaven, we cannot fail to be much of the time in darkness. "Ministering to the necessities of saints" is another prime duty. But while we are to remember especially the household of faith, we are also to bless the wicked who revile and curse us. "Rejoice with them that do rejoice," etc. See the example of Christ at the marriage in Cana, and at the grave of Lazarus.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

A fine portrait of Frederick Law Olmsted adorns the opening page of the Century Magazine for October—which, by the way, closes the forty-sixth volume; and Mrs. Schuyler van Rensselær contributes a biographical sketch of the venerable landscape gardener. Benefits Forgot, by Walter Balestier; Leaves from the Autobiography of Salvini; The Heir of the McHulishes, and Grace King's Balcony Stories, are concluded. A new illustrated serial—Taking Napoleon to St. Helena, from a manuscript diary of the trip, written by the Admiral's secretary—is begun, and promises a narrative of marked interest. Other illustrated papers are: Life Among German Tramps, by Josiah Flynt; Plague on a Pleasure-boat, by J. S. Stevenson; Walt Whitman in Wartime (with portrait), in his own letters; The Cats of Henriette Ronner, by Thos. A. Janvier; The Pratt Institute, by J. R. Campbell; Street-Paving in America, by Wm. Fortune, and Beranger (with portraits), by C. Coquelin. Several contributors furnish as many minor sketches, poems, etc.; and the editorial departments are ably filled. Published by the Century Co., 33 East 17th street, New York City. Price, 35 cents.

As an evidence of the great variety of reading embraced in the Review of Reviews for October, we present the following summary: Subjects in the Progress of the World department, 39 on recent occurrences, with maps, portraits and many illustrations. There is also an interesting Record of Current Events, with portraits; 87 Leading Articles of the Month—editorial and other notes and comments on popular topics, social and political. The more important contributions comprise the following: The Irrigation Idea and its Coming Congress (with portraits), by Wm. E. Smythe; The Evils of an Appreciating Currency, by Edward B. Howell; The Renaissance of the Historical Pilgrimage (with portraits), by Lyman P. Powell; The Revival of the Pilgrimage in England, by W. T. Stead (with illustrations); Mr. Walter Besant—A Character Sketch (with portraits), by John Underhill, and The Civic Church. There are, besides, Current History in Caricature, illustrated, reviews of books, etc. Published at 13 Astor Place, New York City. Price, 25 cents.

As a periodical in "the lighter vein" of fiction, character-sketches, and other desultory reading, McClure's Magazine for October offers numerous attractions. The list of contents is as follows: Thos. B. Reed, of Maine—The Man and His Home (with a portrait and other illustrations), by Robert P. Porter; More "Human Documents"—Portraits of Miss Willard, Bill Nye and Geo. W. Cable; The Psychological Laboratory at Harvard (illustrated), by Herbert Nichols; The Earl of Dunraven—His Career as a Newspaper Correspondent, Yachtsman and Politician (illustrated), by C. K. Cooke; The Spire of St. Stephens, a story, by Emma W. Demeritt; The Joneses' Telephone, a story, by Anna H. Frechette; Mountaineering Adventure, by Francis Gribble; The Smoke, a poem, by Geo. Macdonald; A Splendid Time—Ahead, a story, by Walter Besant; Stranger Than Fiction—three sketches, by Dr. Wm. Wright, etc. Published by S. S. McClure (Ltd.), 743 Broadway, New York City. Price, 15 cents.

The Cottage Hearth for October—as its name implies—presents a pleasant collection of original and illustrated stories, sketches and poems for the home and fireside, as follows: The Story of a Dilemma, by Annie L. Hannah; Court Day in Marston, by Elizabeth P. Allan; An October Song, by Clinton Scollard; Yellow Roses, by Myra D. Moore; An Eye for an Eye, by Amy E. Blanchard; The Old Piano, by Caroline S. Valentine; A Bull-fight in Provence, by Arthur G. Collins; Three Letters, by Gisela A. Dittrich; The Boy-Diver, by Lieut. Whitmarsh; and the usual seven household departments are strong in usefulness and interest. Published by W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield street, Boston. Price, 15 cts.

Dr. M. L. Holbrook's Journal of Hygiene for October, has a score of topics replete with instruction and entertainment, timely and valuable in the household—some of which are: The Sacredness and Dignity of Motherhood, by Helen L. Manning; My Boil, and How I Cured It, by J. H. Johnston; Hygiene for Women, by Jennie Chandler; New Notes Concerning Health, by Dr. Holbrook; seasonable Topics of the Month, in the same vein, by the editor, and Book Notices. Among the many hygienic periodicals, we know of none more trustworthy for counsel. Published by Dr. M. L. Holbrook, 46 East 21st street, New York City. Price, 10 cents.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—A Methodist church was recently organized in Portland, Ore., with thirty members and composed wholly of Japanese.

—At Liberal, Mo., arrangements have been made to open a "Spiritualistic college," of which the dispatches significantly say, "It is the first school of its kind in the world."

—The Gospel is now being proclaimed to the Israelites in every part of the earth. Great Britain alone has sixteen societies for the conversion of the Jews; the United States has eight.

—It is fashionable in Madagascar to be a Christian, and this fact is a hindrance. The missionaries have to strive, not to get people into the church, but to keep them out until they give evidence of being truly converted.

—A great sensation has burst upon the Lower Ottawa valley in Canada, by the announcement that Mr. L. J. Amedee Papineau, the son of the late Hon. Louis Joseph Papineau, the famous orator of '37, and instigator of the rebellion, had publicly broken away from the Roman Catholic faith and joined the Presbyterian creed, says the Canada Presbyterian. Mr. Papineau has notified the parish priests in writing that he was no longer a member of the church.

—The program of the International Christian conference to be held in Chicago, October 8 to 15, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance has been issued. While nearly all branches of Christian organization—brotherhoods, guilds, domestic circles, brigades, young people's societies and a score of others—have a place on this program, no reference whatever is made to the Young Men's Christian Association.

—The city of Philadelphia has a larger number of churches in proportion to her population than any other great city in America; the number being almost as great as the number of churches in New York and Brooklyn combined. New York has 360 Protestant churches; that is one church to 5,000 of her population. Philadelphia has 600 Protestant churches; that is one church to 1,600 of her population. The Catholics have 63 churches in Philadelphia. The Protestants 600. And yet one-third of the population is Catholic.

—In Russia there evidently is a persistent effort to crush out all dissent from the Greek church. The iron hand of the government is laid upon the Protestants of the Baltic provinces. It greatly interferes with their worship, their family life, the education of their children, the occupations by which they live, and the scanty provisions which they are able to make for their old age. In Southern Russia the Stundists are harried beyond endurance. The government is planning to remove the Stundist children from the control of their parents and to put them under the training of the Greek priests. All the power of the government is made subservient to the cruel purposes of these bigoted priests. Evidently this is sowing to the wind, and the time will come when Russia will reap the whirlwind.—Christian Secretary.

CHICAGO.

A strike is imminent among the carmen on the Chicago City Railway cable lines.

Dwight L. Moody closed the Congress of Missions with a stirring appeal to close the saloons of Chicago.

Cassius Belden, who created a panic on the Board of Trade, was held to the criminal court under bonds of $3,000.

Creditors of Banker Lazarus Silverman have accepted his promise to pay his debts in eighteen months, and he will resume.

At the Congress of Missions Dr. Thos. Craven, for twenty-three years a missionary at Lucknow, made an address.

English and German merchants in Mexico, fearing a loss of trade, have been falsifying the Fair to keep visitors away.

The Wabash will be sued for refusing to carry a man who came on an excursion ticket and died at the depot while awaiting a train home.

Mrs. Kirby Smith Eaton, who saw Fort Dearborn in 1836, a hamlet of 200 souls, is here again.

Joseph E. Gary and J. H. Kraft were among the superior court judges named by the Republicans.

Directors of the Board of Trade adopted resolutions requesting the Senate to repeal immediately the Sherman silver law.

Lady Henry Somerset has arrived from England to preside over the second biennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, to be held in the Art Palace Oct. 16 and 17, and to attend the national convention which immediately follows.

The city was more than filled with visitors to the World's Fair on Monday of this week, on the occasion of the anniversary of the great fire of 1871. Trains of immense capacity were laden with guests from abroad. Hotels, restaurants, lodging houses and other resorts overflowed, and large numbers, unable to find lodgings elsewhere, applied at police stations for accommodations. The exercises and display at the grounds were on a grand scale, and probably surpassed any similar demonstration ever made in America.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburg:—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Armory:—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Wesleyan Methodist:—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever reveled in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston:—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati:—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York:—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York:—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository:—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness:—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880:—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. ....The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880:—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia:—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies.....The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago:—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshipers.....The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

Courant, Hartford, Conn.:—The secret society fosters snobbery, and tends to create division among the best friends.

Springfield (Mass.) Republican:—We shall get over secret societies as we are getting over a good many other childish things.

Christian World, Cincinnati:—There is no use in denying that the leading secret societies are, in their practical workings, essentially deistic.

Our Record, Utica, N. Y.:—We are confident that the great objects of equality, fraternity, and morality may be attained without resorting to the vail of secrecy.

Evening Journal, Chicago:—Assemble a party of young men together anywhere, with all restraint removed and perfect secrecy enjoined, and the result will be pernicious.

Republican, Springfield, Mass.:—There is not a moral, political or social purpose which secrecy can aid more than openness. .... It is the meat of petty rather than large minds.

Advent Review and Herald:—And parents should avoid bringing their children in contact with the evil, and not send them to public schools where secret societies are tolerated.

Watchman and Reflector, Boston:—We have before spoken of the low prejudices and antipathies which this secret fellowship engenders toward those who are outside, and of the unworthy and vicious friendships which it creates among those who are within.

Daily Herald, Cleveland, Ohio:—If the "secrets" of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, Knights of Pythias, Sons of Malta, and the entire crop of secret societies could have sunlight let in upon them, we fancy the members thereof would be pronounced foolish boys of a larger growth.

London News, Madrid Correspondence, 1868:—The whole of this insurrectionary movement has been under the direction of a revolutionary committee, most of whom, I am told, are members of the Freemason's society (of which there are not less than forty-nine lodges, numbering 21,000 members, in Madrid), who have been for months arming the people in preparation for this outbreak.

Harper's Magazine:—As the larger portion of the Whig party was merged in the Republican, the dominant party of to-day has a certain lineal descent from the feelings aroused by the abduction of Morgan from the jail at Canandaigua. His disappearance and the odium consequent upon it stigmatized Masonry, so that it lay a long time moribund, and, although revived in later years, cannot hope to regain its old importance.

The Interior, Feb., 1877:—That Masonry is a religious system exceeding every other in the impressive character of its religious rites and ceremonials, and that it offers salvation through the practice of its rites and precepts, is an indisputable fact. If salvation can come to the soul through the channels of the morality taught by Masonry, then there is no need for the Christian religion. The objection we make to it is that it teaches salvation without Christ.

Utica, N. Y., Daily Herald:—The abominations of Know Nothingism are now conceded by all. The outrages of the secret society of Tammany, notwithstanding its endorsement by Gov. Seymour, are familiar to the American people and a disgrace to American politics. The excitement produced by the interference of Masons with politics is a matter of history. Everywhere and at all times, secret societies, so far as they dabble with politics, must exert a baleful evil.

Scientific American, New York:—Once joined, however, and held by working upon his fears through the blasphemous oaths of secrecy that he is forced to take, he is inducted, by sheer force of example, through a routine of profanity, intemperance and gambling; while, in many cases, if young and innocent, his course leads to graver faults, committed more through a sense of shame and false pride than depravity, and due to the tacit, if not open, instigation of his unscrupulous elders.

Home and Health.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

Use plenty of grapes on the table while they can be had so easily. They are better than medicine for health.

The time for buying winter shoes is near at hand. The ladies' common sense sole with low heel and comparatively heavy uppers are the kind for service and health.

A simple remedy for ivy poison and one which gives instant relief is the application of water as hot as can be borne. Repeat every hour or as often as the itching returns. The poison of sumac can be treated the same way.

Put the winter squashes upon the top shelf in the pantry, or in some dry place where they will not freeze, instead of in the cellar where they will gather moisture and soon decay. Squashes have been kept in a perfectly sound condition in this way till spring.

The canning of grape juice like fruit is a most excellent idea. It can be kept this way without fermentation and is good to use on mush and puddings and is also excellent for the sick, when diluted. It should also be put up for communion purposes.

Removing the skins from potatoes has been proved to be at a loss of one-seventh of the nutritive qualities. All have noticed the sweetness of roasted and baked potatoes. A narrow paring, however, around potatoes to be boiled, makes them more mealy if well dried.

The skin is one of the great outlets for throwing off impurities of the system. For this reason the frequent bath is a necessity to health as well as cleanliness. These should be taken in a temperature that is not chilling, with the water also as cool as can be comfortably used.

Some sicken of graham mush because it is not well cooked. Have the water boiling hard and then sift in the flour slowly so as to cook well and keep it from lumping. Of course it must be kept from boiling over or scorching by tempering the heat. When done let it have a slow cooking for ten minutes on the top of the stove.

If you want a reliable dye that will color an even brown or black, and will please and satisfy you every time, use Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.
BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: Earnest Christian: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he was ed one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met h m an' said 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: 'A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. .... The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price.. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction

Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00

FARM NOTES.

THE VALUE OF THE ROOT CROP.

The most valuable crops on the farm are the root crops, as they are grown with the least expense, in proportion to the profits. First, as a natural consequence we have the potato crop. This season's crop is reported as less than usual, and should be harvested early and housed carefully, as whoever has a surplus will receive a fair price for them. They should not be allowed to lie on the ground after digging, especially on sunny days, as they quickly become strong and are then pronounced poisonous as food.

The turnip would perhaps come next in the category of roots. These can be sown in the corn fields at the last cultivation of the crop, and will, if the land is strong enough for a good corn crop, produce a good crop both for market and for ship, which can be turned in after corn harvest.

Beets, carrots and parsnips are also valuable and can be grown in long rows, on well prepared soil, to good advantage. The advantage to be gained in planting in long rows consists in cultivating, which, if done early, will keep them clean and growing until harvest time.

The parsnip is an exceedingly valuable addition to the larder as a change and should not be neglected. Carrots are fine both as horse and cow-food and go a long way towards keeping stock and sheep well to do in late fall and winter.

The onion, too, comes in this list of crops and is a very valuable root indeed, healthful, appetizing and, I might add, indispensable.

Farmers who neglect a good garden and these root crops, or any of them, suffer a loss which they are far from properly estimating.—N. Y. Witness.

COW PEAS.

Cow peas is a crop known and valued all through the South, but it has not until recently been considered as adapted to the North. It is now too late to try them this year, but this item will do to put away as a memorandum for next season. If sown about June 1 in the North, they will make an excellent crop for late fall pasture or soiling, coming into use just at the time that we need something to bridge over between grass and hay. Try them next year.—Vick's Magazine.

THE SEED CROP OF EUROPE.

The drought which prevailed in Great Britain and Europe from spring to midsummer has greatly diminished the crop of garden and flower seeds. This country is almost entirely dependent on Europe for its radish seed, and the crop has proved nearly a complete failure. Cabbage, turnip, beet, peas and many other kinds have produced but small yields. The lack of many kinds of seeds will scarcely be known here until some months later.

LE CARON, THE SPY.

A STARTLING REVELATION.

More enticing than a romance, filled with the strongest evidences of the power and evil of sworn secret societies, and plainly revealing the danger to any government growing out of political conspiracies, is the

who was for years a Clan-na-Gael Center, a Fenian Commander, and a Land-League Orator, but always a British Detective. The book covers his twenty-five years' experiences in this secret service, and contains 205 pages.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS.

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by persuing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

Love, the Supreme Gift:

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD.

The Perfected Life;

THE GREATEST NEED IN THE WORLD.

Both by Prof. Henry Drummond. Bound in chaste white vellum paper, each 20 cts.

These are not to be judged by the size, unless rubies are counted for the weight thereof. The first has been very largely circulated, the second is now only just published and deserves the same wide reading—both are gems such as are only found at rare intervals. If you have not read them, do so at once, you will be a better man or woman for the reading.

WHERE TO FIND THE N. C. A. EXHIBIT.

The World's Fair Exhibit of the N. C. A. is in the northwest corner of the gallery of the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building, easy of access and within short distances of several other religious exhibits of more or less interest. All visitors will be kindly welcomed to the Association booth by Rev. J. P. Stoddard or his assistants.

NEW YORK STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The annual State convention of the New York Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held (D. V.) in Utica, N. Y., (Tuesday and Wednesday) November 7 and 8. Addresses will be made by a number of able speakers. Full particulars will be given next week. Let all friends of the cause make an effort to attend. Rev. Henry L. Kellogg is now lecturing in the State and arranging for the convention.

REV. S. R. WALLACE, Pres.,

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

CALL FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association will be held with the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19–22, commencing on Thursday at 2 P. M., and continuing over the Sabbath.

Evangelists H. J. Pierson and wife, Pastor A. L. Smith of South Newmarket, Pastor George L. Kibbee, of Manchester, Ezra T. McIntire of Boston, Pastor J. Q. Adams of Gilford Village, and others have been invited to speak. Barnstead Parade is on the Suncook Valley R. R., about 20 miles from Manchester. Reduced railroad rates expected.

We should be glad to have our friends in neighboring States, who desire to see the church delivered from lodge rule, meet with us. The Gospel will be preached in its purity, and the various reforms presented from a Christian standpoint.

We expect the Lord to be with us in mighty power, to bless and save. S. C. KIMBALL,
Secretary N. H. C. A.

IOWA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The Annual State Convention of the Iowa Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will (D. V.) be held at Hopkinton, Delaware Co., on Tuesday and Wednesday, November 14 and 15. The invitation to attend is not only general, but solicitous. Let there be a large turn-out.

The following is a partial program:

Nov. 14—Address of Welcome—Rev. T. H. Acheson.

Response—Pres. John Dorcas.

Afternoon—Address—Rev. C. D. Trumbull, D. D. Subject—"How to Save Young Men from the Lodge."

Evening—We hope to have an address from Mrs. C. A. Dunham, on "Open vs. Secret Methods in Temperance Work."

Rev. Wm. Fenton—"Relation of the Bible to Secret Societies."

Nov. 15.—Addresses by Rev. J. B. Jackson and Rev. Mr. Coffee.

Evening—W. P. McNary, D.D. and Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who will speak on "The Duty of the Hour Respecting Secret Societies."

To-day we begin the publication of the papers read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed to secret societies, with the first installment of Bishop Becker's scathing arraignment of the G. A. R. Other papers will immediately follow. They are excellent reading.

The situation in Congress during last week was reprehensible in the extreme. For weeks, since the House passed the bill repealing the Sherman silver-purchase bill, requiring the steady and unnecessary accumulation of silver bullion at the mints and its coinage, the Senate, which ought to be a wise and dignified body of legislators, has shown itself a collection of shysters, prejudiced in the interest of the silver producers, rather than statesmen engaged in promoting the best interests of the country at large. Debate, prolonged, diffusive and unsatisfactory, has distinguished its sessions, day and night, with such an evident purpose of defeating the wishes of the people, as to call down the animadversions of all thoughtful and public-spirited citizens. We need not recapitulate the tenor of their unfruitful labors, for the secular press has teemed with reports of them; but we do protest against our highest national legislature descending to its present undignified position as a stumbling-block in our financial and commercial progress.

In the lower house of Congress, on the 10th instant, the bill introduced by Representative Tucker, repealing the law governing civil elections, was passed by a vote of 200 yeas to 101 nays. The law which it seeks to repeal was enacted originally as a support of that portion of the Federal Constitution regulating national elections, to suppress disturbances at the polls by military power if necessary, to protect the voters from unjust disfranchisement, and preserve the ballot-box from frauds. It has been very efficient in these respects, but was distasteful to Democrats in the South, as it gave too much freedom to Negro voters. The movement for its repeal may be traced to this source. The bill has yet to pass the Senate, and then gain the approval of the President before the repeal will be completed. Ex-President Harrison says that the repeal will be a victory for the advocates of State rights. These men were the originators and promoters of the Southern Rebellion, and their success will tend to create confusion and frauds in our future national elections. It is desirable that the original law should be retained and enforced.

We print herewith a letter from Rev. Joseph Cook, LL.D., D.D., which explains his failure to present the paper which he had agreed to offer at our recent conference on the lodge question. We hope to have an article from him at some later date. He did noble service in vindicating the honor of Christian faith at the Parliament of Religions, and we can well understand that he was both weary and crowded at the close of that long meeting. There is, however, no cause more fundamental to church and state than that represented by the Cynosure. Sabbath-breaking, the reign of the saloon, the toleration of infamous resorts in our cities, the tobacco curse, and political corruption, all are fostered by secret associations, as all thoughtful observers may see. We have reached a time when almost every evil can be openly assailed by the clergy except the evil which fosters and engenders all others. The secret of this universal friendship to the dark forces in society is that secret associations are pagan religions, promising men salvation without repentance or faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. Of course, institutions of that kind are from their very nature related to all other evil.

MORNING—AFTER A NIGHT OF SORROW.

BY THE EDITOR.

The morning dawns! The sky with golden light
Sends peace and comfort to my troubled breast,
And Love, and Hope, and Friendship, trio blest,
Come trooping in to break the dole of night.
I weep, and oh, such blessed tears are mine
That all I feel and see has charms divine.
I breathe anew; the glory of the day
With joy inspired my soul; I live again,
And feel my midnight sorrows flee away,
As heat and dust before the summer rain.
No more I wander in a dull despair,
But from my tongue the notes of grateful praise
To my Creator, Saviour, God, I raise,
And holy thoughts pour forth in fervent prayer!

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

ITS MISSION AND DESTINY.

[A paper by Rev. H. J. Becker, D D., of Dayton, Ohio read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed Secret Societies, Chicago, October 5, 1893.]

The consciousness of the tenderness of my subject makes me to exercise a cautiousness that confronts me at the very threshold. If I shall undertake to applaud the granule of good there is in the Grand Army of the Republic, I shall be asked to identify myself with them in order to assist in the distribution of that granule. If I do not speak of the good quality, I shall be charged with being prejudiced against the good of the order, and my advice will be lost. How shall I be able to unfold the subject in hand so as to neither falter nor flatter?

A simple interrogation may greatly relieve the situation, and so I will venture it. Ought not the G. A. R. to be willing to face the facts which a "court-martial" would develop? If the investigation is full and fair, the verdict ought to be accepted if it is in harmony with the law and the testimony. "To the law and the testimony" has been the method employed by Christian civilization since the era in which it was first introduced for the purpose of encouraging what is right, and preventing what is wrong. First, then, let us trace the origin and object of the organization: It was set in motion to afford an opportunity to old soldiers to revive the memories of the war, and to relieve distressed soldiers and their widows and orphans.

If the statements here made are true, then a great misfortune befalls those who enter the ranks. To relieve the old soldier and to help the widow and the orphans is a good thing, if the help given is not squandered by the former for whisky and tobacco. If it is, it were better withheld. To revive, unrestrained, the memories of the war is fraught with evil, and cannot commend itself to the sanction of the lovers of peace and good society. Some of the memories of the war are so vulgar, so inflated, so pompous and so vile, that to suppress them is the duty of the civil authorities. The G. A. R. was originated soon after the war, and partook of the feelings that then characterized the political caucuses and incited old soldiers to give vent to the antipathy generated during the war. It brought men together who had fought upon the same fields of battle, and who permitted themselves to carry their invectives against a defeated foe to such extremes as to arouse feelings of animosity that will not be removed in the next twenty-five years. The agitation of the war-spirit after the surrender of the South should have ceased, and in its stead there should have been fostered the kindliest feelings. The organization of the Klu-Klux Klan should have met with congressional enactment, and magisterial authority should have been brought to bear upon all violators of the laws of the land. It was not necessary for the G. A. R. to undertake to regulate the regulators. An irresponsible organization, like the Grand Army, only augments the troubles they think to end. The war was over, and is over, and all of the attempts to revive the memories of the dark days are unpatriotic and tend to engender strife. To convene for purposes of enhancing the weal of the country is commendable; and when men meet to better the condition of the body politic and thereby ameliorate the embarrassed affairs of the state and of society, they deserve the applause of their fellows; but when the gatherings are in the selfish interest of a few individuals, to the exclusion of all other, no ex-soldier should be found in the resort. The origin of the Grand Army of the Republic was not the result of mature deliberation. It was not conceived nor brought into being by a man who at the time anticipated its tendency. Had it been wisely planned, if indeed such an organization can be so planned, it would have provided for the moral improvement of the boys whose army lives were of such a character as to afford limited facilities for exercising in religious matters, while at the same time vice abounded with increasing opportunities to practice its vileness.

Should it be thought that the statement concerning the memories of the war is too general, then a few quotations will be given from the advertisements of their local and public gatherings which will support the conclusion. They repeatedly announce that they are fighting their battles over again. They urge attendance with inducements to gather around the bean-pot and revive the memories of the war. They arrange to fight sham-battles, and seek to make them as real as possible, exploding giant cartridges to imitate the noise of cannon. They ape wounded soldiers with disgusting contortions of arms and body as if writhing in pain, and, to show their patriotism, roll on one side and take deliberate aim at the enemy and fire a blank cartridge at them. They work themselves into frenzy, and make themselves obnoxious to good citizens, while the nervous systems of the more delicate observers are shattered for weeks and even months, until to attempt to persuade them to another gathering of the kind would be considered as an insult. These exercises are the more revolting when the explanation is given that they show how battles were fought, and how the enemy was slain. I repeat that to revive such memories is unpatriotic and deserves the disapproval of all lovers of good society, and the condemnation of all ex-soldiers.

With this purview of the subject, we shall proceed to inquire into the real object of the organization as seen when analytically reviewed.

1. The name, Grand Army of the Republic, is too assuming. The society which claims it is not an army at all. An army, in the military sense of the term, is composed of men in the service of their country by regular enlistment, and by being mustered into service. The G. A. R. is composed of men who are not in the service of the country. They have been mustered out of the service in which they were formerly engaged, and are now private citizens of the country. They are not an army in any sense in which the term can be employed. How can they consider themselves to be the Grand Army? The qualification of such terms are such as could not with propriety be said of any army in a general sense. All special merit is thereby set aside, and both rank and file, irrespective of valorous deeds, or dastardly conduct, are applauded in one promiscuous throng as being a grand army. The standing army of the United States of America has a better right to the title of being the Grand Army of the Republic. The very name of these ex-soldiers is fabulous, and has no permission to exist. If during the war the old Mexican ex-soldiers would have organized and called themselves the Grand Army of the Republic, there would have been smoke in the air, and it would have come from the boys in blue. Were the Mexican heroes to do so now, there would be heard indignation on every side. Has not the standing army of the republic the right to be delivered from the further effrontery of being asked to take a second place in the nomenclature of the soldiers of our country? True patriotism condemns the encroachment.

2. The initiation of the candidate into the G. A. R. is without authority, but is done as if with full authority; and when such authority is violated (?), the individual so violating it is ostracised as a villain who has forfeited his right to be respected by his comrades. He is thrust into the company of truce-breakers, when no truce has been broken. He is held as a perjurer, when no falsehood has been uttered. He is held as a traitor, when his patriotism remains unshaken. He is condemned, when his alleged violation of the extra judicial obligation, which was as silly as it was without authority, was not a violation of a matter upon which rested either his honor or the essentials of his patriotism and manhood. True patriotism cannot condone vice and immorality under whatever specious pretense. The virtuous patriot cannot with consistency give his consent to the vulgarities of the lodge room. He will not give sanction to the moral laxity of the social hilarities of a company of men who exclude their wives and daughters, and their mothers and sisters, from their society, and spend the greater part of each gathering in foolishness too silly and too apish to command respect.

The initiatory ceremony is of itself so revolting that it ought to disgust patriots. The childish questions concerning the safety of the entrance, and whether the sentinels are at their posts of duty, and the inquiry as to the caution concerning the approach or presence of enemies, when neither sentinels nor enemies are within a hundred miles of the upper room, unless the policeman at the foot of the stairs is an enemy; and were he to be, no one should find any fault with him, since his work is to preserve the quiet of the night. Add to this the exercises of the candidates and their initiators who speel around like a top, too top-heavy for stationary whirling, and you have a scene so effeminate that the wonder is that the old boys do not rise up in their military dignity and demand that the folly cease, or they will bring it to a sudden end. To illustrate: Here comes an old veteran who has been in a score of battles. He has lost a foot at Stone river; an arm at Franklin; and shows the scars of powder which he received at Lookout Mountain. He enters the room to be initiated, and the officers make inquiry into the fact that he has served in the Federal army, and are satisfied that he has. Ought not that to commend him to the society of his comrades without asking him to take the oath of allegiance? Is it inspiring to draw such men in line and have them take on battle airs and remind one, like this old veteran, that the fate of the traitor is death? Should he be treated as a traitor? Is not he believed to be a patriot before he enters? Did not the comrades who proposed his name know that he was a patriot before they presented him for membership? Why subject an old battle-scarred hero to such indignities? Scores and hundreds who have withdrawn from the organization have testified to these indignities of the initiation.

3. The chaplaincy of the lodge is not to be encouraged. The Mosaic law is not in force, and the Levitical priesthood is at an end. There is no need for the dead formality of ritualistic service. The office of chaplain is the same as that of pastor in the ecclesiastical sense of the term employed. What mockery to have a chaplain in an institution which limits religion to a Christless form that prevents so much as an exhortation to come to the All-Atoning Lamb to secure the pardon of sin! The chaplaincy should be dismissed, or be permitted to perform the functions which the office implies.

4. The charities of the order are quoted as a strong argument in their favor. To do good, and to communicate, is an injunction as old as the New Testament. Let me inquire of the boys in blue if they think it is the duty of the old veterans of the recent war to take care of the indigent soldier? Is it not the duty of the government to do that very thing? It certainly is. Did it ever occur to my comrades that the half-dozen views held by the different posts regarding the duty of the government to provide for the relief of the helpless soldiers, has had more to do with the unsatisfactory pension laws than all other difficulties which have confronted Congress? The injustice of the pension laws has greatly lessened the respect which the soldiers previously enjoyed. Their constant criticism of Congress has so confused that body that to attempt a new law is to invite censure. These things ought not so to be. Men are getting pensions who do not deserve them. Officers are put on the retired list who are wealthy, and others are getting pensions in enormous sums; while men who were in the hardest of the fight are left with a portion so small that it is insufficient to relieve them. Why do my comrades allow themselves to submit to the repeated indignities of politicians who invent new promissory acts before each campaign to hold their votes? The tenacity of the boys towards their leaders indicates rather that they are more partisan than patriotic. Liberty is the child of patriotism; slavery the victim of monarchy, whether it be that of a king or that of a partisan. Help for the old soldier should include his physical, intellectual, and moral necessities. But what is the observation? Take the Soldiers' Home, here at my door in Dayton, Ohio, and what is it, in the moral sense, but a pandemonium of wickedness? The government permits a saloon to be kept there for the convenience of those who want to drink. Did ever any of you hear of any post in the State making an effort to have it removed? Members of the G. A. R. do not only not oppose it, but are its most frequent visitors. By what law of love does the Grand Army of the Republic encourage these dens of vice that demoralize the veterans of the war, and set before our families examples of wickedness so destructive of all that is good and to be desired that we should be recreant to duty as parent, as citizen, and as an ex-soldier, if we did not condemn the looseness which allows these pernicious practices?

"BIBLE ESCHATOLOGY."

BY PRES. CHARLES A. BLANCHARD.

We have in hand a book of some three hundred pages with the above title, written by our friend and brother, Rev. A. T. Cheever, D.D., of Worcester, Mass. It is an explication and defense of the writings of Rev. L. C. Baker, recently a minister of the Presbyterian church, but now connected with no organization, so far as we are informed. It seems that Mr. Baker, a member of the Philadelphia presbytery, came to believe that the resurrection of the dead, instead of being the prelude to the awarding of happiness or sorrow, was redemptive in character, and that after it those who died in sin were to have opportunity for repentance. He believed, also, that the vast majority of them would accept this opportunity and become saved and happy beings. He does not seem sure that any will fail to accept the opportunity of redemption, though he says that if there should be some who so refuse, they will be cast into a lake of fire and so perish.

This is, so far as we are informed, a new view, differing from the annihilationists', in that they believe that all those who die in sin will be destroyed in the lake of fire; differing from the restorationists', in that they believe that those who die in sin are to receive the Gospel and be saved in the spirit-world before the resurrection; differing from the orthodox view, in that it holds that those who die in sin are sent away from the resurrection into everlasting punishment and the righteous into life eternal. We desire to commend Mr. Baker for frankly stating his changed views to his presbytery and retiring from it. In this day, when men who abandon the views of organizations with which they have been connected generally seek to hold their places and draw their salaries while assailing the faith which they profess to teach, it is really refreshing to find one who states his changed views and walks out of the place which he no longer properly occupies. We do not approve Mr. Baker's apparent complaint that the brethren did not invite him to remain in the presbytery after he had ceased to believe the confession of faith which they held. We do not see that any injury was done him. We do not see how an honest man could have remained in the presbytery believing what seemed to him truth; and, in place of speaking of them as if they had in some way injured him, we think that both he and they should be commended; he, for offering to retire; they, for saying that in their judgment it was the proper thing to do.

Respecting the doctrine which he now holds, namely: That the resurrection is redemptive in character, and that those who die in sin are likely to be saved in the resurrection, we can only say that it seems to us entirely extra-scriptural. We do not say untrue, for there are many things connected with God's administration of the universe which we do not understand, and it is quite possible that God has methods of mercy which are but shadowed in the Word, and which we shall never see in clear light until we have passed beyond the vale; but we are satisfied that the Bible does not teach that wicked people, by the resurrection, or after the resurrection, are to become holy. If this is to be so in God's unfathomable mercy, we are glad; but we have no right to teach our conjectures or desires for revealed truth. If Bro. Baker thinks that he finds this doctrine in the Bible, of course he should teach it; and equally, of course, he should not teach it in the Presbyterian pulpit, since that is not the faith of the Presbyterian church which, when he was ordained, he swore he believed to be the truth. The chief injury which such theorizing does, in our judgment, is that for most men it must, we think, direct the mind away from present practical effort to save sinners, and busy it with speculation as to what God is to do with sinners whom we have neglected. It is a wise sentence which some writer has uttered when he says that "we can understand our duty, though we cannot comprehend our state." It is not wrong to seek to comprehend our state, provided it does not hinder us from performing obvious duty; but it is grievous error for us to spend on speculation the time and strength which God has given us for work. Whether the masses of men are to go into hell after the resurrection or not, it is certain that the masses of men are in a wretched and degraded condition here and now. Our business is not to determine what God is to do with them by-and-by, but, so far as possible, to seek to afford them present relief. This, of course, does not mean to give them food, and clothing, and shelter merely. The men who are in wretchedness to-day are very largely there not because they lacked material things, but because they were lazy, vicious, spendthrift, and worthless generally. If they cannot be changed in spirit, nothing that can be done for them externally will accomplish the slightest good. They are a bottomless pit, into which one might drop the wealth of the world without essentially improving their condition. The soul dominates the body and circumstances. Men with courageous, generous, grateful, helpful souls naturally rise, whatever their circumstances may be, and men with souls of the other sort naturally descend, whatever their circumstances may be; hence the stupidity of well-intended people, often very kindly disposed, who think to help men by giving them something rather than by seeking for them the power of the Holy Spirit to lift them out of themselves and make them new creatures in Christ Jesus.

We are quite surprised that Dr. Cheever should quote with approbation the views of Mr. Baker. We do not impeach, in the slightest degree, the perfect integrity of his motives in so doing. We have known him, for more than thirty years, to be a friend of every righteous cause; and we have no doubt that in standing by Mr. Baker he believes himself to be maintaining the cause of the persecuted but righteous minority. He was an open and outspoken Abolitionist in times when it periled not simply reputation, property and friendship, but even life itself. He was a total abstainer in the days when his brother was sent to jail for his efforts to stay the curse of rum, and when barns and houses were burned in Massachusetts for no offense other than that of teaching the duty of total abstinence. He has been throughout his entire life the enemy of secret lodges, which are destroying men, churches and civil government wherever they exist and grow powerful. He believes in the unity of the body of Christ, and condemns the devices which are the weakness and shame of Christianity. In dissenting, as we feel compelled to do, from his endorsement of Mr. Baker's theorizings, we do so with the most profound respect for his long and splendid record as a Christian worker. We have been indebted to him, not generally—only—as a witness for the truth, but specially as a helper in our work; and while we cannot agree with the opinion which he has formed respecting the last things, we are grateful for his words of faith and cheer in so many departments of Christian activity.

SECRET SOCIETIES SEEK TO CONTROL.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

As the years go by, I am more than ever convinced that the above is true. In one way and another they are gradually getting control of both church and state. That there is cause for general alarm in the church of Christ on this account, I think no one can successfully deny. Vampire-bat-like, Freemasonry has her beak in the life-vein of the church, and is sucking out her very life's blood. The church slumbers on while this process of spiritual demolition is continued.

It is impossible for secrecy to control a live church; therefore, her only hope is in destroying the spiritual life of the bride. It is certain that the great mass of the so-called Christian church of to-day has become corrupted and is now being controlled by the lodges.

Ministers whose voices and lives were once potent against this spiritual adultery are to-day as silent as the grave. The reform churches, I fear, are not entirely clear. We should be more aggressive, each pastor, presiding elder, bishop, class-leaders, and all, speaking out freely against this terrible evil.

I have no sympathy whatever for this goody-good sort of religion that proposes to join hands with everybody and everything and together sing, "Blest be the tie that binds," etc.

On the other hand, I desire to see such an uprising of moral and Christian heroes as will break forever the influences and powerful control which these lodges now have upon the church. It will require a keener spiritual discernment, more courage, and a zeal bordering upon desperation to accomplish this greatly-needed work.

I consider opposition to oath-bound secret societies the cause of all causes. No work this side of the eternal world is more necessary, and none is more manifestly of God. I am unworthy of such a high calling; but Christ is my worthiness and sufficiency; and by his grace I shall never cease my prayers or stay my exertions until the demon of secrecy has not only lost control of the church, but is banished forever from our world. I am sincere in the belief that twenty-five years hence it will be as unpopular for a professor of Christ's religion to be identified with a secret society as "petty larceny" is at present.

When the church shall once arise from this awful nightmare that now possesses her, she will shake off this viper, humble herself, and be again "strong in the Lord."

The audacity of the lodge would seek to control Jesus himself were he here. They actually claim him as one of their kind. And now they seek to beguile, purchase or intimidate his ministers and members into submission to their hellish mandates.

My stewardess, at this point, has informed me that certain lodgemen have said, since I moved here, that "if Mr. Williams expects our support, he must keep his mouth shut about the lodge."

I need no stronger argument against their institution. Whether intended, or not, it means this and nothing else: That if a man will come to Philomath, and be untrue to his principles, they will help support him; but if he is a true man they have no use for him.

I consider it as great an insult as could be heaped upon me for men to intimate that for a few paltry dollars I would be quiet in the presence of such an evil as Odd-fellowship or Freemasonry. It is but a sample of how they seek to control. Shame on such methods!

SECRET SOCIETIES JUSTLY REBUKED.

The following legal opinion of Judge White, who presided over the criminal court of Allegheny county, Pa., April 2, 1893, is a case in point for our brethren against secret orders and labor unions. We are legally and morally right in our opposition to such orders, and we can afford to be outspoken against them.

The case referred to was conspiracy by the Builders' Exchange: "There have been some things developed during this trial that seem to me astonishing and which I regard as very pernicious in their tendency. One is that these German bricklayers will not permit a man to learn the trade without their permission. Why, a bricklayer can't teach his own boy his trade without the consent of a lodge or a union! A poor boy who wants to learn the trade can't learn it unless he gets the sanction of a union. What is the object of all this? It is to prevent competition in the trade, prevent too many learning the trade, and in that way perhaps affecting prices. If that is the object of it, it is exceedingly pernicious. If they would adopt rules as to the qualifications of an apprentice, as, for instance, that he should be a young man of moral character; that no man of an immoral character should be a member of their union; that any man that had acted dishonestly should not be permitted to join, or should be expelled—anything of that kind would be a wise regulation for the union. But to say that no young man should learn the trade except at the vote of a lodge or union is arbitrary; it is injurious to the public welfare and tyrannous in itself. The Builders' Exchange, or Bricklayers' union or any other organization that undertakes arbitrarily to say that no man shall come in without their consent, or no man shall follow a vocation or trade or business without their consent, is absolute tyranny against public policy. Competition in the world is necessary for the public welfare, and all combinations or arrangements that indirectly are intended to control prices, to limit men in certain trades or business, to get a monopoly, either of the trade of building, contracting or laying brick—all such combinations are unlawful and injurious to society.

"Now I was surprised at the part of the evidence here to-day. Friday there was some evidence that the stone dealers in Cleveland would not sell to a certain man in this county. The explanation given here to-day is that the stone contractors of the county had an agreement with the stone dealers in Cleveland not to sell to any man except a member of their union or to a bona fide contractor. If there is such a contract as that it is a conspiracy, and the parties should be brought before the courts to break up such an arrangement. Any such arrangement as that is pernicious and against public policy. A little stone contractor, a stone mason, in this county, has just as much right, morally and legally, to go to Cleveland and buy from a stone man there as the biggest contractor in Allegheny county. And the sooner that these men are taught to know that such combinations and arrangements are against public policy and unlawful, the better for them. The purpose of this is to get a monopoly of business, and everything of that kind is wrong."—Gospel Messenger.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An Autumn Epic—A Secret of Nature—The First Woman's Vote in Connecticut—A Proposal for "School Day"—What are our Colleges for—An Old New Hampshire Church—A Modest Claim.

The wild geese, it is said, are taking their southward journey earlier than usual this year by a month. The weather-wise have always agreed that this is the sign of an early winter, and yet September, and October so far, have been almost summer months, golden, sun-lighted and breathing balm. The frosts have held off so that the foliage has had time to "ripen," and the effects of color, not prematurely hastened, are uncommonly gorgeous. The goose domesticus is not a very poetic bird, even aside from its proverbial reputation for silliness; but take a flock of wild ones migrating northward in the spring, and there are whole epics in the sight of their regularly marshalled columns and the sound of their musical "honk, honk." The April showers tinkle through it, and the hum of bees in the apple blossoms of May, and all the idyllic sights and sounds of summer. But it is no less a poem in October or November, when they cleave the gray sky with their wedged-shaped clouds. By what token did these aerial travelers discern the time of their going? and what mysterious inward voice directs them in their flight, so that they never make a mistake—not even the youngest and most inexperienced of the flock? And what was the charm of that summer in the far North? What the portent that rudely broke its spell, and set them to thinking of their old trysting grounds in the bayous of Louisiana? Are they ever longing to fly back again to those solitudes which no sound of sportsman's gun ever disturbs?—those awful primal solitudes that have seen no changes save those made by Nature herself since the hour of their creation; to bask again on the clear blue waters on which they were cradled, and see the midnight sun, with its wake of warm golden light behind it, the marriage ring that weds the evening and the morning and makes them one? What pen can fitly describe that land of enchantment? But they have known it all—the romance and the poesy.

The crickets have not yet given the last of their farewell concerts, though their music is rather subdued, as if they were doing some very sober and profound thinking. One of the secrets of Nature which are easier to question about than explain, is the way these same nocturnal musicians will, for some unknown reason, leave off their piping entirely and then resume it. One evening recently, though warm and fair, not a chirp was to be heard, yet they had sung in full chorus the night before. It was suggested that they might have moved into town for the winter; but as they were all singing their wildest, merriest roundelays the next night, this theory had to be abandoned as untenable. But why such a curious interregnum in their performances? Did a thought of coming snow and cold suddenly freeze all their mirth, until some philosopher among them, of the Epicurean school, told them it was folly to be melancholy; that myriad generations of crickets had come and gone, and one thing happened to all alike, and the wisest way was for every cricket to be merry while he could, and let the morrow take care of itself?

Massachusetts has got used to the spectacle of women voting for school committees, but in Connecticut it is a novel experiment tried for the first time. It has brought out some amusing episodes, as reported in Mrs. Trask Hill's paper, the Woman's Voice. For instance, in one place, when a woman asked to be registered, the town-clerk refused to do so, not knowing that the law had been passed; and when informed that it was really so, held up his hands in shocked astonishment, saying: "Good heavens! If the women are going to vote the country will be ruined, sure." Another town-clerk, after numerous attempts to shirk his duty by remaining invisible when the women called, being at last ousted from his retirement and obliged to attend to their request, administered, to their great amusement, the elector's oath, thus giving them all the privileges of full-fledged voters, and when questioned, did not seem to know that he had made a blunder and sworn in the women, to whose exercise of the limited right of school-suffrage he was so much opposed, to the duties of full citizenship. "Nothing is more terrible than active ignorance," says Goethe; and certainly the women's campaign in Connecticut is developing a great deal of "active ignorance" on the part of those supposed by virtue of their sex and office to be fountains of political wisdom.

"The women had better be given time to grow up," was the sneering remark of a member of the Democratic caucus when asked that the name of the women's candidate, Mrs. Boehme, be placed on their ticket. Considering that the law to give them the privilege of school suffrage was not passed till August, and that seven hundred registered in Hartford, one thousand in Waterbury, and seventy-five in Plainville, a town of only about two thousand inhabitants, there is a fair prospect that it will not take them very long to "grow" into a very troublesome factor for O'Brien, Maguire & Co., in their plans for political preferment, by placing our public school system under the feet of Rome. It is to be noted that both the Prohibition and the People's party endorsed their candidate, but the Republicans, though more gentlemanly than the Democrats in their treatment of the ladies, also ignored their request.

The venerable Robert C. Winthrop has taken up the suggestion, first made by a religious paper, that as we have Labor Day, so we set apart another, about the middle of September, devoted to the cause of education. This would be another breakwater in the way of Romish encroachments, like the flag over the little red school house. Let us have it by all means.

There are other grand old men besides the grand old man par excellence across the water, and Mr. Winthrop is one. He is still sprightly and well preserved, and one of the most familiar figures among the summer residents of Nahant. Yet it is only when one stops to remember that he has shaken hands with Wordsworth, and Samuel Rogers, and the Duke of Wellington, that one realizes what a link between the past and the present will be dropped when death claims him.

When a leading daily in Boston issues a special edition, as the Traveller has recently done, devoted entirely to the game of foot-ball among the colleges, with pictures of the champions and captains of teams, we are inclined to wonder what our colleges are for; as the surest avenue to fame for a student seems now to be, not through the gateway of Greek or mathematics, but base-ball. Talk of this being an intellectual age! I am not so sure about it. When did a Boston paper ever devote a special edition to the legitimate work of the colleges and present us with portraits of the students who lead their classes in scholastic honors?

It is proposed to erect a statue to John Hancock, who certainly deserves a monument as one of our earliest and purest patriots. To be sure, he is already one of History's immortals and does not need this tardy honor; but Massachusetts owes it to herself. If his old home on Beacon Hill could only have been preserved from the sordid, vulgar spirit of greed to which the Old South itself so nearly fell a sacrifice!

The Congregational church in Lebanon, N. H., has just celebrated its 125th anniversary. One of its most celebrated ministers was the Rev. Isaiah Potter, who was a fellow-student of Dr. Emmons, and served in the Revolution as chaplain of one of the New Hampshire regiments. Although a very spiritual-minded and successful pastor, he was not without a native vein of humor. One of his congregation complained that his sermons were too short—a complaint which would certainly sound oddly enough in these degenerate days. "Will not a short sermon do on a cold day?" asked the Dominie. This, be it remembered, was in the days of fireless meeting houses. "Certainly, if it is a good one," was the incautious reply. "But if it is a poor one," rejoined Mr. Totter, "it surely ought to be short." Of course to this there could be only the same answer, "Yes," and the shrewd pastor went his way, chuckling over the tight corner into which he had put his complaining parishioner.

"In beauty, strength, morality, spirituality and godliness, Freemasonry has but one equal, and that is Christianity." Such is the modest claim made for the order, by some writer of a secret society department in the papers. Christianity is only the equal of Masonry, it will be noticed. This is the kind of teaching that is depleting our churches of male membership, and making our young men infidels and deists. Why, indeed, should they care to become Christians if another religion that requires no repentence or self-denial is just as good?

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 11, 1893.

The liquor dealers are already seeking to nullify one of the good points in the new law which goes into effect on the first of November. The point in question is that which prohibits the issuing of a bar-room license to any place located within 400 feet of a church or schoolhouse. Everybody, except the liquor dealers and those owned by them, admitted when the new law was passed by Congress that this prohibition was an excellent thing, and it was expected that its enforcement would close a number of bar-rooms. This week a bill was introduced in the House of Representatives proposing an amendment to this law which would compel the authorities to issue licenses to all bar-rooms so situated at the time the original law was enacted. In other words, the law would then only operate as a preventative of the establishment of new bar-rooms within 400 feet of a school or church, and leave all the old ones. In order to make friends for this bill among Congressmen the statement is made that unless the law is amended bar-room licenses cannot legally be issued to several of the largest hotels and clubs. It would be a good thing if that statement were true; if there were no bar-rooms in those hotels, many mothers and daughters would carry away more pleasant remembrances of their visits to Washington; but it isn't, and nobody knows it any better than the liquor-dealers, for many of them have taken advantage of the clause in the new license law which compels the authorities to issue a bar-room license to the proprietor of every established hotel having twenty or more rooms who may apply therefor, by calling their places hotels, and making the required number of rooms by means of partitions set up in ordinary sized rooms. It remains to be seen whether Congress will pass this bill and confirm the bold claim of the liquor dealers, that they can secure any legislation they desire, or will in the interest of good order and morality defeat it.

The House of Representatives yesterday passed the bill for the repeal of the Federal election laws; and to-day began the consideration of the McCreary bill to amend the Geary Chinese Exclusion law, which will almost certainly be passed in a very few days, possibly this week. It is understood that the Chinese government requested an extension of the time in which Chinamen residing in the United States might register under the Geary law, and promised that they would register if the time was extended, as proposed by the McCreary bill.

From Washington to India is a longer bridal tour than is usually taken; but a couple married last night—Rev. T. S. Wynkoop and Miss Mary Marion Dodge—will sail on Saturday from New York for Liverpool en route for India, where Mr. Wynkoop and his bride will engage in missionary work. Hundreds of their Washington friends wish them God-speed.

At a very interesting meeting of the Sunday-school Union, held Monday evening, the seven Washington delegates who attended the recent Sunday-school convention at St. Louis made reports in the shape of short talks under the following heads: "A Birds-eye View of the Convention," by the Congregational delegate; "The People I Saw There," by the Methodist delegate; "Facts in Figures"—12,000,000 persons now enrolled in American Sunday-schools—by the Presbyterian delegate; "The International Lesson Committee's Report," by the Baptist delegate; "The Field-Worker of the International Committee," by one of the Episcopal delegates, and a review of the addresses of Mrs. Kraft and Miss Johnson on "Primary Work in the Sunday-school," and the "Atmosphere of the School-room," by another Episcopal delegate. It was a novel way of rendering these reports, and was enjoyed very much, much more than reports made in the usual way would have been.

One would not suppose that it would be necessary to get a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in order to convince any one that lager beer was an intoxicating liquor; but inasmuch as Mr. Garland, ex-Attorney General of the United States, in asking the Supreme Court to advance certain cases upon the docket, stated that these cases involved the question whether or not lager beer is an intoxicating liquor within the meaning of the U. S. statutes. It seems that it is.

The Supreme Court began its fall term with one empty chair, the nomination of Mr. Hornblower, of New York, to succeed the late Justice Blatchford, not having yet been confirmed.

Never before have the colored ministers and churches taken such an active interest in aiding to reduce the number of liquor saloons in Washington as they are doing at this time. A special sermon was preached by one of their ministers on the subject last Sunday in which he correctly told his hearers that the liquor-dealer, whose character he declared was no better than the thieves who robbed the travelers between Jerusulem and Jericho, was the worst foe that the colored man had. *

REFORM NEWS.

MAN'S WRATH AND GOD'S PRAISE.

THE REFORM AT SCHUYLER'S LAKE, NEW YORK.

Between Richfield Springs and Cooperstown in Otsego county, New York, lie two beautiful lakes in long channels between hills that to-day are golden and brown with forests and green with pastures. One of these bears the honored Knickerbocker family name Schuyler; and at its southern end is the little town which takes its name from the lake. Sulphur springs and baths at Richfield Springs, at the northern end of the lake, make that place a much frequented and celebrated summer resort. Here short-lived Emmons Blaine was married to the noble daughter of the McCormick family of Chicago, at their summer residence. At Cooperstown, the well-known James Fenimore Cooper is buried. The region all about is immortalized in his novels,—the hunting ground of his Indian braves. To the southwest and not far away is New Berlin, where the hotly contested trial of Morgan days put the Masonic oaths into the court records of the State where every man could read them.

Spending a fortnight in this romantic and beautiful region I find the people generally well-disposed toward our reform. The visits of Bro. J. P. Stoddard and his son are well remembered. Some have read the Cynosure, some have our books in their homes. House-to-house work bears some fruit. It gets a testimony from many who seldom or never speak of the lodge until they have to. It puts some readi g into many houses, starts a list of readers in some new place, or gets a new reader for a good book. Money is scarce here, as everywhere; and the scarcity, added to the natural disposition or acquired habit of the people, makes canvassing a slow and unfruitful work. In better times our literature would be readily circulated in this region.

Hops, cheese and butter are leading products; one as uncertain as the others are steady and reliable in their income. "Thrift! thrift, Horatio," is everywhere the word among these hilly, stony farms. Strictest economy is the rule. Our Westerners would starve on these 50-acre farms. Theirs is like deep-sea sailing; this like schooners that keep to shore.

For lectures and such public efforts the door seems to be shut here in the village. A golden key might open it; but I prefer a door turning on golden hinges of welcome. Of the three churches, Methodist, Baptist and Union, the first has been more than once so opened. This year rancorous recollections rusted everything. No pastor lives here, and the Methodist brethren have the only regular evangelical service Sabbath afternoon.

The consent of two trustees of the Baptist church was given for a morning and evening service, the latter to be a sermon showing why Christians should not be lodge members. The third member of the board, with less regard for God or men than for Masons, objected, but finally consented to the morning sermon. But like the son in the parable, he had a change of mind for the worse, and took the keys and went off toward the only lodge room in town. Its doors were not open to him, for he is not literally a Mason, only one in heart. Few came; as the people are wont to start at the ringing of the bell. Of these, some went home, and others tarried to Sabbath-school, as the other churches could not to be opened on short notice.

On entering the Methodist service in the afternoon, however, the young pastor, led by a prominent member, once of the Masonic lodge here, came down from the pulpit and asked for a sermon. I spoke from Eph. 5: 14, as God gave me utterance, and found the word blessed to the hearers. The Sabbath-school, Christian Endeavor society and evening prayer-meeting gave other opportunities to speak for the Master, no one forbidding. The lodge was thus partly overcome; I pray it may wholly be, and an occasion be given for a discussion of its methods. At other points near I am arranging for meetings and visitations. The event will be told hereafter.

To forbid the preaching of the Gospel in a church dedicated to God, by an ungodly trustee, is a peculiar combination which has caused much remark in the little town. The effect is greater because he said plainly he did it to keep the lodge from being hurt. The end was unexpected, and confirms us in the faith that men do not govern this world. To God be all the glory.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The point of vision evidently materially affects the conclusion at which men arrive in considering moral, social, economic, or religious questions. The Fair is a world's institution, and the exponents of every conceivable scheme for setting humanity right find their way to the N. C. A. booth.

What will most interest our readers is, I assume, the different views expressed regarding the ultimate object of the secret system. It is, with very rare exceptions, admitted that Freemasonry occupies the seat of honor and authority in the system, and guides and governs the minor orders, and holds their destiny in its "hidden hand."

One account of the disposition made of Morgan, published several years ago, was that his abductors delivered him to a tribe of Indians, who took him to the southwestern frontier and condemned him to "run the gauntlet," assaulted by each ferocious savage along the line, in his own peculiar manner. However fabulous this story of Morgan's "taking off," it illustrates the experience of your representative at the World's Fair, where the raps are frequent, coming from every point of the compass. No matter how it goes with the man, you will be most interested to know what his assailants find in Freemasonry, the hub of this mammoth wheel, and what they predict as its ultimatum.

1. A Presbyterian elder and Knight Templar, who acknowledges that he drank the "fifth libation" from a skull, sees in the order a consistent friend of Christianity.

2. A Congregationalist minister finds it a highway to the hearts and consciences of the unsaved, and especially helpful in pastoral labors.

3. An unbeliever in Christ and the Bible discovers in it the universal solvent of all religious differences among men, and claims that it is toning down the extravagancies of the pulpit and religious press and the fanaticism of bigots, and proffering to the race an asylum of universal brotherhood.

4. A zealot declares that it is the highest degree of Christianity in its perfected state.

5. "Little Faith" (in God or humanity) finds in it his refuge when overtaken by misfortune, or in destitute circumstances among strangers, and the assurance that when he dies he will certainly be buried, and that his bereaved widow and orphan children will receive frequent and consoling visits from his surviving brethren.

6. The "mercenary" tells how helpful it is in securing lodge acquaintances who become customers, and the advantages it offers for obtaining due and timely warning of prospective failures, and collecting doubtful claims, and extols it as the secret and sure road to business success.

7. The man with "a doubtful record," who has evidently been "pondering paths for his feet," says: "You never knew a Mason to be hanged," finding great comfort in the protection it gives against conviction in the civil courts.

8. The temperance advocate gets "in touch" with his brother, who indulges too freely in the "flowing bowl," and the jolly good-natured son of King Gambrinus finds it a very convenient opportunity to take a social glass and smoke with a brother after the lodge closes, who would scruple to tarnish his reputation by drinking at a public bar, or appearing on the streets with a cigar or pipe in his mouth.

These are samples of what is reeled off daily and woven into the web with which defenders of the Masonic faith and practice seek to cover and conceal from the public the real object of the system, and the ultimate end in view by those who lay the plans and work the machinery of a gigantic movement. There are those, however, who penetrate to the real secret of this world-wide brotherhood.

A Christian gentleman from Persia, of literary note, and the personal friend of some of our most eminent clergymen, and the views of an avowedly Jesuit priest, very deeply interested me. As the brother from Persia has promised to speak for himself to the readers of the Cynosure, I will leave him to give his own views in his own way.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE—LETTER FROM REV. JOSEPH COOK.

CLIFF SEAT, TICONDEROGA, N. Y., October 7, 1893.

GENTLEMEN:—Mr. Stoddard, who has done such splendid service to the cause of anti-secrecy at his booth in the Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building this autumn, will tell you that last Monday I was at his desk there, gathering materials for an essay to be presented at your Congress.

I am in full sympathy with your general purposes. I had the most distinct impression that the date was the 8th. Your letter of some weeks ago had been mislaid, and I did not see the Cynosure at Chicago to examine it with attention. I was fearfully hurried, and came home expecting to forward an essay from here. Yesterday, reading the Cynosure, I saw my mistake, and could only send a telegram to W. I. Phillips for public use; and I now forward this letter of regret, which you are at liberty to publish.

With great respect, yours, JOSEPH COOK.

WHAT THE W. C. T. U. IS DOING.

CHICAGO, Ill., Oct. 5, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—All lovers of humanity will rejoice at the successful efforts of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of which Miss Frances E. Willard and Lady Henry Somerset are President and Vice-President who, with their splendid forces of "White Ribboners" and their millions of friends, are carrying on philanthropies which must make all heaven glad. Mrs. Mary Clement Leavitt, honorary president, was the first brave "round-the-world" missionary who, in seven years of loneliness and hardship planted our work in every land. Miss Jessie Ackerman, the bright California girl, Dr. Kate Bushnell, Elizabeth Wheeler, Andrew and Alice Palmer have followed in her footsteps, and have glowing reports in the second World's and Twentieth National W. C. T. U. Convention at Chicago, Oct. 16–23.

Among the most interesting exhibits at the World's Fair is that of the W. C. T. U., under the able supervision of Mrs. Josephine R. Nichols, Madam Demorest and Mrs. F. M. Pearce, whose untiring efforts have brought our organization before the world. Under the charge of Miss Alice Briggs there is the immense petition to all the governments of the world pleading for the prohibition of the traffic in liquor and opium, signed by over 4 000,000 people, circulated eight years in more than fifty countries and estimated to be fifteen miles long. Miss Willard and Lady Henry Somerset will, it is hoped, lead a large delegation of W. C. T. U., women and present it to every ruler in the world, when it will take its place in the British Museum as the largest petition known in all history. Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, World's W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, in her fine exhibit shows the splendid achievement of the law in forty States requiring that children be taught in the public schools the evil effects of liquor, opium and tobacco. This entire display will probably be taken to the California Mid-winter World's Fair and will be viewed by thousands more.

The World's W. C. T. U., was well represented in the Congresses under the supervision of Judge C. C. Bonney and Mr. Clarence Young, Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Potter Palmer and Mrs. Charles Henrotin, such orators as Mary A. Woodbridge, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, Mary T. Lathrop, Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, Miss Belle Kearney, Rev. Anna Shaw representing our cause. Social Purity was represented by Aaron Powell, Mrs. E. B. Grannis, Archbishop Ireland, Mrs. Lydia A. Prescott and "Mother" Prindle of the Florence Crittenton Missions. Judge Bonney asks that all friends of temperance write to their Congressmen requesting them to have published by the United States Government the valuable papers presented at these World's Congresses, which will be an encyclopedia on all subjects. Among the many enterprises none has given the W. C. T. U., such a commercial standing as the magnificent Temple in Chicago founded by Mrs. Matilda B. Carse. The building cost $1,250,000. The rent roll, when all offices are occupied, will amount to $220,000 annually. The rentals are now $170,000, which gives a large surplus above expenses. When the building is filled the rentals alone will pay for it in a few years, and then the society will have the splendid income to be used in pushing the forty lines of work against the liquor traffic. Another stupendous success is the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association of Chicago, of which Mrs. Matilda B. Carse is the founder and president, and Mrs. C. F. Grow is the able manager. The Association does an annual business of $125,000, doing a vast deal of book publishing for churches of all denominations, who thus help the W. C. T. U. It also publishes the Union Signal and World's White Ribbon official organ, a large sixteen page paper, with its subscription list of 85,000, thus reaching over 400,000 people every week. Its editors are Frances E. Willard, Lady Henry Somerset, Margaret A. Sudduth, Harriet B. Kells and Ada M. Melville. Two of its editors, Mary Allen West and Julia Ames, have heard the message "Come up higher." The W. T. P. A. also publishes the famous literary magazine Our Day, edited by Joseph Cook, the Oak and Ivy Leaf," edited by Jennie A. Stewart, the Young Crusader and Advance Guard, by Alice M. Guernsey also editor of books and publications.

None realize the power of the press more than these wise women and Miss Irene Fockler, Associate Superintendent Press of the World's W. C. T. U., and Miss Lodi Reed of the National secure the publishing of temperance items in tens of thousands of newspapers, for which they wish to thus publicly thank "ye editors."

Among the many books published in the interest of temperance none are more helpful to the cause than Frances E. Willard's "Glimpses of Fifty Years"—her autobiography; C. W. Moulton's valuable work, "Women of the Century," containing biographical sketches of 1,400 women; "Campaign Echoes"—Mrs. Letitia Youmans, Honarary President Canadian W. C. T. U.; "Junior Partners"—A. M. Rawson; "Woman's Evangel"—Eva Griffith; "Seed, Number One Hard"—John G. Woolley, and sold for the Rest Island Mission; and "Traffic in Girls and Florence Crittenton Missions"—Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, the millionaire evangelist, who has thirteen of these missions for the rescue of erring girls, five under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., in whose behalf Mrs. Emily Pitt Stevens Mr. Crittenton authorized as lecturer.

In most of the large cities of the United States the W. C. T. U., aids largely in supporting a rescue home, thus proving the falsity of the old adage, "Woman is woman's worst enemy." The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago is doing a marvelous work for missions by training hundreds of young people in aggressive labor in saving the masses. The Lecture Bureau, Miss Lucy Anthony, superintendent, sends out scores of speakers who are making a mighty temperance sentiment. One of the most notable events has been the presentation to the city of Chicago of the beautiful bronze Willard fountain, purchased with the ten cent pieces of the children of the "Loyal Temperance Legions," of which Miss Annie Gordon is world's superintendent. It will be placed at the entrance of Willard Hall, W. C. T. U. Temple, where noon prayer-meetings are held, thus providing "free drinks" for all.

The New Volume of Pen and Pencil Series.

By D. Lewis Jones, Morris Jones, Edward Ffoulkes, H. Elvet Lewis, D. Tyssil Evans, D. Davies and O. M. Edwards. Edited by Richard Lovett, M. A. With many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, boxed..... 3.20

"'Welsh pictures' is the work of ten Welshmen, among whom illustrating the beauties of Wales has been parcelled out according to the special familiarity of each. The result is a pleasing volume."—London Times.

THE EARTHLY FOOTPRINTS OF OUR RISEN LORD, Illumined.

A continuous narrative of the Four Gospels according to The Revised Version, with introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Illustrated by 113 full-page half tone re-productions. Small 4to, cloth.....net 1.50
Gilt edge, with silk book mark, boxed.....net 2.00
Full morocco, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, boxed.....net 3.75

Pictures reflecting the best in sacred art from Raphael to the present day are scattered profusely through the book.

"To many the life of the Christ will be a new book in this form. Though beyond the introduction it contains no word except what is found in the four Gospels, yet when read continuously, without the breaks necessarily made by the different stories of the four evangelists, the narrative takes on new force and lifelikeness. The very fact that this is not our usual method of reading the Word will give it a new reality."—Golden Rule.

A GIFT OF LOVE, and Loving Greetings for 365 Days.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Paper cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

White vellum cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.75

D. L. Moody says: "Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man mighty in the scriptures, saturated with Bible facts and truths."

PRAYERS FROM THE POETS.

By Martha Harger. 16mo, two colored cloth, gilt top..... 1.00
Leatherette, boxed..... 1.50

"This volume is admirable. The Prayer are better suited to some of our moods than formal Litanies and are selected from excellent sources. The book will be a dear treasure to many hearts."—The Churchman.

KIN=DA=SHON'S WIFE.

An Alaskan Story. By Mrs. Eugene S. Willard, Home Missionary of the Presbyterian Board of America to Alaska. With illustrations. 8vo, cloth..... 1.50

"Being a close observer and in deep sympathy with the native population in their struggles towards a Christian Civilization, Mrs. Willard has gained a more intelligent knowledge of their character, of their needs and hindrances, than perhaps any other person."—Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

HEROES OF THE GOODWIN SANDS.

By Rev. Thomas Stanley Treanor. With many illustrations. 8vo, Cloth..... 1.50

"It is a book of most engrossing interest, and as stimulating as it is readable."—The Record.

Very welcome to all who like to look behind the scenes and see how the great London dailies are worked.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By Rev. Lewis O. Thompson. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master'—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By Hannah Whitall Smith. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects. By W. P. Mackay, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. Briggs. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers.

Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical—valuable because time saving—the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

LODGE NOTES.

(From secret society papers.)

The Southern Lodge Secret states: "Dr. J. H. Wright, of Allegheny, Penn., is one of the nine men who founded the order of Royal Arcanum. He is still regarded as one of the most valuable men in the order."

"A savings bank, though officered and managed by members of the order, and established and operated for the sole purpose of doing business with lodges and Odd-fellows, should not use the name of the order, and a state grand body has no authority or power to grant it permission so to do."

The following are some of the rulings of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of I. O. O. F. at the recent session in Milwaukee, Wis: "There having been formulated a ritual for an organization of lady friends of chevaliers, called 'Coteries of Daughters Militant,' referred to in the address of the Grand Sire, the subject was referred to the Committee on Patriarchs Militant, and that committee reported adversely to the formation of such organizations. The following resolution was adopted: 'Resolved, That the organization of Coteries of Daughters Militant be and the same is hereby prohibited.'"

"Our relations with the Catholic church" was dismissed with reference to the laws and principles on which the order is established. The Grand Sire refers to it as follows:

"During the year I was informed that the authorities of the Roman Catholic church had appointed a committee of bishops to inquire into the character of benevolent and other organizations, with a view to deciding whether Catholics might be allowed to apply for admission therein. And a letter was written by one of the committee, in which he asked permission to examine our books and rituals. While advising that all possible information be given the committee, I, of course, declined to allow them a perusal of our rituals—a privilege belonging solely to those who have taken the obligations of the order.

"I have heard nothing further on this subject, and have made no inquiry. The matter is one which does not materially concern us. Our doors are open to Catholics as well as Protestants; if they are properly qualified. With disputed questions of creed we have nothing to do. If the authorities of the Catholic church forbid their adherents seeking admission to our order, the loss is theirs. The position Odd-fellowship occupies renders it unnecessary for us to seek the recognition of any particular sect or party."

YOU GET STRONG, if you're a tired-out or "run-down" woman, with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. And, if you suffer from any "female complaint" or disorder, you get well. For these two things—to build up women's strength, and to cure women's ailments—this is the only medicine that's guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, your money is returned. On these terms, what else can be "just as good" for you to buy?

The "Prescription" regulates and promotes all the natural functions, never conflicts with them, and is perfectly harmless in any condition of the female system. It improves digestion, enriches the blood, brings refreshing sleep, and restores health and vigor.

For ulcerations, displacements, bearing-down sensations, periodical pains, and every chronic weakness or irregularity, it's a remedy that safely, and permanently cures.

The Christian Cynosure.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1893.

THE PRESENCE OF GOD.

"Or those eighteen on whom the tower of Siloam fell and slew them, think ye they were sinners above all that dwelt at Jerusalem? I tell you nay; but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish."—Luke 13: 3, 4.

The event here described seems not to have been the result of any human responsibility. It came rather in the providence of God. These eighteen persons were not sinners above all others; nevertheless they were sinners, and in the wisdom and justice of God they were overtaken by this fearful calamity. That other sinners were spared was no evidence that they were better, but rather of God's forbearing mercy. For as the Lord turned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah into ashes, and "condemned them with an overthrow, making them an example to those that after should live ungodly" (2 Pet. 2: 6), so in all times God has made examples of sinners as a warning to all men that his presence is imminent, and that his judgments are in the earth.

The entire teachings of the Old and New Testaments establish this view. Such judgments are not contradictions of his mercy, but rather faithful warnings to cease from sin and escape its consequences. Viewed in this light, the great Chicago fire of 1871, the Johnstown flood, and the more recent and awful devastation in Louisiana, Alabama and Florida, along the Gulf coast, by storm and flood, causing the death of nearly 3,000 persons, were all so many examples to all "who after should live ungodly" that they should repent and seek the mercy of God before they shall be overtaken by the great judgment that will come on all mankind who have not obeyed the Gospel of Christ. That God's people sometimes suffer with the ungodly is evident; but one thing is true of them which is not true of others: "These light afflictions, which are for a moment, work out for them a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," for they are among the "all things that work together for good to them that love God."

GIRL SOPHOMORES HAZE GIRL FRESHMEN.

A press dispatch from Boston, Oct. 6, relates the following disgraceful occurrence:

"The Gamma Delta Society of Young Women at the Boston University hazed and initiated the freshman girls this afternoon. The freshman girls wore the gymnasium costumes and were required to perform various feats, greatly to the amusement of the upper class women. First the timid freshmen were blindfolded and attempted to climb ladders backward. Then, with the bandages still upon their eyes, they were forced to eat molasses from a spoon. The result was that their chins were daubed Then followed several mild tricks easily worked with the apparatus for exercising. The room was then darkened and the bandages were removed, when in stalked the girls of the sophomore class, dressed as headless ghosts, and with groans and sighs they hovered about the new comers. This is the only chance the sophomore women have to haze their freshmen sisters and they made the most of it. After initiating the freshmen they were served with refreshments."

No valid excuse can be offered for a performance of this character. Even the plea of "fun" is lame for such tomfoolery. That young women who hope soon to enter respectable society and rule and govern it with natural grace and dignity, in the full exercise of their womanly prerogatives, should stoop to such buffoonery is wonderful. Better leave these silly and degrading antics to the secret orgies of misguided men.

THE INQUISITION AND FREEMASONRY.

From a correspondent of the London Daily News at Paris: "A curious case of religious casuistry, bearing upon Freemasonry, has just been decided by the Holy Inquisition, the world being thus reminded that there is still in Rome an Inquisition that absolves and condemns and claims jurisdiction over the whole world. A question was submitted to this body by the Bishop of Bayonne—'Whether the secret leaders and henchmen (coryphees) of Freemasonry, notoriously known as Freemasons, but not notoriously known as leaders, should be denounced, even in countries where they are tolerated by government, and where the ecclesiastical power is unable to coerce or punish them.' As the above question may be unintelligible to many Englishmen, it may be explained that Freemasonry is under the ban of the church, men who become adepts of this 'devilish sect' incurring excommunication ipso facto. The Inquisition replies 'Yes' to the question of the Bishop of Bayonne, who will have a right to denounce leading Freemasons. But denounce them to whom? To the Holy Inquisition. But the stake and other temporal weapons of spiritual authority are all gone. The Inquisition will be able to follow up the Bishop's denunciation by excommunication, and no more; but Freemasons will care little for this, as they have been excommunicated once before. And then the Inquisition has no authority in France. Its thunderbolts are without any possible sanction, and with the French habit of making fun of everything, they are apt to explode in the church's hands. The Bishop of Bayonne might denounce Freemasons from the pulpit, but French courts have ruled that this is slander."

This is interesting as depicting the relations existing in France between atheistic Freemasonry and the Church of Rome. How far the republic is steeped in the iniquity of secrecy is seen in the last sentence quoted above—That it is slander to denounce Freemasonry from the pulpit!

KIND WORDS FROM ESTEEMED SOURCES.

Readers who have noticed the recent Masonic assaults upon J. E. and Kate T. Wolfe, editors and publishers of John-Three-Sixteen at Gwenn Dale, Indian Territory, for exposing the meanness of the "divine" fraternity, will find their October number well filled with further exposures of the same sort. We are gratified to find such worthy and earnest supporters in our warfare on the lodge. Brother and Sister Wolfe very much desire and need means to purchase a press upon which to print their paper. Donations for this purpose will not be misplaced, but aid in a worthy cause. Of the Cynosure John-Three Sixteen makes the following "honorable mention":

The Cynosure, a most excellent anti secret society paper published in Chicago, has contained several editorials in recent numbers relating to the anti-secret war now on in this section of the world. We thank editor and publisher both for their kindly words.

We have also a warm appreciation of the following "good words," from a recent number of the Earnest Christian, established and perpetuated by the late esteemed Rev. Benj. T. Roberts at North Chili, N. Y.:

The Christian Cynosure, published weekly, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill., at $1.50 per year, is the organ of the National Christian Association, devoted to the principles of anti-secrecy. It is carrying on a good warfare against terrible odds, but light is dawning. The article, "Sterling Testimonies," on page 12 of the issue for August 12th shows that the truth is making its way. The fact that such a paper is maintained argues advancement.

The Earnest Christian is still conducted by the late bishop's son, Prof. Benson H. Roberts, and shows no depreciation in any of its departments. It is an excellent family periodical.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, the college agent, is expected in Chicago this week, after several months of missionary labor in North Dakota. Soon after his return he expects to resume his gratifying work among the colleges in behalf of our reform.

—Five hundred million dollars is the capital stock of a newly incorporated association in Chicago, designed to promote the manufacture of an invention that is to supersede all machinery for the production of electrical energy for mechanical and illuminating purposes. The amount of money proposed to be invested in it, and the immense work which the association assumes to perform, indicate either a wonderful enterprise or an enormous delusion. Yet its projectors are very confident of success.

—The A. P. A. (the anti-Catholic ostensibly non-sectarian, but no less sectarian in fact than Jesuitism) is becoming extremely formidable in Indiana and Illinois. The Indianapolis Sentinel says that "it proposes, first, to get control of local offices, and then to reach higher. It proposes to abolish all parochial schools. It proposes to have nothing taught but 'the American language.' It propose to increase the time necessary for naturalization to twenty-one years. It proposes to give no employment to unnaturalized foreigners.....It boasts that it is rapidly growing in this city (Indianapolis). If it goes on we may have a repetition of the disgraceful riots of the Know-Nothing days, when foreigners were forced to arm themselves against the roughs who assaulted them, and the incendiaries who destroyed their property." The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says of this pestilent order: "Its work in Ohio has become so pronounced that the leaders in that faith are asking the candidates for Governor to declare their attitude toward the movement."

—A note from Rev. J. M. Foster, dated Boston, October 11, brings us the unpleasant intelligence that he had then been confined to his bed for three weeks with tubular bronchitis, and that his physician could not tell when he would be better—it is such a tedious disease. We greatly sympathize with him in this affliction, and so, we are sure, will the readers of the Cynosure. We trust, however, that in the good providence of God he may soon be restored to health and usefulness.

—Dr. E. P. Goodwin, of the First Congregational church, referring to the World's Fair, thinks that the hand of God virtually closed the gates of the Exposition on Sunday, despite the decisions of ungodly judges, by keeping the masses away from the grounds on that day. It is notorious that the Sunday attendance at the Fair has been very much less than on other days of the week, and last Sunday was no exception. The directory endeavored, by throwing open buildings and exhibits and preparing extra attractions, to draw the usual week-day crowds, but the attendance last Sunday was less than on that of the previous Sabbath.

—The Cynosure has steadily resisted the idea, so widely printed in certain papers, that Roman Catholics are arming and drilling their young men in secret, and believed it to be a story originating among members of the American Protective Association. We now learn from a much more trustworthy source that the A. P. A. is arming its members with rifles and revolvers, as a secret and independent military society, contrary to the Constitution and laws of the United States. If either the Church of Rome, or its enemy, is engaged in this unlawful and dangerous business, it is time for federal investigation and summary suppression. We cannot afford to have a religious-political and armed conflict in this country.

—In one of the October magazines Bishop Haygood, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has a manly article in defence of the Negro in Dixie-land, in which he presents the statement that the great body of the Negro population repudiates the crimes which lead to lynchings. He affirms that it is within the power of the educated Negroes to do much to correct this evil, and calls upon the friends of the colored people in the North to exert their utmost influence to secure the co-operation of the leaders among this persecuted race in the South. He is of the opinion that this should be promptly done, and that unless this or some equally effective plan is adopted, the condition of the Negro will grow worse.

—An association of Past Masters of the various Masonic lodges of San Francisco, Cal., purpose to establish regular public religious services. It will be also a social as well as a religious organization, intended to bring Masons and their families into closer communication. This is not the first time that a scheme of this kind has been tried. "The Church of All Denominations" was organized by Master Masons in South Carolina in 1821, but there is no record of its survival beyond that year. The religion of Masonry is defined as "pure theism" by Mackey, and is therefore a twin brother of Unitarianism. "It is not Christianity," adds Mackey; and exposure shows that it is equally fitted for Mohammedanism Buddhism and the various other forms of heathen worship.

—"Father" James O'Connor, "the converted Catholic," and editor of the periodical bearing that name, prints Grover Cleveland's letter to the Pope congratulating that functionary "on the occasion of the golden jubilee of his episcopate," and adds: "President Cleveland's action was doubtless dictated by the fact that 95 per cent of the Roman Catholics are members of the political party that elected him." This nation is seven-eighths non-Catholic, and Mr. Cleveland made a sad mistake when he laid aside his dignity as the Chief Magistrate of a great nation to pander to oath-bound Jesuits, Clan-na-Gaels, Mafias and saloon-keepers. It is estimated that in the United States there are at least 2,000,000 voters, less than one-eighth of whom belong to the Roman Catholic church. What do the other 1,762,500 voters think of this demagoguism?

—Two events of importance distinguished the Columbian Exposition last week—the one, we infer, a sequence of the other. We refer to the celebration of "Chicago Day," on Monday, in commemoration of the great fire of October 9, 1871, which brought together on the Fair grounds about 750,000 persons, of whom 713,646 paid for their admission. The exercises were on a grand scale, but we fail to see their appropriate connection with the cruel disaster that laid the city waste. The other event was the payment of the World's Fair corporation's indebtedness to the bond-holders, amounting to about one and a half million dollars, leaving a margin of profit to the projectors and promoters of the Exposition. This week the schools of the city are closed, to permit all children to visit the Fair by paying 10 cents each.

—We have hope that the day is near when the Women's Christian Temperance Union, already so strong and brave in its promotion of great reforms, will find it profitable to take an open and bold stand against every form of secret society, whatever may be its claim as a handmaid of the church and the W. C. T. U. in the cause of temperance and purity. We are sure, and the W. C. T. U. should know also, that secrecy is unscriptural and unnecessary in any work of reform, and a decided detriment to Christianity, whose Founder "always spoke openly, and in secret said nothing." We believe that the impression is gaining ground in the W. C. T. U. that it is neither wise nor expedient to harmonize with doubtful methods or positive errors that good may come. Experience teaches us that separation from every form of evil is necessary to the triumph of every Christian reform.

—A few days ago, says a telegram of October 10, during the absence of the priest in charge, unknown vandals entered the Roman Catholic cemetery near Schererville, Ind., and with heavy weapons demolished every gravestone and monument in it. They then invaded the adjoining Roman Catholic church, collected all the books from the library, including the mass book, took them on the outside of the building and set fire to them, completely destroying them, together with two or three handsome banners, the property of the church. They then began their search for anything of value that they might carry it off, Handsome gold and silver articles which usually adorn the interior of Catholic churches were collected together and carried off. Whatever the object, this outrage is too dastardly for any excuse, and may lead to serious consequences if repeated in other places. It is hoped that the desecrators may speedily be brought to justice.

—Numerous officials in several lodges of the secret "benefit order" of the "National Fraternal Union" (which has its headquarters in Cincinnati), have been arrested, charged with conspiracy to defraud the society out of various sums of money. The parties arrested include the financial accountants and medical examiners of the subordinate councils of the order; and their method of operation is described in a dispatch from Philadelphia, dated Oct. 10. It was very simple. They only had to report the illness of members or their wives (who are beneficiaries), taking care that the "sick" ones were kept out of the way for a specified time; then report that the "sick" had recovered and been paid their benefits. Sometimes the alleged invalid would be a party to the fraud and share in the receipts. Others, again, might never know that they had been reported sick. But the discovery of this nefarious scheme will terminate it, and bring the perpetrators to justice.

—Editor Brown, of the Voice of Masonry, is having a rather interesting controversy with "Sir Knight" De Lap, of Natchez, Miss., on the propriety of wearing Knights Templar uniforms and swords at public special services in Christian houses of worship. Knight De Lap believes that the custom is wrong, and manfully maintains his position in opposition to this species of "dress parade piety." Editor Brown, who, also, is a "Sir Knight," defends the practice with the persistence of a man sworn to be a Mason "right or wrong;" and admits that: "Sir Knight De Lap has a right to oppose devotions in church by Templars in uniform, if he conscientiously believes such services wrong; but he has not the right to denounce nearly all who engage in such devotions as 'Pharisees,' 'armed pietists,' 'you Jews,' and even worse than that, and hence we reprove him." Perhaps it would be well for both of these gentlemen to become real Christians, and then, as Editor Brown suggests to his brother Knight: "When his heart and soul are filled with divine love, he will better understand and more faithfully practice brotherly love." Try it, brethren!

—The Free Methodist Conference of West Kansas recently adopted the following declaration: "We believe all secret societies to be unscriptural and that their tendencies are to corrupt the church, state and national government; also we believe that their influence is used to an alarming extent in our courts of justice; therefore, we declare it to be our imperative duty as a church to lift up our voices against them." And the Michigan Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, at Barry, last month, resolved: "That we still adhere to the distinctive principles of the church, and cannot encourage those numerous societies that refuse an open investigation of their principles and practices, and urge upon them that all secret organizations are incompatible with civil government and the Christian church." These are excellent testimonies, "and worthy of all acceptation." We trust, however, that neither of these churches will be satisfied to rest a whole year on these annual declarations, but will make active war throughout the entire twelve months upon this powerful stronghold of Satan. It is time for agitation, earnest prayer and activity against the influences of the lodge, by preaching, lecturing and tract distribution. Keep the contest warm.

[From the Chicago Tribune of last Monday.]

On the rear wall of this "exhibit" hangs a gorgeous chart, which a tall, elderly man with a gray beard and serious countenance explains at intervals to the group that gathers. The chart begins with Eternity, represented by a square of blue, and branches off in two directions, one ending in "the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone," and the other in "the new earth." The first stages in this progress are hades on the left hand and the Garden of Eden on the right, the former a black field with yellow flames, and the latter a garden with a river and shrubbery; and the sec ond are "Cain's offering" next in order of the hades and "Abel's offering" following the Garden of Eden. "Cain's offering" is represented by a chest bearing the Masonic symbol, and Abel's by an altar upon which a sacrificial lamb is peacefully kneeling. The tall man with the serious countenance, who is the Rev. J. P. Stoddard of Boston and the author of the chart, proves by it that from eternity came hades and Eden; that Cain was produced from hades and Abel from Eden; that from the former came Masonry and the first murder, and from the latter the atonement of blood and the Christian church; that Masonry leads inevitably to the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone, represented by a black sea with red flames in which two demons are cheerfully capering, and that its opposite, the atonement, is as sure a road to the New Earth, pictured in the chart as a grove with a gravel path and two trees growing.

If a Freemason or an Odd-fellow comes along and ventures to debate the matter Mr. Stoddard is quite ready for him. The old man is prepared to meet all comers, one down and t'other come on, from 9 A. M. to 5 P. M. He has all the literature, statistics, traditions, and legends of secret societies at his tongue's end, and has been lecturing on the subject for twenty years. One young man who looked like a respectable mechanic and was probably a member of a debating club, took up the cudgels with Mr. Stoddard one day this week. He announced that he was an Odd-fellow and proceeded to relate the advantages that were bound to accrue to him as a member of the order.

"How much does it cost you a year?" asked Mr. Stoddard.

The young man said he didn't exactly know, several dollars, however.

"Were you in that procession on Odd-fellows' day last week?" was the old man's next question.

"I was," said the other proudly.

"Did you ride in one of the carriages or did you walk?"

"I walked. You see there were only a few carriages for the officers."

"Well," said Mr. Stoddard, "you fellows who walked paid for the carriages that the other fellows rode in."

This thrust seemed to reach the young man's vitals, for he grinned somewhat foolishly and backed out of the little crowd that had gathered.

Mr. Stoddard is a most earnest worker in the National Christian Association, which, he says, represents the Christian movement against the secret lodge system, having for its organ the Christian Cynosure, published in this city. "We oppose secret societies," Mr. Stoddard said, "because they are against the laws of God and the laws of the land, in that they bind men to subjugate their consciences to others and to take oaths not to reveal what they cannot know at the time the oath is taken. Masons say proudly that no Mason was ever hanged for murder. That is because the Mason takes a vow to perjure himself to save the life of a brother Mason."

If any Mason, Odd-fellow, or other member of a secret society desires an argument on the subject he will find Brother Stoddard up one flight in the northwest corner of the building for Manufactures and Liberal Arts. F. M. W.

THE EASTERN SECRETARY IN NEW ENGLAND.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 13, 1893.

Dear Cynosure:—After spending one week at home, I am again at work in New England. Though there is much need of work in Western Pennsylvania and New York State at this time, duty seemed to indicate that I should remain a little longer in the East.

Last Sabbath was spent at Naugatuck, Conn. There I found a welcome in the Swedish Lutheran church. Through the kindness of Brother Hegstrom two meetings were arranged. On Sabbath and Monday evenings I spoke to good audiences. Eleven friends will read our paper hereafter as a result of this visit. Not being able to understand the Swedish language, I attended service in the Congregational church in the morning, and heard the pastor, Rev. Mr. Sewell, preach from the text: "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." The speaker went on to show that the Christian should be aggressive. It is not enough not to do any great harm in the world—to live so that we keep out of the penitentiary, but we must "overcome evil with good." The speaker did not like the song: "Have courage, my boy, to say no." He would sing: "Have courage, my boy, to say yes." To counteract the influence of the saloon he would have a pleasant, well-lighted room, furnished with the latest papers, and "harmless" games, where the young man could go, read, be entertained, and "smoke his pipe if he chose." This was one of the speaker's unscriptural illustrations of the way that evil could be overcome by good.

On Tuesday evening I spoke to a goodly number who gathered in the Swedish Lutheran church, New Haven, Conn, Rev. A. J. Eustain, pastor. The best of attention was given. Several said that if I would return and lecture they would come and bring friends with them. I shall hope to visit this people again.

At Worcester, Mass., I attended a meeting of the American Missionary Board. The report that there would be an exciting discussion may have swelled the number in attendance, which was large.

A letter from Rev. H. L. Kellogg and a copy of the Cynosure just at hand tell of the purposed convention in Utica, New York. It is suggested by Mr. Kellogg that the time be November 7. He will doubtless correspond with State officers and report.

I recall, with pleasure, my work in Utica. There was and is, doubtless, a strong, live Free Methodist church in that city that would welcome our annual gathering. Will not all the friends in the Empire State, who can, attend this meeting? I shall hope to be there. Let all pray that it may be a blessing to many. Yours for Christ and reform, W. B. Stoddard.

The Home.

THE VACANT PLACES.

Only a clock tick, low and deep,
  Only a flower on the window-sill,
Only a tabby, lying asleep,
  And the house so perfectly quiet and still.
Only the page of the Book Divine,
  Spread to be read in the corner there.
Only the knitting, where needles shine
  On the stand that waits by the matron's chair.
China and glass, and glittering tin,
  Grandmother's closet is bright to-day;
And I know so well, as I peep within,
  That the dear "old folks" have gone away.

Close to the lattice the ivy clings,
  Nodding to cypress and dark bluebell,
Where many a fledgeling has tried its wings,
  Around the curb of the mossy well.
Grandmother's garden, so tastefully made,
  Lilac and rose in bright array;
And near at hand, in the alder's shade,
  A robin is singing his roundelay.
'Madam, indeed you are late to-day.
  The dear 'old folks' have gone away."

Thickly strewn is the new-mown hay
  Where evening shadows are deepening long,
And through the hedge, far over the way,
  Comes the maid, with her pail and milking song.
And oft, when hours are growing late,
  When duties of life seem cold and chill,
I shall stand and wait at the garden gate,
  But will miss the face at the window-sill;
For other hands and other feet,
  And other hearts will be here that day,
To fill the place that is now so sweet,
  And the dear "old folks" will be gone for aye.

WRITINGS OF MRS. BOOTH,
("Mother of the Salvation Army.")

DELIVERING TRUTH.

One great qualification for successful labor is power to get the truth home to the heart. Not merely to deliver it. I wish the word had never been coined in connection with Christian work. "Deliver" it, indeed—that is not in the Bible. No, no; not deliver it; but drive it home—send it in—make it felt. That is your work; not merely to say it—not quietly and genteelly to put it before the people. Here is just the difference between a self-consuming, soul-burdened, Holy Ghost, successful ministry, and a careless, happy-go-lucky, easy sort of things, that just rolls it out like a lesson, and goes home holding itself in no way responsible for the consequences. Here is all the difference, either in public or individual labor. God has made you responsible, not for delivering the truth, but for GETTING IT IN—getting it home, fixing it in the conscience as a red-hot iron, as a bolt straight from his throne; and he has placed at your disposal the power to do it, and if you do not do it, blood will be upon your skirts. Oh! this genteel way of putting the truth! How God hates it! "If you please, dear friends, will you listen? If you please, will you be converted? Will you come to Jesus? Shall we read just like this, that and the other?" No more like apostolic preaching than darkness is like light.

WOMAN'S RIGHT TO PREACH.

Whether the church will allow women to speak in her assemblies can only be a question of time; common sense, public opinion, and the blessed results of woman's agency will force her to give us an honest and impartial rendering of the solitary text on which she grounds her prohibitions. Then, when the true light shines and God's words take the place of man's traditions, the doctor of divinity who shall teach that Paul commands woman to be silent when God's Spirit urges her to speak will be regarded much the same as we should regard an astronomer who should teach that the sun is the earth's satellite.

As to the obligation devolving on woman to labor for her Master, I presume there will be no controversy. The particular sphere in which each individual shall do this must be dictated by the teachings of the Holy Spirit and the gifts with which God has endowed her.

If she have necessary gifts, and feels herself called by the Spirit to preach, there is not a single word in the whole book of God to restrain her, but many, very many to urge and encourage her. God says she SHALL do so, and Paul prescribed the manner in which she shall do it; and Phœbe, Junia, Philip's four daughters, and many other women actually did preach and speak in the primitive churches. If this had not been the case, there would have been less freedom under the new than under the old dispensation; a greater paucity of gifts and agencies under the Spirit than under the law; fewer laborers when more work was to be done. Instead of the destruction of caste and division between the priesthood and the people, and the setting up of a spiritual kingdom in which all true believers were "kings and priests unto God," the division would have been more stringent and the disabilities of the common people greater. Whereas, we are told again and again in effect, "that in Christ Jesus there is neither bond nor free, male nor female, but ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

We commend a few passages bearing on the ministrations of woman to the careful consideration of our readers.

Jesus said to the two Marys, "All hail. And they came and held him by the feet, and worshiped him. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid: go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee."—Matt. 28: 9, 10. There are two or three points in this beautiful narrative.

First, it was the first announcement of the glorious news to a lost world and a company of forsaking disciples. Second, it was as public as the nature of the case demanded; and intended ultimately to be published to the ends of the earth. Third, Mary was expressly commanded to reveal the fact to the apostles; and thus she literally became their teacher on that memoriable occasion. Oh, glorious privilege, to be allowed to herald the glad tidings of a Saviour risen! How could it be that our Lord chose a woman to this honor. Well, it might be that the male disciples were all missing at the time. They all forsook him and fled. But woman was there as she ever had been, ready to minister to her risen, as to her dying, Lord.

Not she with traitorous lips her Saviour stung
Not she denied him with unholy tongue;
She, whilst apostles shrunk, could danger brave;
Last at the cross, and earliest at the grave.

Acts 1: 14 and 2: 1–4. We are in the first of these passages expressly told that the women were assembled with the disciples on the day of Pentecost; and, in the second, that the cloven tongues sat upon them each, and the Holy Ghost filled them all, and they spake as the Spirit gave them utterance. It is nothing to the point to argue that the gift of tongues was miraculous, seeing that the Spirit was a primary, bestowment. The tongues were only emblematical of the office which the Spirit was henceforth to sustain to his people. The Spirit was given alike to the female as to the male disciple, and this is cited by Peter (Acts 2: 16, 18) as the peculiar specialty of the later dispensation. What a remarkable device of the devil that he has so long succeeded in hiding this characteristic of the latter-day glory! He knows, whether the church does or not, how eminently detrimental to the interests of his kingdom have been the religious labors of woman; and while her seed has mortally bruised his head, he ceases not to bruise her heel; but the time of her deliverance draweth nigh.

LOWLY WORKERS THE GREATEST.

See what room the Lord makes for lowly workers. In paradise itself he gave the first man the post of gardener. When he himself comes into the world it is the little babe, wrapped in swaddling clothes; and when he comes to be a man he is known as the carpenter. He seems to choose the lowly things of earth for his service. His disciples are fishermen. He bids them consider the fowls of the air and the flowers of the fields, as if he made these his duly appointed preachers. It is the grain of mustard seed that is the emblem of the kingdom of heaven, and the leaven hidden in the meal. When the disciples were quarreling as to which of them should be the greatest, he takes the child and sets him in their midst—the little boy with great wondering eyes looking into the Master's face, and the disciples bending around him, the Master's arm about the lad as if it were his own—"Fear not!" If they would be greatest they must become as this little child, and thus should they enter the kingdom of heaven. The Lord does not want splendid workers so much as he wants simple and loving souls that are altogether given up to him. It is the song of the little children that he would not suffer to be silenced, and it was the mite of the poor widow that he commended more than all the golden gifts of the rich.—Mark Guy Pearse.

A BIT OF EXPERIENCE.

When I got light on this subject I changed the order of the arrangement at once. I said, "I have tried a hundred times to be holy, and failed every time. I know I will never be any better nor do any better unless my heart is made better." I was, indeed, stripped of all hope from anything I had done or could do. Then the crucifixion of the flesh, with its fallacious hopes and plans of reformation, was fully accomplished. My conscience was purged of dead works, and I was let down into the vale of self-abasement and self-despair, and down in that vale of self-conscious impotency my feet firmly rested on the "Rock of ages, cleft for me," and Jesus "was made unto me wisdom and righteousness and sanctification." Then I learned practically what I had all through believed as a theory, that as in justification by faith, so in entire sanctification of the heart, it was "not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour."

When I was thus crucified with Christ in the full and final destruction of self-dependence I learned the happy art of living by faith in the Son of God, and then the good things embraced in my oft-repeated vows and covenants I secured, of course, as the legitimate fruit of a present entire consecration to God, steadily maintained as a fact, and my present acceptance of Christ for all that he has engaged to do for me, never for a moment to question whether he will do this or that which is embraced in his covenant engagement, but gratefully accepting his facts with unwavering confidence, momently "living by faith on the Son of God." He that "thus believeth shall never be confounded." Never since I was thus crucified and purged from dead works have I made any vows pertaining to the inner life and looking to a future fulfillment.—Bishop William Taylor.

A WEIGHTY CHARGE TO MOTHERS.

"Take the child away and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thy wages."—Exodus 2: 9.

The speaker was an Egyptian princess, the daughter of Pharaoh, and she uttered the words over an infant divinely beautiful, the son of a Hebrew woman whom she knew not. The woman, its mother, took the child to the hut of her husband, and there many a time did the princess come to gaze on its beauty, or send for it to the palace of the king, her father. But not for long—only for a few fleeting years—during infancy and early boyhood, would the child be entrusted to these its own parents. Very soon the lad in his glorious promise would be removed to the palace of Pharaoh, so awful in the eyes of the vast multitude, so rich in the spoils of wars. Year after year, as boy and youth and man, he would be trained in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; year after year he would pace through the Egyptian temples, among the priests, through long avenues of sculptured obelisks; year after year would he gaze with wondering eyes on the blue and crimson walls adorned with the stories of Isis and Osiris, and of judgment and death. They thought they should make of him a great warrior and a great prince among them; but it was all in vain. He clung to the memories of his childhood, trained by his mother in the traditions of his race, and bearing even on the sluggish shores of the Nile a feeling of love and reverence for that great Chaldee, Abraham, the father of the faithful and the father of the race, and listening to the story of that heroic boy who has left to all ages an ideal in the words: "How shall I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" The sympathies of that heroic foundling have ever been linked, not with Egyptian magnificence, but with Hebrew servitude; not with the clashing of cymbals of the oppressor, but with the sorrowful sign of the oppressed. His mother had taken that child and nursed him, not for Pharaoh, but for God. When he grew up to be a man, all the long years of luxury and suppositions of princedom slipped off from him with the one desire to be recognized, not as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, but as the champion of the oppressed. So had these few years of early education done their work on the heart of Moses.

Nor is this by any means exceptional experience. Marvelously plastic in childhood is the soul of man. He may be exposed to the arrow of light that scatters the darkness around him, or to the flaming darts of wickedness that rankle in the wounded counscience of the world. Without a good mother's care, Henry IV. of Germany, becomes a miserable prince; but blessed with a mother wise and tender, Louis IX. of France, grows up into a saint of God. How many a good and great man has said: "If I have gained anything in life, I owe it to my mother."—Archdeacon Farrar.

LIVE PRAYERS.

After a prayer-meeting, at which a female had been among those who spoke aloud in prayer, a person slightingly observed, "As for that woman, she could pray all night." "Yes," replied a devout friend, "and I do not doubt that she has often done so." This was a first-rate reply. Of how few could it have been spoken! Yet those who are much in prayer alone are those who pray to purpose in the assembly. You can tell the other sort, however ready their utterance. It is parroty: too glib to be earnest, too professional to be deep. This kind of praying is a mist which does not wet you, a fire which does not warm you. You could sleep from "Our Father" to "Amen" under such a performance. Yet it is very good and proper. There is nothing the matter with it, except that it is dead—dead as the woman's child, which neither of the two mothers cared to own, in Solomon's court. Oh, for more living children!—we mean true, crying, struggling prayers. These can only come from those who in private wrestle and weep and prevail.

An occasional break-down is very refreshing. To observe a heart too full to express itself with the tongue is most arousing to the soul. Oh, that some of our brethren would or could break down! They are too far gone in routine to be able to rise into the natural, much less into the spiritual. While such machines press like a nightmare on our prayer-meetings, things cannot much improve. Oh! for deliverance!—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

AN OBJECT-LESSON.

The young people of a certain church in the West had a chance not long since to give an object-lesson and did it well. One of their number who had been long absent from home, soon after her return, made an entertainment for her friends; delightful music was to be expected, and some other enjoyments of a special character. The invitations were sent out for Friday evening; to the lady's disappointment, one, and another and another, of those whom she specially wanted, politely declined the invitation; they were sorry not to be with her; under other circumstances nothing would give them greater pleasure, but for that evening they had a previous engagement. On being pressed as to what it was, they explained that it was the evening for the regular young people's prayer-meeting. Their friend was so astonished at this reply that she took some trouble to learn whether the young ladies had known of one another's intentions in declining her invitation, and found that each had acted without knowing what the other meant to do. Don't you think she must have decided that in the minds of some people the prayer-meeting was an important place, and the engagement to attend it was not to be lightly broken?—Pansy.

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

"My children," said the old doctor, "I have a story to tell you of something that happened many years ago, which I shall never forget:

"One day—a long, hot day it had been—I met my father on the road as I was coming home from the hayfield, tired, dusty and hungry.

" 'I wish you would take this package to the village for me, Jim,' he said hesitatingly.

"Now, I was a boy of twelve, fond of play, and not overfond of work, and it was a good mile to town. My first impulse was to say I couldn't, but something stopped me,—one of God's good angels, I think.

" 'Of course, father, I'll take it,' I said heartily, giving him my rake.

" 'Thank you, Jim,' he said. 'I was going myself, but I don't feel very strong to-day.'

"He walked with me to the road that turned off to the town; as he left me he put his hand on my arm, saying, 'Thank you, my dear boy. You've always been a good son to me, Jim.'

"I hurried to the town and back. When I came near the house, I saw a crowd of farm hands at the door. One of them came to me with a pale face.

" 'Your father,' he said, 'fell dead just as he reached the house. The last words he spoke were to you.'

"I am an old man now; but I have thanked God many and many a time since that hour, that those last words were, 'You've always been a good son to me.' "—British Friend.

THE SMOKE.

Lord, I have laid my heart upon Thine altar,
But cannot get the wood to burn;
It hardly flares ere it begins to falter,
And to the dark return.

Old sap, or night-fallen dew, has damped the fuel;
In vain my breath would flame provoke;
Yet see—at every poor attempt's renewal,
To Thee ascends the smoke.

'Tis all I have—smoke, failure, foiled endeavor,
Coldness and doubt and palsied lack:
Such as I have I send Thee, Perfect Giver,
Send Thou Thy lightning back.

TEMPERANCE.

THE PRESENT CONFLICT.

Methods of campaign have been the occasion of much recent discussion. The self-styled broad-gaugers, and those who do not care to take the trouble to brand themselves with a trade-mark, have been doing some sparring in the newspapers. The difference between the two factions has been greatly magnified, but there is a difference. One faction wants prohibition continued as the primary principle and paramount issue of the Prohibition party, without either dropping or ignoring the other planks in the platform. The other faction insists that prohibition is not the dominant issue, nor even the question of chief concern before the people. The writer speaks only for himself. I came into the Prohibition party because I wanted to destroy the liquor traffic. The tariff question did not call me into the Prohibition party. I did not join the party to settle the money question. It was not railroad monopoly nor foreign immigration that influenced my exodus from the Republican party. The chief motive behind my change from the old to the new was a burning desire to see the horrible business of drunkard-making by state and nation abolished. In the Cincinnati convention I opposed the adoption of the fifteenth plank, commonly called the dominant issue plank. I opposed it because I believed it unnecessary; but I believed then and believe now that the prohibition of liquor traffic is the greatest issue before the American people. The settlement of this question should command the first attention of our statesmen. But for this question our party would never have been born. I believe the protective tariff to be a burden. It ought to be abandoned as a policy of government and it will be. I do not make one speech in fifty without telling the people where the Prohibition party stands on this question, but I insist that the abolition of the drink curse is of superior importance. While the financiers of the country are going wild in demagogic deliverance on the repeal of the Sherman silver act, our so-called statesmen are silent as the grave over the criminal waste of a business that has destroyed more wealth in the United States in the past decade and a half than the entire value of the gold and silver production of the world in five hundred years. From 1380 to 1880 the gold and silver produced in the world was $14,675,000,000. The liquor traffic in the United States alone destroys for labor this vast sum in less than fifteen years, on the most conservative basis of estimate. Let the whole world know where the Prohibition party stands on all the leading questions of the day, but let us not make ourselves the laughing-stock of the time by trying to settle half a dozen questions all at the same time and declaring each question the equal of any other.—A. G. Wolfenberger, in the Citizen.

FACTS ABOUT BEER.

The use of beer is found to produce a species of degeneration of all the organs.....says the Scientific American. Intellectually, a stupor amounting almost to paralysis arrests the reason, changing all the higher faculties into a mere animalism, sensual, selfish, sluggish, varied only with paroxysms of anger that are senseless and brutal. In appearance the beer drinker may be the picture of health, but in reality he is most incapable of resisting disease. Compared with inebriates who use different kinds of alcohol, he is more incurable and more generally diseased. It is our observation that beer drinking in this country produces the very lowest kind of inebriety, closely allied to criminal insanity. The most dangerous class of ruffians in our large cities are beer drinkers. Recourse to beer as a substitute for other forms of alcohol merely increases the danger and fatality.

The district attorney of Essex county, Mass., says: "I am inclined to believe that beer not only creates an appetite for something stronger, but that its immediate influence and effect upon crime is more dangerous to the community than the stronger liquors, in this way: The excessive use of the stronger drinks is liable to make men drunk and helpless, unable to do much harm, while beer excites men to acts of violence, desperation and crime."

NUGGETS.

It is estimated that 15,000,000 children are receiving temperance instruction in the public schools of the nation.

Forty-five thousand scholars from the Sunday-schools of the old country are said to drift into intemperance every year.

Reports from the Eastern States indicate that the Prohibitionists are more active than is usual in any but Presidential years.

A "Prohibition" church composed of colored people has been organized in Charlotte, N. C., with a membership of eighty.

In a long obituary list of foreign brewers, published in the Brewers' Journal, nearly all whose ages were given were in the forties or younger.

The casting of a vote is to each individual soul as solemn a responsibility before God as any religious command or ordinance.—Christian Arbitrator.

The brothel flourishes in proportion as the liquor evil flourishes—an inevitable attribute of a rum civilization, for liquor always inflames the worst passions of men.—New England Home.

The following is gleaned from the newly combined W. C. T. U. and prohibition papers, the Colorado-Plaindealer: We favor State control of the drink curse—this kind let the nation prohibit it, and then have enough control over it to enforce the law.

John Duggan, an ex-saloonkeeper, gave evidence before the grand jury on August 3, implicating about one hundred and fifty men in wholesale robbery of the cold storage building at the World's Fair grounds, and its subsequent firing to prevent discovery of their crime.

At the recent session of the National Liquor Dealers' Association in Chicago, a Californian read the pledge which is submitted to candidates for the Legislature binding them in return for the support of liquor men to oppose all temperance measures presented. The matter was discussed in secret session, and it is probable that this is the method which the National Association will follow in each State to secure the legislation their business wants. Yet some good people still assure us that the temperance question is not in politics.—The Facts.

A year's numbers of the Cynosure would make six good-sized volumes of valuable reform literature, containing 550 pages each.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Love, the great teacher.—vs. 1–7. Corinth was a center not only of the greatest wealth and luxury, but of the grossest idolatry and all its accompanying licentiousness, so that the very name of Corinthian applied to a woman marked her out as a courtesan. And yet one of the greatest difficulties which beset the Corinthian church was in reference to the doing, or not doing, of an act which in itself was no sin, yet which might become the occasion of sin in others, and, perhaps, of still more sin in themselves, as it involved a transgression of the great law of love. Should they partake of meat that had been offered to idols? All social life in Corinth was closely linked with the prevailing idolatry. Meat which had been offered to idols was commonly eaten and often exposed for sale in the markets, so that one was liable at any time to partake unconsciously of such provisions. "We know that we all have knowledge." That is, every intelligent Corinthian Christian knew, as the apostle says in verse 4, that an idol is nothing, a nonentity; and so the sacrifice was also nothing but just like any other food. So, now, in regard to dancing. We know that to move our feet to the sound of music is not in itself a sin, yet Christian sentiment has very generally united in condemning the dance because of its frivolous and impure associations. Many contend that to drink a glass of wine or other liquor occasionally is in itself no sin. The testimony of physicians regarding the action of alcohol on the human system has made this ground really untenable, yet we may grant it in the way of illustration. How many have become drunkards through the force of example! They saw some man to whom they looked up—perhaps he was a minister of the Gospel—take a social glass at some fashionable gathering, and they were emboldened to do the same, thus kindling the fires of an appetite which would burn to the lowest hell. Who was responsible? We must remember that the higher one's social standing and general excellence, the more far-reaching and mischievous a bad example. Mere knowledge tends to self-conceit, "but charity edifieth," tends to build up God's spiritual temple, by helping each other forward in the divine life. To think that we know a great deal is the surest sign that we know very little; but if we have the principle of love in our hearts we have the Spirit of God, and are taught of him. Then it follows that we shall use our knowledge, not to push our brother down, but to keep him from falling, and we shall abstain from things that to us are lawful if we have reason to think they will prove a stumbling-block in his way. "For there is not in every man this knowledge." All had not thrown off the yoke of their heathen superstitions so far as to feel that an idol was nothing, and it became sin to them because they thought it to be sin. So young people have not the knowledge of mature Christians. The latter might go in safety where the former could not. The question is not always, Will doing such and such a thing harm me? but, Will it harm my neighbor? Can I do it and still be my brother's keeper?

2. The danger of abusing our Christian liberty.—vs. 8–11. Verse 8 expresses the way in which the intelligent in the Corinthian church viewed this subject. "But," Paul says, "take heed lest by any means"—perhaps when you least think it—"this liberty of yours becomes a stumbling-block to" a weaker brother. "And through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ died." The solemnity and pathos of this thought should certainly keep Christians from every place of questionable amusement, and lead them even in dress and minor matters to be very careful that they do not lead some soul astray. A girl who had been a Sunday-school scholar, and had drifted into a life of sin, said that her first step in the way which led her to ruin was trying to imitate her fashionable teacher's dress.

3. Total abstinence the true principle.—vs. 12, 13. When we cause a weak brother to stumble, we do the greatest possible injury to Christ and his cause. On this account wine-drinking pastors incur a fearful responsibility. This same principle would condemn the use of tobacco even if it was not a poison and so inherently filthy that none of the brute creation will touch it. The tobacco habit would not prevail so extensively among the young as it now does if they did not have the example before their eyes of Christian men—pastors and Sabbath-school superintendents who use the weed. And in view of the well-known fact that the tobacco habit leads to the drink habit, and tends to debasement of mind and body, should not every Christian who uses it say to himself: "If it was inexcusable in these Corinthian Christians to peril for meat a soul for whom Christ died, much less is it excusable for me to cause my weak brother to perish rather than give up a foolish and hurtful indulgence." Even things lawful may not be expedient, and thus they become unlawful as violating the great rule of Christian charity.

Literature.

A True Son of Liberty; or, The Man Who Would Not be a Patriot. By F. P. Williams. One volume, paper, pp. 190. New York: Saalfield & Fitch, Publishers, 12 Bible House. Price, 50 cents.

We have received a book with the above title, quite strongly written, but full of strange contradictions and antagonisms. Its hero is a minister who was persecuted for righteousness' sake, but who continually shocked both the conservatism and the common sense of his hearers.

There are two important principles that it develops, and which cannot be too strongly insisted on; the first is, that the effusive patriotism that prompts men to side with their "country, right or wrong," and hate all foreigners, is not a Christian grace. It is a crime against God and humanity. The second is, that the spirit and practice of war find no warrant in the New Testament Scriptures, but are, always and everywhere, un-Christian.

If this little work shall have contributed to the recognition of these two principles, it will, in spite of some absurdities, have had a mission; for

> "He is a freeman whom the truth makes free,
> And all are slaves besides."

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Preacher's Magazine, which is edited by the Revs. Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory, for October, opens with an able sermon by Prof. James Stalker, entitled The Christian Name. The senior editor continues his articles on Moses: His Life and its Lessons, and in this number treats on Comfort and Rest. Dr. Robert A. Watson also continues his learned papers on The Apostolic Churches: Their Doctrine and Fellowship, and continues the subject of The Progress of Doctrine. Prof. George G. Findley completes in this number the study of the Bible. The Homiletical Department contains many outlines of sermons for special occasions and for ordinary use. Among the contributors we notice Drs. Alexander Maclaren, W. G. Barrett, W. L. Daly and S. Cuthbert Mitchell. A short article on Cause and Effect in Religion, by Prof. Drummond, is written in his well-known style and will command attention. The Notes on the International Sunday-School Lessons and Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts are well written and will be found most helpful to the pastor or teacher. The magazine, now in its third volume, is a recognized leader among the many homiletical magazines that are issued. It is published monthly at $1.50 per year; single copies 15 cents; by Wilbur B. Ketchum, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

The October number of the Cosmopolitan concludes the fifteenth volume, and introduces some new contributors. As a whole, in interest and illustration it is an average issue. The following are the leading articles for the month: Some Rejected Princesses, illustrated; Private Schools for Boys, illustrated; Old Newport, illustrated (and full of historic reminiscences); His Unbiassed Opinion; The Papyrus Plant, illustrated; How to Avoid Taking Cold; Senator Stanley's Story, illustrated; Notes of Ancient Rome, illustrated; Canoeing in America, illustrated; Mary of Modena, illustrated; Rome, the Capital of a New Republic; Peter Linnet's Interview, illustrated; A Traveller from Altruria, continued; Curious Bread-winners of the Deep, illustrated; In the World of Art and Letters; the Progress of Science, and Several Poems. Published in New York City; price, 12½ cents.

Special interest and importance attaches to the October issue of the Social Economist, which ably discusses the following topics: Path to Safe Banking and Currency, by the editor—Mr. Geo. Gunton; Is there a New South? by A. D. Mayo; With and Without a Government Bank, by Van Buren Denslow; Our Social Instincts, by E. P. Powell; The Economic Woman, by Wilbur Aldrich; Specialization of Labor Functions, by Kemper Bocock; Our Labor Outlook, by Edward Thimme; and editorial departments replete with thoughtful comment on current events of most interest. Published in New York City (Union Square). Price, 25 cents.

PAMPHLET.

"A Life and a Lesson: An Address by Dr. D. B. Wilson, Professor in the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., at the beginning of the Session of 1893–'94—September 19, 1893. This address will commend itself to any young man who designs to lay the foundation upon which to build a successful career. Its "lessons" are drawn from the "life" of Abraham Lincoln, and presented with a clearness and earnestness that indicate the deep interest which the speaker had in those whom he addressed. It is an excellent discourse, and can be obtained from the author at the Seminary.

Religious News.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Rev. Arthur T. Reed, evangelist, has secured the services of Mr. L. S. Chafer, an efficient Gospel singer. During the revival season their work will be general and undenominational.

—The program for the triennial Congregational Sunday-school Convention, Medina, Oct. 31, Nov. 1, is out and gives promise of a strong, excellent and helpful meeting.

—Rev. B. Fay Mills has concluded a successful series of meetings in Concord. The services have been crowded. Sept. 28 was observed as a day of prayer, most of the shops being closed at the mayor's request for two hours in the forenoon and two in the afternoon. There were many neighborhood prayer-meetings at eight in the morning. At nine nearly every church in the city was opened.

EVANGELICAL.

—The annual convention of Christians at work in the United States and Canada will be held under the auspices of the International Christian Workers' Association this year in Atlanta, Ga., for seven days, November 9–15. These conventions have been held for seven years, and are interesting large numbers of earnest Christians throughout the country. Railroads in nearly all parts of the country have granted a reduced rate of a fare and a third, and Atlanta Christian people are preparing to welcome the delegates.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—In his address before the Indiana conference, President John, in speaking of the gift of Mr. DePauw to the university at Greencastle, Ind., said that there was a misapprehension by the people as to the amount of the bequest; that it was thought the gift would amount to $1,500,000, whereas the probabilities are that it will not exceed $900,000, which includes $300,000 already received."

—Dr. George E. Reed, president of Dickinson College, has been asked to take charge of a leading Presbyterian church in Philadelphia.

—"And there is that other evil," said Bishop Bowman, in a recent sermon, "'filthy euchre.' No, that doesn't seem exactly like the name. What is it? Oh, yes, 'progressive euchre.' Well, filthy euchre is not a very bad name for it, anyway."

—The annual conferences of the Methodist Episcopal church are pouring in their petitions to Congress for the repeal of the Geary Chinese Exclusion law.

—President W. F. Warren writes that the first meeting of the university senate of the Methodist Episcopal church (see discipline of 1892, paragraph 323), will be held at Syracuse University on Friday evening, Nov. 17.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The twenty-first annual State convention of the Y. M. C. A, at Elgin, Ill., last week, was well attended and interesting. Franklin W. Ganse, Chicago, was made president of the State Y. M. C. A.

—Rev. J. G. Stewart, a Presbyterian preacher, is on trial before the presbytery at Monmouth, charged with breaking the faith.

—Methodists of Iowa, in session at Maquoketa, adopted a resolution denouncing the license plank in the Republican platform.

—Canadian Catholics at Montreal want Pope Leo XIII. to appoint an apostolic delegate for the dominion.

—A colored philosopher "down South" is reported to have said, "Life, my breddern, am mos'ly made up of prayin' for rain and then wishin' it would cl'ar off."

—By a vote of 76 to 54 the Ohio synod of the Presbyterian church refused to sustain the appeal of Rev. Henry Preserved Smith.

—It is estimated that in New York City are found about 8,000 Chinese, of whom 300 are Christians, and not less than 3,500 congregate from all directions to "Chinatown" every Sabbath.

—The churches of Aberdeen, S. D., have organized an Anti-saloon army, with a good membership and encouraging prospects of success.

Talks to S. S. Teachers.

After a long and unavoidable delay, the author,

Rev. J. G. Terrill,

is ready to issue the above-named book. This book is the result of twenty years of experience in the practical work of the Sunday-school, the Teachers' Meeting, Conventions, and Lectures to Teachers. The work will be of 200 pages or more, divided into five departments:

I. The Sunday-school Organization and Management.
II. Methods of Work.
III. Studies in Human Nature.
IV. Rules of Interpretation as Applied to the Bible.
V. Illustrative Exercises, for Primary Classes and Children's Meetings.

As to the subject matter, the manner of treatment, and the price of the book, the author has kept in view the wants of the officer and teacher of ordinary talent and attainments.

Its price after February 1, 1891, will be 50 cents per copy.

All orders received before that time will be filled at 40 cents per copy, postpaid.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

Pres. Thomas Holmes, Union Christian College.—I am the uncompromising foe of secret societies in any form whatever.

Rev. James W. Strong, D. D., Pres. Northfield College — We do not favor secret societies; hope there will never be one in this institution.

Rev. P. M. Bartlett, D. D., Maryville College.—I believe that secret societies, generally speaking, are fraught with mischief and should be discouraged, especially in our institutions of learning.

Pres. Joseph Moore, Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

Rev. Alex. Burns, Pres. Simpson Centenary College.—Although a Mason myself, I have not a very exalted notion of the importance or influence of Masonry. In fact I don't see much necessity of secret societies of any kind.

Rev. S. B. Allen, D. D., Westfield College.—Deeming them (especially those best known) injurious to all the best interests of mankind and destitute of all moral right to an existence, we cannot but pray and labor for their overthrow.

Pres. A. M. Weston, Eureka College.—No human institution has the right to exact oaths. Even the church has, formally, none, and civil governments, if they require them, can only do so because they themselves are ordained of God. Freemasonry has no such right, having no divine origin.

Prof. Bascom, Williams College.—Bind not the corrupt to your very bosom with bonds of secrecy, and hope to escape their influence. That breath of pollution, the breath constantly on you, which you draw into the seats of life as if it were air, is malaria, ready to creep stealthily through soul and body.

Professors Edwards A. Park, Abner Phelps, E. P. Barrows and Egbert Smythe, Andover Theological Seminary, to the American Tract Society, Boston, 1865:—Asking for "a judicious and carefully prepared tract, tending to dissuade the members of the churches of Christ from joining secret societies."

Rev. E H. Fairchild, D. D., Berea.—Secret societies are of two kinds, those which aim to secure special and unequal advantages for their members, in social, civil, political and business relations; and those which seek to promote some moral, social, or political reform. The first among which Freemasonry is the most prominent, we regard as selfish in their nature and essential aim, and hence antagonistic to the Christian religion.

Horace Mann, the American apostle of Education:—Why do all languages ascribe an open countenance to a brave and high-souled man, but a close, shy, disguised, secretive one to villains? To what class do the secretive animals belong—the fox, the tiger, the cat, the snake? Should brutes imitate men as in Esop's time, would not those form the secret societies?....Where do gamblers live? Where do counterfeiters ply their trade? Where does licentiousness breed its pollutions? Do these seek daylight, the open street, the market place, the common resorts of virtuous men? No, they all belong as by the tie of natural affinity, to the order of secret societies.

Rev. Randall Ross, Pres. Lincoln College, Mo., 1873.—Take the report of the Grand Lodge of Odd-fellows for the year from which it appears their revenue amounts to $4 291,071.12. Of this sum only $1,503,471 40 has been spent in "relief and charity." Only about one third of their revenue is thus expended annually. This leaves an immense sum of money unexpended by the order every year, which must in a few years become a dangerous power in the hands of the order. And this is but an illustration of all the secret orders of the land: and hence we look upon the power of such an immense amount of money in the hands of a power whose workings are in the dark, in secret, as far more dangerous to the financial affairs of the country than all our much talked about railroad monopolies.

Home and Health.

To polish tortoise shell ornaments, rub with pulverized charcoal and water, using a clean flannel cloth; next moisten with vinegar and rub with whiting wet with water, or powdered rotten stone may be substituted for the whiting.

A shoe that is uncomfortable from pinching may be fixed by laying a cloth, wet in hot water, across the place where it pinches, changing it as it grows cooler, for a number of times. This will cause the leather to shape itself to the foot.

It is well to know that Bologna sausage is exceedingly unwholesome because of the pepper and spices, and also that it is usually made from tainted beef, if no worse. One imported kind is made from the flesh of worn-out horses and mules!

To polish patent leather, take a half-pound of sugar, one ounce of gum arabic and two pounds of ivory black, and boil all together. Then let it stand until cooled and settled when it may be put in bottles for use. This is also good for all black shoes.

To clean japanned goods, wet a sponge in warm suds and wash the tray, etc., and rub with a cloth. If it looks smeared, dust on a little flour and rub it with a cloth, while if it has any marks they may often be removed with a little sweet oil rubbed on with a piece of flannel.

No person should eat heartily when very tired. The wisest thing to do is to drink a cup of hot water with three tablespoonfuls of milk in it, sit down for five minutes, and then begin slowly to eat, masticating thoroughly. In a little while the vigor of the stomach will come back, and all will be well. If this course were followed, there would not be one case of dyspepsia where now there are a dozen. It seems to be the most difficult of all things properly to control the appetite. It seems to be the master. It requires will power to get it under control. When once mastered, something important has been accomplished in self-discipline.—Journal of Hygiene.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

Mrs. Rev. W. M. Howie, of 3557 Prairie avenue, is giving rooms, breakfast and evening dinner for $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75 per day, according to rooms occupied. By the week, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00. Parlors and bedrooms are all convenient, and furnished for rest and comfort. The residence is four miles from business center, and three from Fair grounds. The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: 'A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00.

FARM NOTES.

Paralysis in chickens is due to overfeeding and lack of exercise. Give less food and make the fowls scratch for a large part of their living.

Plymouth Rocks and the light Brahmas are rivals for public favor. Each has its advocates, but the best judges generally prefer the Plymouth Rocks.

If you are eager for fruit, plant dwarf trees in your orchard so as to get the fruit early, but if the orchard is planted to last, the standard trees are alone worth consideration.

English farmers say that sheep, like other animals and human beings, require change of scene, and that the removal from one pasture to another without waiting till the grass is exhausted is beneficial.

In planting ornamental trees about the home, see if you cannot introduce something new, instead of following the example of all your neighbors. Variety of trees add to the picturesqueness of a landscape, and you can do something toward it. The cut-leaved weeping birch is not very much known, but it is one of the most beautiful and satisfactory of all trees for lawn planting.

A portable fence is an extremely useful thing upon any farm, and yet few farmers possess one. In folding sheep upon different parts of a pasture it will be found almost invaluable. It will serve to enclose a truck patch in early spring, when you want to fence stock out rather than in. In short lengths you can surround your corn shocks with it and let the cattle have the run of the field. Forty to eighty rods of it will answer for most uses, and we think if you would try it you would not begrudge the cost.

Do you know how quickly strawberries will give you a return if you set them out properly? If you can get your plants now, taking them up from the old beds with a ball of earth attached and put them in good ground, you will get a good crop next June. Such plants will make almost as quick a start as pot-grown ones, and cost very much less. How well they will do after they have started depends very much on yourself and the cultivation you give them. Liquid manure is an excellent fertilizer for hurrying them along and for making them fruit copiously.

To retain an abundant head of hair of a natural color to a good old age, the hygiene of the scalp must be observed. Apply Hall's Hair Renewer.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT
of the Holy Ghost,
BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

Don't be the Axe! Just keep in mind that the grocer or the peddler has "an axe to grind," when he tells you that he has something "as good as" or "the same as" Pearline. There can be but one reason—more profit to him by your use of the substitutes.

But how is it with you? What reason can you have for wanting to take the risk? Certainly not economy—Pearline leads to the greatest economy in every direction—saves the most money, time, clothes and health. If your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 386

HOW TO GET THERE.

A morning train runs directly to Hopkinton from Davenport, arriving at 8:43 A. M. Persons coming by way of Cedar Rapids can get this train if they go by way of Oxford Junction from Cedar Rapids. Two freight trains, one from each direction (north and south) reach Hopkinton shortly before noon, and there is a night train from the north at 8 o'clock. Twelve miles north of Hopkinton, at Delaware, is the junction of the Illinois Central with our road—the C., M. & St. P.; eighteen miles north, at Oneida, is the junction of the C., M. & St. P. with the Chicago Great Western. At Oxford Junction Hopkinton branch connects with the main line of the C., M. & St. P., between Chicago and Council Bluffs.

NEW YORK STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The annual State Convention of the New York Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held (D. V.) in Utica, N. Y. (Tuesday and Wednesday), November 14 and 15. Addresses will be made by a number of able speakers. Full particulars will be given next week. Let all friends of the cause make an effort to attend. Rev. Henry L. Kellogg is now lecturing in the State and arranging for the convention.

REV. S. R. WALLACE, Pres.,
203 W. Colvin street, Syracuse, N. Y.

"Is the German professor, who writes a spiritual commentary on John with a foaming beer mug at his side, insincere?"—Christian Statesman. As to the beer, no.

The modification of the Geary Chinese exclusion law, which was introduced in Congress by Mr. McCreary, has passed the House by a vote of 167 yeas to 9 nays. It provides for extending, for six months, the time for registering resident Chinese, and repealing the section requiring their photographs to be taken.

A National Convention, under the auspices of the National Reform Association, is to be held in the First United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, Pa., on the 14th, 15th and 16th of November next. Its objects are discussion of the various social, religious and political evils of the times. We trust that the evils of the secret society system will not be overlooked as a mighty factor in demoralizing the home, the church and the state. The evidence of this fact is overwhelming.

On Sunday last the gates of the Columbian Exposition were thrown wide open to all persons, and extraordinary attractions in musical and other forms were presented by the management, with the effect of enticing 140,588 paying visitors. But the event was of rather a disappointing character. In the great Manufactures Building the exhibits were covered up in nearly every instance, just as has been the case on previous Sundays, and the same can be said of other buildings which people had imagined would display attractions equal to the week day exhibits. As a consequence the Art Gallery was soon thronged, and the crowd there was far greater than any previous Sunday. The buildings controlled by the government and half the State buildings were closed, and in those that were open many of the exhibits remained covered. This is virtually the last week of the Exposition, and the attendance is large.

White Caps, who have long been a terror to evil-doers, and a menace to the peace of communities in portions of Indiana, have recently encountered large blocks of opposition from law-abiding people, and are gradually but surely coming to grief. Sometime ago a band of these secretly organized ruffians, at Salem, in that State, seized Mrs. Dalton, a resident, under a weak charge of improper conduct, and doomed her to a whipping. Elijah Dalton (her husband), and his brother, James, with four others, named Holsapple, Boling, Barnett and Peyton, composed the party and proceeded to carry their scheme into operation. James Dalton held his sister-in-law, while Holsapple applied the whip, and the others stood guard to prevent interference. But stern justice took up the case, and the two Daltons and Holsapple were sentenced to confinement in the State prison for five years each; Boling to a term of three years; Barnett for two years, and Peyton, for turning State evidence, goes free. But White Cap rule is becoming decidedly unpopular in that region.

CONTENTMENT.

BY THE EDITOR.

Would you behold contentment? Come with me
Where stands a fisher's cot beside the sea—
A hovel, in the eyes of pride and wealth—
A home, where mingle joyous love and health.
There, free from dangers of his vent'rous life,
Conversing sweetly with his loving wife,
The sturdy fisherman the hours beguiles,
Blessed in his children's gambols and her smiles—
A very heaven in his partial eyes,
The beacon of his hopes when storms arise—
The one bright spot on earth when adverse gales
Expend their fury on his tiny sails—
The one dear hermitage where all is peace,
Where all his cares with all his perils cease.
Dependent only on his God above,
His crown contentment, and his sceptre love,
What heeds he there the frowning storms of state,
The politician's wiles, ambition's hate,
The pomp of royalty, the traitors' stain,
The robber's plunder, or the merchant's gain?
There is no world outside his cottage walls
On which the ruddy firelight cheerly falls,
As with a grateful prayer he seeks his rest,
Of all men living most supremely blest.

THE GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

ITS MISSION AND DESTINY.

[A paper by Rev. H. J. Becker, D D., of Dayton, Ohio, read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Chicago, October 5, 1893.]

(Concluded)

5. Another objection to the Army is the fact that it is a secret society. Its name is fabulous; its initiation, without authority and very silly; its chaplaincy, mockery, and tainted with sacrilegiousness; its charity a hindrance to helpfulness, and so boastful as to be excluded from the virtues, but its secrecy is the supremest folly. Concealed patriotism! What a farce! Military heroes behind the mystic veil! What a spectacle!

The champions of the grandest conflict of the age playing like little children in the sand! "Blackman; hide-and-go-seek; pussy wants a corner; merry-round-a-rosebush, you-in-your-little-corner-and-I-in-mine," is not nearly so foolish to adult performers, because in them there is at least some apology for play, while the didoes, the gewgaws, and the clownish vaultings of the lodge are too vain for men of sense to engage in them. Monkeys may do many things and be commended for them, which men may not do without being called monkeys. Were a monkey to act like a man of dignity, he would greatly enhance his intrinsic value; but when men act like monkeys, it greatly lessens their real value. How can a soldier consent to be shut into an upper room away from his family and kindred and engage in the revelry of initiations such as are conducted there? To do so, is to diminish the respect which would accrue to him as a participant in the late war.

The Ku-Klux Klan meets in secret to plot against those whom they wish to destroy. Secrecy is essential to their very existence. If their deeds were commendable, they would not want secrecy to hide them from the vigilant eyes of the authorities. What reason can the G. A. R. give for secrecy? Have they any tenable grounds for imitating the concealed conduct of the Klans of the South? They claim to be patriotic. Are not tens of thousands as patriotic as they who were not in the war of the rebellion? There are the generation who have come upon the stage of action since the war ended, are not they patriots? Then, there are those who were not in the service, although they were of sufficient age to have been there, and whose patriotism cannot be called into question. There are mothers and wives and sisters who during the war endured hardships as severe as any soldier endured in the service of his country. They went hungry and cold for the full period of the war. They did it as patriotically as any of the veterans decorated with the insignias of their bravery. Some of these women toiled by day and by night to make easy the couches upon which lay the wounded men who came bleeding from the field of conquest, and who would have died had it not been for the tender care of the heroic women who hazarded their lives to lift them up from the cots upon which they found them helplessly prostrated. Now, if the object of the Grand Army is to perpetuate patriotism, why exclude patriots from their gatherings? What interests can induce them to prevent other patriots from entering their lodge and assisting them to enhance the spirit of devotion to our common country? Is the organization so feeble that it depends alone upon its favored friends to give it existence? Are they ashamed of its internal ritual, and is it so conducted as to enlist the antipathy of the outside world were their workings known to the public? Do they wish to divide the emoluments of liberty so as to get the largest share to distribute among themselves? Why are those whom we have named, and whose patriotism is not called into question, deprived of the advantages which the lodge affords its members? Is uninitiated society dangerous to their existence, or are they not in harmony with those who are not eligible to become identified with them? Ought not the citizens of the Republic to be educated together? Ought not the lessons of patriotism to be taught our citizens simultaneously? Ought not the foreigner to have more attention paid to him than can be given by the exclusion which the debarring of a preliminary tuition affords? In short, ought patriotism to have any limits placed upon it by sectionalities, conventionalities, or selfish bigotry? If the citizens of our common country are to stand united against the foes of the nation, whether without, or within, they should have a common training together, so as to be able to form unbroken lines entirely across the front of every opposition which may seek to confront the civil, the moral, and the social safety of our people.

The extreme selfishness of the lodge which we here expose is further seen in the organization of the Sons of Veterans. They, we are told, are organized for the purpose of having trained patriots on hand should there ever arise another necessity like that of the rebellion. What an insult is that to every young man of the country whose father was not a soldier. Must a young man have the blood of a veteran in his veins to entitled him to the virtue of loyalty to his country? The Daughters of Veterans has also become a rage. The grandsons and the granddaughters will have to be introduced soon so that patriotism may be kept from disintegrating. Had we not better import some of the citizens of Hesse-Darmstadt? They were among the early patriots, and gave us some of the royal stock from which these patriots sprang who seek to monopolize the right to produce future patriots, and in case we should run short of the blood, they would be on hand to help us out of trouble.

6. The mission and destiny of the Grand Army of the Republic is not inviting. When men incase themselves in guarded rooms in the name of patriotism, they should not ask to be trusted with an element so essential to the development of loyalty as is that of devotion to the best interests of civil society. The mission of the Army is a selfish one. It lauds braveries which do not exist, and augments troubles that are only imaginary. It keeps up the antipathy of the war, and offers no remedy for the amelioration for the real condition of the old soldiers in the sense of urging upon them the blessings of that high type of our civilization which led the pilgrim fathers to plant upon this continent an early colony whose devotions to their country was tempered by their devotion to God. It seeks not to redress the insults offered by the American saloon which plants its vile dens near the very homes the government maintains for the relief of the indigent men who have no other assistance, and sits down with unconcern and looks with careless eyes upon the demoralization of those whom they, according to their boast, are organized to relieve. There is no need for such an institution unless it can be re-organized so as to make it an auxiliary of the church or the state, and competent to assume some responsibility and undertake its full share of the toil incident to the arduous work which the present moral status of the fallen ex-soldiers so conspicuously exhibits. God alone can redeem them from the thralldom of sin into which many of them have fallen. To them should be presented the mercies of Christ, and his power to save them from their sad condition. The closed-door methods of their work is so limited that they cannot hope to accomplish the good in a life-time which could be done by the Spirit of God in one effort. The lodge induces vanity by immortalizing its heroes until they are made to feel that they are the heirs of immortality by virtue of their achievements upon the field of battle. They speak of the bivouac of the dead who await the approach of the glorious morning when the heroic victors will come forth and join the galaxy of other ages and receive the illustrious appellation of having been the saviours of the nation.

Will my comrades suffer a word of exhortation? If so, please review the conduct and character of the Army, and look upon the utter regardlessness of their posts concerning the most important thing to be done to help the boys to a better life. With the influence of a healthy morality there will come to them less of the sufferings which they now endure. In the wake of morality will follow cleanliness of soul, body and spirit. This will bring to them untold comforts. The money squandered for rum will go towards the necessities of which they have made so many complaints, and from the day their moral condition is improved there will be added to them daily the benedictions of a pure life. Oh, my comrades, will you join me to secure to yourselves, and to all with whom we were associated during the war, that salvation which if a man have, he is not only a patriot, but also a soldier of the Cross through which the Invincible Christ conquered the foe of our liberty, and offered to make us vanguards in the army of the King of kings and of the Lord of lords?

SECRET ORDERS.

[A paper by John G. Fee, read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Chicago, October 5, 1893.]

In times of peace, no good man in his social relations desires secrecy or concealment. Conscious of benevolent purpose, he even desires that all men may see his acts and thereby be inspired to like benevolent deeds. Not so with men in their secret orders. A few days since, a Freemason said to me: "Mr. Fee, I am free to confess that the fact that good men in their social relations desire not secrecy or concealment, is a fact against Masonry."

Concealment awakens suspicion. Not only are all secret orders repulsive to the feelings of good men, but Freemasonry, the mother of them all, is especially so. In this fraternity, the very objects, oaths and practices are grossly subversive of propriety and justice, in all social, political and civil relations. The very design of the institution is to give undue advantage to its members over other citizens. There is not only a pledge to "conceal and never reveal," but a solemn oath to help and shield, even in crime. The oath of the Royal Arch degree as given by Bernard in his "Light on Masonry," is as follows: "Furthermore, do I promise and swear that a companion Royal Arch Mason's secrets, given to me in charge as such, I knowing them to be such, shall remain as secure and inviolable in my breast as his own, murder and treason not excepted."

With such aims and such oaths, how can we expect anything else but partiality in social and political relations, and the subversion of justice in civil courts? That this is done by the members of the various secret fraternities, is continually affirmed, and that by men who have abundant opportunities to see and know whereof they affirm.

A large proportion of our officials are, for various reasons, inveigled into these secret orders, and are so influenced by their oaths and associations that justice is averted and crime shielded. Intelligent and upright men affirm this, and say in the language of Isaiah: "Judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: fo truth is fallen in the street and equity cannot enter."

One reason why so many good men are tempted to take the enforcement of law into their own hands is because they believe that the courts—attorneys, judges, and many jurors—are often so swayed by their oaths and associations that justice is not to be secured at their hands. There is a law above law, and is given by Mackey: "The government of the Grand Lodge is completely despotic"—a law above law of church or state, and we may well say in the language of the Psalmist: "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

Not only is Freemasonry inimical to civil government, but especially so to the religion of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Masonry assumes to be a religion. "Masonry is a religious institution." So say Mackey and Webb. This religion proposes to "save men from sin, and fit them for the lodge above." Mackey, in his Masonic Lexicon, defining the term "Acacian," says: "It signifies a Mason who, by living in strict obedience to the obligations and precepts of the fraternity, is freed from sin." This assumed preparation for the "lodge above" is by "dead works"—the impious works of Masonry—a salvation without godly sorrow for sin, or trust in the Lord Jesus Christ—practically, a subversion of the religion of Jesus Christ. With its show of religion in carrying about the popular religious book of the land, whether it be the Bible or the Koran or the Shaster, this, together with its prayers, worships, and avowed charity, though rejecting the very objects of charity—the halt, the lame, the blind, and those not having "a visible means of support,"—yet with its show of religion it lures the superficial into the notion expressed by many: "Masonry is good enough religion for me."

The effect of the institution is pernicious; but this, baneful as it is, is not the worst feature of the institution, for it is openly and practically anti-Christ. This is seen in the deliberate expurgation of the name of Christ from portions of Scripture quoted. Any one who will take Mackey's Masonic Ritualist and turn to page 349 will there see quotations, as from 2 Thess. 3:6–16, in which the name of Christ is expurgated, cut out. Why this? We answer: Masonry is a Christless, worldly religion, in which, in its own language, "nothing must be said offensive to a brother." The name of Christ would be such to a Jew, a Mohammedan or a Parsee. Thus Christ is again "rejected of men."

No Christian man can consent to such a rejection of the name of Christ without disobeying the command of his Lord, who requires that we "honor the Son as we honor the Father." The interests of civil society, the stability of civil government, and the speedy establishment of the religion of Jesus Christ our Lord, demand that every godly man and woman unite in prompt and vigorous efforts for the removal of all secret orders in the land.

EMERSON'S FAMILY MONUMENT.

BY JONATHAN EMERSON.

[Mr. Jonathan Emerson is a resident of Otsego, Wright county, Minn., where he has been for years engaged in farming. He is now seventy-four years old, and, knowing the uncertainty of life, and having been a Christian reformer throughout his long and useful career, he determined that after this mortal existence is ended he will continue to "speak the words of truth and soberness" in which he here delights himself. To this end he has prepared a costly monument to mark his grave; and what follows is that which he has had engraved upon it, to perpetuate his record and his counsels. The four divisions represent the inscriptions upon each side of the monument.—Editor Cynosure.]

I.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge, but fools despise wisdom and instruction. Prov. 1: 7.

My son, hear the instructions of thy father and forsake not the law of thy mother. Prov. 1: 8.

For me to die is gain. I shall rise again a spiritual body. (Bible.) Jesus answered, My kingdom is not of this world. (Bible.)

Great peace have they which love thy law, and nothing shall offend them. Be ye angry and sin not. Eph. 4: 26.

Weep not for me but for yourselves and children. (Jesus.)

He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.

Speak the same thing, that there be no divisions among you. 1 Cor. 1: 10.

For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, but whosoever shall lose his life for my sake, and the Gospel's, the same shall find it. 1 Luke.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. Psa. 126: 5.

Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord, that walketh in his ways. Psa. 128.

Jesus said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me.

For every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved. 1 Jno. 3: 20.

A minister that pretends to preach Christ and him crucified, that will adjoin himself to the world's society and call every one that belongeth to the lodge his brother, God will condemn such a minister. Is it right to call a worldling, an infidel, a Jew, a brother? Jesus said, The secret things belong to God (not to men).

Almost all young men are spoiled by property given them; parents never should deed lands to their sons. If a neighbor injures you by word or deed, never take any notice of it, or do him any revenge back again.

Children should be taught at home to be quiet in church and respectful to older people.

There are none so deaf as the one who will not hear. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him. Psa. 25: 14.

One Rev. Mr. Johnston, in West Virginia, was being initiated into the Royal Arch Masons. The rope failed some way; he fell thirteen feet. It caused his death. He was an M. E. preacher. This happened January, A. D., 1890. This news is in newspapers all over the country. The Cronin murder in Chicago, A. D., 1889, ought to keep Christians out of lodges. The Christian is good enough without joining a lodge; for there is nothing hid which shall not be manifested, neither was there anything kept secret but that it should come abroad. Mark 4: 22.

A part of the secret societies exclude Christ. Christ will exclude them from heaven.

If you want to learn the secrets of the lodges, send for books to the National Christian Association, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

II.

For I am become like a battle. In the smoke yet do I not forget thy statutes. Psa. 119: 83. The proud have digged pits for me which are not after thy law. 85th verse.

Save the boy. The boy is in danger. Yes, your boy. With his bright eyes, clear brain, healthy body, pure principles now, and great promise of future usefulness, but in danger of intemperance and secret lodges. In the presence of 200,000 grog-shops no boy in our nation is safe. Your boy now may be saved. Will you do all you can by voting against the liquor traffic? Annually, in our United States, there is more than lost $900,000,000 for drinks, $600,000,000 for tobacco, $77,000,000 for fashion. A. D., 1888.

All those wastes are offensive to God. (Bible.) Secrecy has become so important that a witness can stand in court and refuse to testify against his brother in the same lodge. The judge let him go. If they are not stopped, they will soon take your or our property to run their lodges.

Many wars are started by running secret lodges (nights). Our American rebellion could not have been if our government had not allowed secret meetings.

In a large church in our country there was to be a church festival or fair. The leader sent out handbills, headed: "Latest!" It read: "Fun upon fun!" After stating the several things to be shown, it says: "Don't fail to see the ghost!" Can a church of God yoke herself up with people who are lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God? If I separate myself from the wicked world, as all good Christians do, how can I support preachers in the church who, by the most barbarous oaths, are united with institutions which are more of the world than of Christ? What communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? 2 Cor. 6: 14, 15, 16, 17.

I shall trust God to take care of my soul, no matter where my body is left. Lord, thy will be done, not mine. I have done what I could. I know that my Redeemer liveth; and because he lives, my soul shall live also.

Truth and Justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right.

Above all things, have fervent charity among yourselves, for charity shall cover a multitude of sins. 1 Peter 4: 8.

Seven times a day do I praise thee because of thy righteous judgments. Psa. 119: 164. The proud have forged a lie against me. But I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart. Psa. 119: 69. I tell you nay, but except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. Luke 13: 3.

After the man threw off his gold chain and Masonic pin, then he was sanctified and a revival commenced, and the result was one hundred converts. We should keep ourselves from the wicked world so as not to have our souls poisoned; we should shun saloons and bad men and bad women. Between two moral evils, I will not choose either. Give not thy son, brother or friend power over thee while thou livest. Pray for truth and righteousness, temperance and reform, as long as you live.

The friendship of the world is enmity with God, and whosoever therefore is a friend of the world is the enemy of God.

He was the best member in our church until he got rich, and now he is the worst.

Prayer has wonderful power when we pray in faith; prayer without faith is sin.

In April, A. D., 1884, Mrs. Miller, at Tower Hill, Ill., was cured by prayer in faith.

Style hinders the progress of religion.

A dying sailor-boy had a Bible that his mother gave him read to him. It saved him in heaven. There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Rom. 8: 1.

That if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shall believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. Rom. 10: 9.

LIFE AND WORK OF REV. JOHN LEVINGTON

[From the Wesleyan Methodist]

John Levington was born near Stewartstown, Ireland, on the day then observed as "St. John's Day." His father remarked, "He has brought his name with him; name the child John."

His parents were poor, but of the sturdy Scotch descent. He was reared in the Presbyterian faith, and converted in early youth.

At the age of sixteen, leaving the only shilling he possessed with his parents, he bade them farewell and set forth to make his own way in the world. Soon after this he joined the British army, and after eight years and ninety-eight days of service received an honorable discharge, having won a good character and an enviable reputation. He then entered upon a commercial career, holding many positions of honor and trust.

He was united in marriage with Margaret Jane Lafferty in Gortlowery church, Cookstown, Ireland, September 21, 1844. Mrs. Levington and three children survive.

* * * * * * * *

Brother Levington was a thorough reformer, and when convinced that the dark system of secrecy, with which the Methodist Episcopal church, then, as now, was honey-combed, was a menace to all the interests of the church, he began a relentless warfare in opposition thereto. This battle continued for about fifteen years, while he was yet in the Methodist Episcopal church. During this time he stood practically alone. He not only had Masonry and her satellites to oppose, but almost his entire conference from the bishop down. They sought by every means to persuade him to cease his opposition, but tempting salaries and proffered positions could not turn him. Starvation circuits and repeated attempts on the part of Masonry to take his life did not weaken him for a moment. Even when his conference pronounced him "superannuated and insane," he yet said with the Apostles, "None of these things move me."

Having fought a winning battle to the end, he withdrew with a clear record from the conference and started for the Michigan conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church, then in session at Brighton.

* * * * * * * *

He was not a great preacher, but a convincing lecturer. A master-workman in this as in other lines. The evils of intemperance, organized secrecy, and the false doctrines of Adventism and baptism, each received attention when occasion demanded.

He was also the author of a number of valuable books—eight in all, if we are rightly informed. Among his unpublished writings are sufficient poems to make a large volume. There was music in his soul, and rhythm in his thought and language.

As a man, Brother Levington combined the rarest qualities. He was as bold and strong as a lion, yet as gentle and tender as a child. The sufferings of humanity often moved him to tears, and seldom did he speak of his mother without weeping, though she had preceded him to the heavenly land by many years.

He was to a great degree a self made man, having had but few advantages in his younger days. He began preaching at the age of seventeen, and preached his last sermon the evening before the sad accident which caused his death.

Thus the hero of many battles dies with his armour on. Having fought a good fight of sixty-four years in the ministry, and kept the faith, there was laid up for him "a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give him at that day."

Upon whom will his mantle fall? Though the workers cease, their work must go on. The conference of which he was a member mourns its loss, but prays the Lord of the harvest to send more laborers into his vineyard.

HUMILITY.

When I think of the immensity of the universe, I am filled with the sense of my own utter insignificance, and am ready to exclaim with David: "What is man that thou art mindful of him!" The freedom of human will and the starry heavens are the two greatest marvels that come under our observation, and when I think of all the mighty worlds around us, to which ours is but a speck, I feel what poor little worms we are, and ask myself, what is greatness? I do not like such a word as design to be applied to the Creator of all these worlds, it makes him seem a mere artificer. A certain amount of anthropomorphism must, however, necessarily enter into our conception of God, because though there may be infinitely higher beings than ourselves in the worlds beyond ours, yet to our conception man is the highest being.—Tennyson.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An analogy.—A relic of the old Norsemen —A ridiculous masquerade at the bidding of a college secret society.—The meeting of the A. B. C. F. M.—A malicious attack on Rev. Louis Banks.—The Sunday Newspaper.

One peculiar result of the fierce gales which have swept over our New England coast, and for a distance of several miles inland—as trustworthy observers say—driving the salt spray so that the leaves on trees touched by it blistered and turned brown, is that in many places the plum, apple and pear trees, thus despoiled of their leafage, are now white with blossoms, and even in some a second crop of fruit has begun to show. "I improve the opportunity to draw analogies," says Thoreau; and surely this is such an opportunity. I have in my mind at this moment, and doubtless every reader can think of one or more among his acquaintances, who, when the storm of adversity swooped suddenly down into their peaceful lives, and tore off their branches and scattered their leaves (metaphorically speaking), instead of abandoning themselves to despair, only put forth new buds and blossoms, and went on to bear a second fruitage. Ah! those brave, sweet, hopeful, helpful lives, that meekly bow their heads to the storm, but when it is over look up in uncrushed confidence into the blue above, and thank God that it is no worse; that if the tempest was violent, it was also brief, and if it despoiled them of much that was a part of themselves, they could still feel gratitude in every torn and bleeding fibre, that at least God and heaven were left to them;—surely there are none who by the inspiration of their example lay humanity under a greater debt.

That was a curious "find" which a party of scientists discovered during a recent Greenland tour;—a patch of rye growing wild—rye that the old Norse planted nine hundred years ago. How delicate, yet how strong this "living link" with the grim old Vikings, that for so many springs has put forth its slender green blade, flourishing through the brief Arctic summer, and falling unharvested, to repeat again the same cycle of life and growth and death and resurrection, year after year and century after century! The sea keeps no trace where ploughed their dreaded warships; their city of Norumbega is as mythical as Asgard; and yet in this solitary corner of the frozen North, nature herself, who so long ago took them to rest on her bosom, has kept this memorial of their peaceful victories, over an even more stubborn soil than that of their own beloved Scandinavia.

Two Harvard students made themselves ridiculous the other day by parading through Cambridge streets with turbans on their heads a la Turk, and dressed in garments that were either too large or too small for them, and so grotesque in their general fashion as to make every passer-by turn to look, and set all the small boys to jeering. These young men had not become demented from over-study, as might have been one's charitable first thought. They were simply making themselves eligible for initiation into a college secret society. The performance, it is true, did not endanger life and limb, like the one which caused the death of the young Yale student Rustin, but it was one which reflected no credit on the institution to which they belonged, and from the doing of which they must have come, if they had any self-respect at all, with a smarting sense of personal degradation. It is an interesting question how much of ridicule these same young men would have dared in a good cause; I fear not a tenth of what they laid themselves open to at the bidding of a secret society. I can almost warrant that they would not have the moral courage to say "No," if to use this little monysyllable would expose them to the ridicule of their college chums. Verily, there is no saying into what queer depths of inconsistency the devil will make those plunge who abandon themselves to his leading.

The much-talked-of meeting of the A. B. C. F. M. (see Religious News, page 12 of this paper) has been a disappointment to a few, but a cause of rejoicing to more, that its proceedings have been, on the whole, characterized by such unexpected harmony. The celebrated Noyes case has been disposed of, which is certainly a blessing. The vote to appoint him as missionary to Japan, in spite of his views on future probation, is spoken of as a great triumph for the "liberals." As is well-known, the churches have hitherto not been represented on the Board, and as a consequence there has been such a steady falling off in contributions, that its adoption of a plan by which during the next four years one hundred new members may be added to the Board from the various churches, was only a self-preservative measure. Now that these questions have been satisfactorily settled, it is to be hoped that an organization which has had such a grand record in the past will take on a new lease of life and usefulness.

The malicious attempt of the Boston Record to make Rev. Louis Banks, the Prohibition candidate for governor, a party to the appointing of saloon-keepers as prohibitory inspectors, will not amount to much, except to show Prohibitionists what they may sometimes be inclined to forget—that every man they put up, even for the most trivial office, must be, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. The old party machine methods must not be allowed to creep in. Meanwhile Republican party papers are making all they can of this slip, forgetting what a huge compliment they are thereby paying the third party; for whoever thought of demanding or expecting such exceptional political purity from either of the old ones?

"It pains us to see the Sunday papers going wild, and attacking each other," says this same Record. There are multitudes of good people in the land whom the spectacle does not "pain" in the least. They are rather edified thereby. Let them squabble and fight and chew each other up in true Kilkenny-cat style. It will be all the better for decent journalism, that is content to make money six days in the week, and give itself and its readers a rest on the seventh. But there may be something in what the Record adds: "Someway the gloss seems to be wearing off the Sunday newspaper field, now that so many competitors are in it and so much scrabbling is being done. Apparently that gold-mine has its limits, and will not stand being worked too hard." If so, it will not be the first time that human greed has defeated itself, and found that, after all, it is cheaper and better to obey God.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 18, 1893.

The National Convention of the Local Preachers' Association, which assembled here last Saturday, has been holding daily sessions this week, or rather, two daily sessions. There are in the neighborhood of two hundred delegates, including two fraternal delegates from the Wesleyan Methodist church in England. The meetings have been interesting, not only to Methodists, but to the general public, and not the least interesting features were the song and praise services conducted with all the fervor and earnestness which was always characteristic of old-fashioned Methodism, to which the first hour of each session was devoted. The reports indicate the prosperity of the association and the great denomination it represents. Its college, Taylor University, located at Upland, Ind., although only four years old was reported as being firmly established and having a strong faculty. It has property valued at more than $60 000 and is free from debt. A resolution in favor of the prohibition of the liquor traffic and indorsing the work of the W. C. T. U. was adopted. The delegates called on President Cleveland, who held a special reception in their honor, Monday afternoon, and before they left the White House they did what was probably never done before—sang the long metre doxology in the East Room. This association is composed of local preachers, that is to say, preachers who as a rule are not pastors. Its objects are the promotion of fraternal intercourse, brotherly co-operation in all church work, including education, the advancement of the cause of temperance and the spread of Scriptural holiness. The visiting delegates are receiving many social courtesies and the pulpits of most of the evangelical churches have been open to them during their stay.

They were also given a practical demonstration of how a small missionary work, begun by one local preacher, has been made to grow into something that Washington is proud of, by the co-operation and assistance of ministers and members of all denominations, at the dedicatory services of the new auditorium of the Central Union Mission, held Sunday afternoon. The visitors found much to admire in the handsome auditorium with seats for twelve hundred people as well as in other portions of the large building owned by the Central Union Mission. This mission is maintained by an association composed of ministers, church members and many business men who are not connected with any church, and one of its rules is that at least four different denominations must always be represented by the members of its board of directors. At the anniversary meeting of the association it was unanimously decided to invite the revivalist Moody to hold a two weeks series of meetings in Washington this winter. Among the denominations represented by local pastors who delivered addresses at the dedicatory services were the Christians, the Methodists, the Presbyterians, the Episcopalians and the Lutherans, several of them having two ministers among the speakers. That gives a fair idea of the status of this mission.

An international commission, one member from each country, has been appointed to settle the long-disputed question of the proper boundary line between the United States and Mexico, caused by the shifting of the course of the Rio Grande river. These disputes have been the cause of endless trouble between the citizens of the two countries, and were it not for the disparity of strength between the two countries would probably long ago have led to war. It is hoped that the commission will succeed in reaching a final and satisfactory decision.

The fourth annual convention of the Young People's Christian Union, which has in four years reached in the United States a membership of more than 12,000, a remarkable growth when the membership of the Universalist church, to which it is attached, as compared with that of the other Christian denominations, is considered, was held here this week. About fifty societies, principally in the Middle and Eastern States, were represented at the convention. The Universalists have only one church in Washington, and that is a small one which was crippled somewhat several years ago by the withdrawal of its then pastor and some of its members to form what is known as the People's church; but its membership is large enough to handsomely entertain the delegates to the convention and they have liberally done so.

The hearing of several important cases before the Supreme Court will have to be postponed on account of the delay in the confirmation by the Senate of the nomination of Mr. Hornblower to succeed the late Justice Blatchford, as Chief Justice Fuller thinks they should be heard only before a full bench.

The House of Representatives passed the bill to amend the Geary Chinese Exclusion law after adopting an amendment providing that the Chinese who register shall also be photographed. Representative Bowers, of California, just before the debate closed, denied that he intended his recent speech against sending American missionaries to China as an attack on the Christian religion. The Senate is still in a dead-lock over the silver question.

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

My last communication closed abruptly with an allusion to a Jesuit's view of Freemasonry. This disciple of Ignatius Loyola was evidently a man of thought, who had given much study and research to the subject. He had arrived at the conclusion that Freemasonry is a device of those who reject Christ, and more especially the Jews, who seek to use it as a means of supplanting the Nazarene, conquering and suppressing the Christian religion and regaining the ascendency they once held in church and state. He claimed to have noted the fact that the controlling degrees were invented by Hebrews, and that the Jews were usually conspicuous in the legislative and administrative bodies of this order, and he was confident that the rejection of Christ from lodge-worship was due to Jewish influence, and that no change affecting the vital or essential elements of Masonry could be made without at least the consent of those who deny the atonement. There is much in support of this view, but it struck me that my informant had overlooked, or failed to mention, some very important facts in the case. Accepting Rebold's account of the Creation of the Ruling Body in the Ruling Rite, we have a production of exclusively Jewish origin in the Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General. But this same author affirms that all the rites of the Blue Lodge are strictly pagan in the first degree, that twenty five degrees of the Scottish Rite are the invention of Jesuit priests at Clairmont College, in the city of Paris, and that it was the successful agency used in suppressing liberty and restoring monarchy in Europe. It is doubtless true, as appears from the accepted history of Masonry, that Hebrews have employed it as an instrument to obtain power and compass their ends; but it is equally clear that the papists have made use of it for similar purposes, and that the papacy had far more to do in shaping its construction than Judaism. If we may credit Rebold's History of Freemasonry in Europe, Freemasonry is founded in paganism pure and simple. The twenty-five degrees succeeding the Blue Lodge, in Scottish Rite Masonry, are the inventions of Jesuit priests, to which eight degrees were added by seven Jewish adventurers in Charleston, S. C., in 1801. The fact is that no one class of false religionists can claim exclusive proprietorship of the order, for all have a share in its mongrel mythical traditions, dogmas and rites, furnishing common creed and altar at which all may substitute the "Grand Architect of the Universe" for Christ, and "deeds of the law" for the "righteousness which is thy faith."

If any one doubts the affinity of men of every conceivable faith in every conceivable shade or system of false worship, a day at the N. C. A. booth would remove all grounds for those doubts. Calvinists and Armenians, Annihilationists, and Future-Probationists, Mormons, Congregationalists, Buddhists, Baptists, Theosophists, Methodists, Spiritualists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, Disciples, Universalists, and what not, while declining to discuss the secret system, join in a common denunciation of all who expose the secrets of the lodge and unite in the cry, "Great is this Diana that has come down to us, whom all Asia and the world worshipeth, and loudly protest against our work, as if they were in mortal fear that their probation was to be shortened and the N. C. A. had come to "torment them before their time."

A well-dressed man, looking at Bro. Moody's picture, and reading under it his sentiment, "Come out from the Secret Lodge; better one with God than a thousand without him," exclaimed, "I am heartily ashamed of Mr. Moody. He ought to know better than to make such a statement as that. I am a Congregationalist pastor and I belong to a lodge. The lodge is doing more to help the poor in our place than the church," etc. I replied: "Possibly you are correct. A church whose pastor slanders the bride of Christ and yokes up with unbelievers in lodges is not apt to be of much use. The example and instructions of such a pastor would alienate all who had any faith in him from the church and lead them to the lodge. I think, sir, if Mr. Moody should chance to know you and the course you are pursuing towards his Master's bride, he would be as 'heartily ashamed' of you as you profess to be of him." J. P. Stoddard.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 20, 1893.

Dear Cynosure:—Time forbids writing all I would like to this morning. A Christian Workers' Convention is absorbing much of my time and energy. The convention has been in session three days, this being the last. It is purposed to raise money to-day to send out three missionaries. No one questions the need of more consecrated missionaries. These friends seem to be called of God, and he will doubtless put it into the hearts of his children to provide the means. I have spoken four times since my last writing, and am pushing the work here on the same general lines as in the past.

Yesterday afternoon I fulfilled a promise to visit Sister Flagg, Bro. Dea. I. Leadbetter and other friends at Wellesley. I found Sister Flagg in usual health, surrounded by helps for her arduous literary work. How she finds time to accomplish so much I do not know. Many papers are soliciting her letters, as would be expected. Her aged father, realizing that his own strength is failing, leans more and more upon her strong arm. God alone can supply the energy and strength she will need to accomplish all she has so generously undertaken. Dea. Leadbetter, though feeling the infirmity of years, does not in the least lose his interest in reform. Though comparatively isolated from the busy world, on his farm, he watches the news of the conflict as it is brought from week to week in the columns of our paper. I must stop now to attend the convention.

W. B. Stoddard.

FOR THE NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION.

PREPARATIONS AT UTICA.

Edmeston, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1893.

In the midst of the canvass of the Schuyler's Lake neighborhood word came from Bro. W. B. Stoddard about a State Convention at Utica. His suggestion being generally approved, preparation was immediately begun by correspondence, and next morning (Oct. 12), after a long walk up the beautiful lake road, I took a train at Richfield Springs, reaching Utica at noon. The pastors of several churches were away from home, but Rev. Messrs. Gennann and Bierdeman of the Lutheran churches were glad of the proposed meeting and promised co-operation. The Free Methodist conferences sat lately, and their ministers are hardly yet settled. The brethren of the Utica church were soon expecting Bro. Kendrick, from Illinois, to aid them as pastor. Consulting with them after an excellent prayer meeting, they were ready for the convention, and will aid in every way, and, if best, will open their fine brick church to the convention. There will be aid from other churches also, which will be developed and organized immediately. Utica has hardly been reached by our reform discussions. The visit of Pres. C. A. Blanchard, nearly twenty years ago, is remembered still, as also that of Bro. W. B. Stoddard in recent years. But the page after page of the city directory given up to the roll of secret societies proves the unwelcome fact of powerful lodge influence, if we did not know it from the prominence given to the asylum for indigent Masons and their families. This is a large and expensive building, in the eastern part of the city. Pictures of it are prominently displayed in the hotels, labeled, "Our Pride." This significant title is doubtless true. The institution ministers more to the pride of the lodge than to the distresses of the poor. It is a powerful appeal, nevertheless, to an unthinking public who forget an hour after they read the lodge reports that but one dollar in three that come into the treasury of the secret order goes out for helping the distressed. But if the truth struggles against tremendous odds, it has a more powerful helper. We shall be well able to overcome through the grace of our God upon us. Returning from Utica, on Friday, to Otsego county, the time has been fully occupied in the vicinity of Schuyler's Lake, Edmeston and Garrattsville. The master of the lodge in the first-named village, having given out that the lodge-room would be open to me for an address, word was sent to him that I thankfully accepted the offer and would return by Thursday to improve it. CORRESPONDENCE

OPEN-AIR WORKERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

21 Water St., Brooklyn, N. Y., October, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—Remembering the interest taken by the Christian papers and people in open-air and tent work when our association was formed last spring, an interest which has been continued during the summer toward Mr. Moody's efforts in Chicago and that of others elsewhere, and thinking that perhaps you had not received a concise account of the Section Conference on Open-Air Work held in connection with the Evangelical Alliance Congress in Chicago, we send the following report, made by our representative there. We hope you will find a place for some or all of it on your pages.

The Section Conference on Open-Air Work was held on Tuesday morning, Oct. 10, in the Memorial Art Palace in Chicago.

Rev. E. H. Pyington, of Brooklyn, N. Y., presided and made the opening prayer.

Prof. Graham Taylor, D.D., of Chicago Theological Seminary, said: "Open-air preaching is indispensable to the entire fulfillment of the church's mission to society. It is practicable. It is advantageous to both church and community. It reaches non church-goers of our large cities. Not many, perhaps, are converted at the open-air service, but many do follow the preacher to the church, become interested, and scores are thus brought to Christ. Once, when preaching from the rear of a Gospel wagon, Prof. Taylor invited his audience to come with him to an evangelistic meeting in the church. Instructing the driver to proceed slowly along the street, he kept on preaching. The crowd followed and when they reached church, over 100 men entered. Roman Catholics in large numbers attend. They seem to welcome and appreciate effort and message. Some are converted and become Protestants; others are blessed and stay in their own communion. No need of trouble with police. If they are consulted previously, their authority recognized, and their co-operation requested, they will prove friends. Congregations, including Romanists, will join in the Lord's prayer, which often is very helpful and inspiring. It is good for country as well as city. In one Connecticut town a union open-air Sunday evening service on the village green drew out 300—double the number who would have entered the church on summer evenings.

"Interest manifested in audiences should be followed up invariably in after-meetings, indoors or by personal address."

Rev. C. H. Tyndall, of Broome St. Tabernacle, New York City, said: "We hold open-air meetings the entire year, and always have good audiences, even when it is so cold that the speaker's overcoat must be buttoned. It is a regular church service, the notice being on our bulletin with all the others. The meetings are near the Bowery; the audience consists mainly of men, not only those on the streets, but those in an adjacent hotel who raise their windows and listen. Several speakers, each taking about five minutes, we find the best arrangement. Our ladies speak, holding the interest, and generally making the deepest impression. Audience is always quiet for them. Meetings are sustained by yoke-fellows' band, assisted by a committee of the Christian Endeavor."

Others also spoke. R. A. Torrey, Pres't.
Frank H. Marston, Sec'y.

E. T. M'INTIRE IN RHODE ISLAND.

Boston, October 14, 1893.

Dear Cynosure:—By kind invitation, I accompanied Bro. Davis to Providence, Rhode Island, to attend a convention held at the Helping Hand Mission in Olneyville, that wickedest part of Providence. There we had a good chance to testify to the saving power of Jesus on Saturday evening.

Sabbath morning we had a prayer and praise service, at nine o'clock, and from there we went out into the square at Olneyville. Bro. Davis presented the plan of salvation in the most convincing manner.

There he invited me to give my testimony in regard to my conversion and secret orders and wanted me to talk as long as I desired.

We had a large audience of very attentive listeners; and when the invitation was given to those who wanted to become Christians, one man came forward and gave me a hearty shake of the hand and said that he wanted to find the Saviour.

We closed our service at eleven o'clock, and Bro. Davis and I attended the Broadway Baptist church, where they have a Sabbath-school of one thousand, an average attendance being between seven and eight hundred. They have the largest Sabbath-school in the city, and I think in the State. The school was held in four different rooms in the church. Bro. Davis spoke to the primary department. The whole school was invited into the auditorium, where Bro. Davis was to address them; but he insisted that I should speak to them in his stead, and wanted me to tell all I could in a nutshell, of my experience in secret societies. It was a grand opportunity to talk to the young people and prejudice them against the great evil.

In the afternoon Bro. Davis again preached in the mission, and in conclusion spoke of the evils of Masonry and Odd-fellowship, using logical arguments that were indisputable.

At the evening service we had representatives from the various churches, many of whom were Masons and Odd-fellows. Every available place was filled.

God wonderfully helped Bro. Davis to fearlessly proclaim his whole truth. After the evening sermon, I spoke on the evils of lodge religion. At the close the people came to me eager to hear more about my experience in secret orders.

One man said that I had touched a number of points that to him were vital. He was a member of secret orders, but not at rest about remaining in them, and asked my advice about leaving. He said that they were sending him continually invitations to banquets and balls, which were accepted by himself and children, who were growing to be fond of the excitement and late hours. He was insured in these orders, so that his family would be provided for in case of his death. I gave him Scripture how to get out of them, and that was this: "Trust in the Lord and do good, and so shall thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "He will not see the righteous forsaken, or his seed begging bread." The Lord blessed us in striving to help others out of darkness into the light.

Yours truly, E. T. McIntire.

COLORED ODD-FELLOWS QUIT THE LODGE.

Charleston, Franklin Co., Ark., September 25, 1893.

Editor Cynosure:—Last year I read your excellent paper and gave it to my neighbors, for which I am called a "crank," "an old fool," and an Anti-mason, and pitied for spending my money for such "trash" as Finney's and Ronayne's expositions of Masonry. I thank God that he ever raised up such men to give the world knowledge of the evils of Masonry and other secret societies. Thank God, the light begins to shine in this dark land!

I preached to a colored, hoodwinked Baptist church, containing many Odd-fellows, and they acknowledged that they had been deceived; that the Masons had driven them from their lodge; that their charter was burned, and that they would not organize again. When they had sued the men who drove them from the lodge-room, the Masons had come into court and so far defeated them that the Odd-fellows had been mulcted in the costs of the suit. They now thought that Odd-fellowship was poor protection, and would have no more to do with it.

I proved that St Paul had been waylaid by an oathbound secret society, intending to kill him, and that they had tampered with officers of the law, as courts are juggled now to save Masons from the gallows. (Acts 23:22)

(Rev.) Chas. P. Pagot, (colored.)

We are always glad to hear from our colored friends in this reform. We know that their hearts are in the work, and rejoice whenever we see the evidences of their success in overcoming the works of darkness.

Last week we received an interesting call from Rev. Byron Gunner, the colored Congregational minister at Lexington, Ky., where he labors under the auspices of the American Missionary Association, to whose meeting at Elgin, Ill., he was journeying. He reports that he has recently obtained an eligible site for a new church edifice at that place, and thereby hangs an interesting tale. The ground selected was, before the war of the Rebellion, occupied by a slave pen, in which Negroes were locked and kept, and then auctioned off to the highest bidder. Among those subjected to this degradation were Mr. Gunner's parents. When the Yankees captured Lexington, the slaves were set at liberty and Confederate prisoners were confined in it. In some manner the rebels fired the prison and destroyed it. The key of this old slave pen, however, was secured by a colored resident and preserved, and was shown to us by Mr. Gunner. It is about one foot in length, and formidable in appearance, and possesses a national interest as a memento of the work of emancipation. Mr. Gunner will see that it has a prominent place in the new Congregational church.—Editor Cynosure.

"'Welsh pictures' is the work of ten Welshmen, among whom illustrating the beauties of Wales has been parcelled out according to the special familiarity of each. The result is a pleasing volume."—London Times.

THE EARTHLY FOOTPRINTS OF OUR RISEN LORD, Illumined.

A continuous narrative of the Four Gospels according to The Revised Version, with introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Illustrated by 113 full-page half tone re-productions. Small 4to, cloth.....net 1.50
Gilt edge, with silk book mark, boxed.....net 2.00
Full morocco, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, boxed.....net 3.75

Pictures reflecting the best in sacred art from Raphael to the present day are scattered profusely through the book.

"To many the life of the Christ will be a new book in this form. Though beyond the introduction it contains no word except what is found in the four Gospels, yet when read continuously, without the breaks necessarily made by the different stories of the four evangelists, the narrative takes on new force and lifelikeness. The very fact that this is not our usual method of reading the Word will give it a new reality."—Golden Rule.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Paper cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By Rev. Lewis O. Thompson. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master."—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By Hannah Whitall Smith. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects. By W. P. Mackay, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. Briggs. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Electricity and steam had a tug of war at Chicago recently. An old steam locomotive was matched against a new electric engine. When the word was given to start, the latter buzzed and scattered lightning round, while the switch engine gave a few puffs and started off with its antagonist in tow.

Three years ago William Brown, of Lost Creek, Pa., walked down a mountain path to the Philadelphia and Reading railroad tracks just in time to have his leg cut off by a passing train. A few weeks ago he was on the same mountain, walked down the same path, and at the spot of his former misfortune, he tripped and fell and had his remaining leg taken off by the same train.

Some Maine officials are credited with running across a molasses hogshead, not long ago, which bore a suspicious address. They opened it and found a barrel of whisky inside. Encircling the inner barrel was a strong framework upon which the outer barrel was built. The bungholes were opposite each other, so that the stuff could be pumped out without breaking the hogshead.

F. H. Wheelock, a St. Paul engineer, has just completed a model of a new electric fire engine, a pattern for which will shortly be obtained, that seems destined to work a revolution in fire extinguishing apparatus. It does away with the use of coal, and can be put in action with one horse and one man less than the engines now in use. The engine weighs but 4,500 pounds, and is of seventy horse-power.

MASONRY, RELIGION AND THE MORAL LAW.

Bro. W. J. Gladwin, Bombay, India, sends us the following, from an English Freemason:

"I am a Freemason of the English constitution, which materially differs in faith and ceremonies from the American, if the books are a correct version. I am still much of the same mind as heretofore, as we put quite a different construction on the aims and objects of the fraternity generally than do our American brethren. I think myself that they have no right to arrogate to their society a religious complexion. English Freemasonry looks more especially to the 'moral law'; Americans make Masonry (or rather make it out to be) nothing short of a religion. This is decidedly wrong. It is the same old story. A good thing can be brought into disrepute by the mistaken notions and errors of its followers, similarly as Christianity is by papists."

Admitting what this correspondent says of the distinction between English and American Masonic aims and objects to be true—as for morality on the one side, and religion on the other—we deny that English Freemasonry is any more moral than the American. We do so on the authority of an English lodge charge-book in our possession and that of the American Masonic publication known as "Ecce Orienti," designed for the use of the fraternity. Take the Master Mason's obligation, as an example:

ENGLISH:—"I will maintain a Master Mason's honour and carefully preserve it as my own; I will not injure him myself, or knowingly suffer it to be done by others, if in my power to prevent it; but on the contrary, will boldly repel the slanderer of his good name, and most strictly respect the chastity of those nearest and dearest to him, in the persons of his wife, his sister and his child."

AMERICAN:—"I will not knowingly strike a brother Master Mason, nor otherwise do him personal violence in anger except it be in the necessary defence of my person, family, or property. I will not cheat, wrong or defraud a Master Mason's lodge, nor a brother of this degree, nor supplant him in any of his laudable undertakings, but will give him due and timely notice, that he may ward off approaching danger, if in my power. I will not have illicit carnal intercourse with a brother Mason's wife, his mother, sister nor daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it."

In both cases the "moral law," which the English Mason says is the basis of English Masonry, is badly cracked, since it applies only to a part of humanity, and discards all the rest—not loving our neighbors as ourselves, unless they belong to our fraternity. Let us hear no more boasting of Masonic respect for the moral law in England or America.

As for the religious aspect of Freemasonry, we turn again to the English lodge charge-book and the American "Ecce Orienti," page 25, Entered Apprentice degree.

ENGLISH:—Worshipful Master—(To Candidate): "Mr. A. B., in all cases of difficulty and danger, in whom do you put your trust?" "Candidate: "In God." Worshipful Master: 'Right glad am I to find your faith so well-founded," etc.

AMERICAN:—Worshipful Master: "Mr. H., in whom do you put your trust?" Candidate: "In God." Worshipful Master: "Give me your right hand. Your trust being in God, your faith is well founded."

"The religion of Masonry is pure theism."—Mackey's Lexicon, Article "Religion" "Freemasonry is not Christianity."—Mackey's Encyclopædia, p 641. So the religion of Masonry is heathenish, permitting the worship of any deity most in fashion in any country. It enjoins morality so far as its Master's family is concerned, and nowhere else. So the less that is said of the religion and morality of English or American Masonry, the better. There is no difference between the two.

THE CHURCH PUT TO SHAME BY THE LODGE.

As there is on earth nothing so exalted, so pure, so excellent, that Christians may not derive benefit from the contemplation of it, so there is nothing on earth so low, degraded, or mean, that may not, at some time, become to Christians an object lesson full of instruction. It may take the form of rebuke for neglected opportunities of doing good, or it may be merely a slight suggestion for a Christian work that will spread and become a power throughout the world. It was in this connection that Paul wrote this memorable passage in 1 Cor. 1: 27–29: "God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are."

We have been led into this train of reflection by an article printed in the Inland (St. Louis), an illustrated Christian Endeavor monthly, in which occurs the following. It is a startling photograph of a degraded church; for any church that will allow itself to be surpassed in Christian work, or even in common benevolence, by a profane secret lodge, has surely fallen from its high position and prerogative as the bride of Christ, and is no longer worthy of his love:

"The church acknowledges that its mission is, in part, to help the unfortunate and to assist those who are in need. Is this being done in a systematic and satisfactory manner? Certainly among the household of faith is the obligation binding to visit the sick and minister unto them, and the church may point to many bright instances of recognition of this duty. What, though, was likely thought by those outside of the church of the following actual occurrence?

"In a town just small enough for everybody to know everybody else, a young married man was suddenly taken ill, and the fact was announced in the local paper the next morning. He was a member in good standing of one of the leading churches, and was also identified with a fraternal order. Before eight o'clock on the morning the announcement appeared, representatives of his lodge called at the home of the young man to know if any one would be required to sit up at night with him, or if assistance of any kind was needed, stating their desire to be of service in the hour of trouble. Indeed that was brotherly love. But what of the church?—well, after his recovery, they were glad to see him at the meetings again.....

"Evidently we should thoroughly analyze this most important matter, and, knowing what the world thinks and the reason for so thinking, we should not hesitate to return to primitive Christianity; we should, in humiliation, acknowledge our unworthiness and, by the grace of our Lord, show to the world that truly the Gospel is the power unto salvation, and that ours is a service of love devoid of selfishness."

Thus in accordance with our first proposition, that the meanest things on earth are often helpful object-lessons to Christians, we have here an instance where lodge "benevolence" (costing $3 to dispense charity to the amount of $2) puts to shame the church which professes to have been founded by our Lord Jesus Christ. Such a church should have our prayers for its restoration to its first works and its original devotion to its Founder; but there is nothing in the lodge, with all its boasted excellence, that deserves our praise, since, even at its best, it is unworthy of any comparison to "the church of the first born" with which all Christians should rejoice to be in the closest communion.

MASONS FOOLED BY SPURIOUS MASONRY.

Among the dispatches sent to the daily press, October 13, was the following, which needs but little comment. It came from San Francisco, California:

Master Masons of this vicinity have been badly fooled by an impostor called C. C. Burt, assisted by a Dr. Wilson, of Boston. Besides victimizing them in a financial way, he coaxed them into believing in a spurious ceremonial which he termed the "Royal Masonic Rite," claiming for it ninety-five degrees. It is really a revival of the Memphis rite, suppressed in France long ago, and revived since in England and the United States, only to meet the same fate. A circular of warning issued by the Masons says that one Harry Seymour, of New York, now deceased, surreptitiously obtained copies of the work and, with forged authority, brought it to the United States, and even went so far as to invade England with it, in which he was assisted by a Past Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of F. and A. M. of California, now deceased; but both were driven by the Grand Lodge of England from its shores, or they would have suffered trial and imprisonment as frauds. A leading Mason said of the fraud: "We do not complain so much of the financial injury done by the fellow as of his success in getting us to run off after false gods and do homage to downright humbuggery and tomfoolery."

We have an idea that there is no more "downright humbuggery and tomfoolery" in the Memphis rite than in the Scottish; for Mackey's Encyclopædia (page 497) says: "Like all Masonic rites that have ever been invented, the organization of the Rite of Memphis is founded on the first three degrees of Ancient Craft Masonry." The principal objection to it in this country is that the Masonic moguls here repudiate it, and what they discard all other Masons must avoid.

THE "SUICIDE" OF DR. GRAVES.

A Denver (Colo) dispatch reports that "Dr. Graves, the famous poisoner, who was supposed to have committed suicide in jail, is not dead. It is maintained that a pine log occupied the coffin. The story is that Charles N. Chandler, a wealthy citizen of Thompson Center, Conn., arrived here Tuesday in company with Stephen Morse of that place, which is Dr. Graves' old home and where the body is supposed to have been buried. These gentlemen told a hotel man that Dr. Graves was not dead; that the casket was opened at the grave in Thompson Center, against the protests of the widow, and found to contain a pine log instead of a dead body; and that the supposed dead doctor is now enjoying his liberty in a foreign country. A rumor has been current here for some time that the body carried from the cell in the county jail on that Sunday morning was wax, and not the flesh of the alleged poisoner. It is believed that the parties to the deception are some high officials and a secret organization. This rumor was strengthened by the fact that no one was allowed to view the remains except the most intimate friends of the Graves family; and also that Mrs. Graves refused to allow the body to be embalmed before shipping it to Massachusetts."

The foregoing, the substance of which appeared first in the Denver Evening News, indicates what we have already suggested, that Dr. Graves, who gloried in his Freemasonry, and declared on his Masonic oath that he was innocent, has succeeded in outwitting the law, and is alive and free. That his escape was effected through the agency of some high officials in a secret (Masonic) society seems to be conceded.

We have never held that all Masons make use of their fraternity for the perversion of justice and the protection of crime, but we do hold that it is capable of being so used, and is therefore a dangerous institution. Wendell Phillips was right when he said: "Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

SUCCUMBED TO THE LODGE.

The great Baptist University of Chicago, richly endowed through the benevolence of distinguished men of wealth, notwithstanding the reputed opposition of President Harper and the faculty to college secret socities, has been invaded by a chapter of the Greek-letter secret fraternity known as the D. K. E., or Delta Kappa Epsilon, under a charter granted at a recent convention of the order at Minneapolis. "This action," says the Inter Ocean, "is the result of the untiring efforts and persevering zeal of several Chicagoans, including Judge Julius Grinnell," with others, "all of whom are members of the Delta Kappa Epsilon Northwestern Alumni Association."

"These prospective 'Dekes,'" adds the Inter Ocean, "have been under the impression that their order has been kept a profound secret and that the organization would prove a complete surprise to both the faculty and the students. This is the first Greek-letter society to openly avow its intention of establishing a chapter in the University of Chicago, the reason of their reluctance being what they term President W. R. Harper's antagonism to all secret societies. In the latter belief the students are wrong. The Inter Ocean knows that Dr. Harper has no antagonism to secret societies, and that it was the faculty and not he that notified the students long ago that secret societies would not be permitted in the university unless the members lived up to the university regulations. This provision was not to be construed as permission to organize. Nor has the action by the prospective 'Dekes' been a surprise, for the reason that the faculty has been informed all along of what was going on. The reason that the faculty is opposed to secret societies is that they believe that they are boyish institutions that have no place in a dignified university; that they lead to the discussion of politics and other elements inclined to be disturbing. The regulations of the University of Chicago provide that if any student insists on becoming a member of a secret society, he must have been a student there for at least one year. The societies must submit all their house rules for acceptance to the faculty, and the names of every member must be known to the faculty. In case any student declines to abide by these regulations, he will simply be expelled. It is a fact also that the professors who came here from Yale and Harvard, and who were originally enthusiasts on Greek-letter societies, and who are still members thereof, were the first to insist that they should have no foothold in the University of Chicago."

Now that we have the reason why the faculty is opposed to secret societies, from such a trustworthy source, will some one rise to explain why they allowed the D. K. E. to invade their precincts with its midnight orgies? We have an idea that the love of patronage is at the bottom of their acquiescence—the hope that the popularity of the institution may be augmented by this "classical" acquisition.

NATURAL RIGHTS AND THE PUBLIC GOOD.

The rights of men are in nowise affected by majorities and minorities. If they exist at all they are real and absolute, even though all men should consent to their denial. Natural rights are the gift of God to humanity, and, as such, are inalienable. The right to life and to national liberty (including the rights of conscience and of religious worship), belong to the inalienable class. If the whole world should agree to deny them to a single person, they would be none the less sacred.

There are other rights which are relative, and grow out of relations of men in society. Among these are the right of suffrage and of eligibility to civil office. Such rights, when once conceded and not forfeited by crime, are, and should be, as sacred as the rights of nature.

"The first and primary end of human laws," says Blackstone, "is to maintain and regulate those absolute rights of individuals;" and a due regard for the general welfare requires that this primary object be steadfastly adhered to.

Much misapprehension has existed as to the relation of the public welfare to these natural rights. Most of the opressive acts of tyrannical governments have been decreed and enforced because they were supposed to be essential to the public good. Acts of uniformity in religious beliefs and modes of worship have been one of the common forms of oppression. It was supposed that the public good required such uniformity, and the laws of Great Britain and of some of her American colonies were made the instruments of oppression; not with any purpose of being oppressive, but in the name of religion and out of a regard for the general welfare. How utterly mistaken were the men who made and executed such laws we can now see; for what was designed to secure public tranquility was the most prolific source of conflict and injustice.

A due regard for the public good in the days of slavery was suffered to require that slaves should not be taught to read, and that they should not be emancipated unless they were sent out of the State. The same kind of regard for the public good excludes Negroes from the advantages of the best schools in the South, and compels them to ride in separate cars on the Southern railroads. The so-called public good is made to be subversive of natural justice and the rights of citizenship. Doubtless a majority of the people of Kentucky favor the principle of caste. They have embodied that principle in "the separate coach-law" that has just gone into effect. But they have forgotten that the will of the majority, when opposed to natural justice, can never be embodied in the forms of law, without injury, rather than benefit, to the general welfare.

—Rev. H. L. Kellogg was to have spoken at Herkimer, N. Y., last Sabbath, and will probably do so at Syracuse next Sunday.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard attended an interesting meeting in the Evangelical Lutheran church at Englewood, in this county, on Sunday evening last, and availed themselves of the opportunity offered of presenting the solid truth about the lodge system, with good effect.

—The Catholic Review charges that Abraham Lincoln was a Freemason. It is a matter of record that within a few days preceeding his assassination a high Masonic official in Illinois made the statement that Mr. Lincoln once applied for admission into a State lodge. His application was favorably received, but Mr. Lincoln failed to appear for initiation, and probably died without the burden of the horrible Masonic oaths upon his soul.

—Messrs. W. A. Wilde & Co., 25 Bromfield street, Boston, have just issued "Peloubet's Select Notes" for 1894. It is Dr. Peloubet's twentieth annual commentary on the International Sunday-School Lessons, and, like its predecessors, presents the Scripture truths in an attractive, comprehensive, and convincing manner, from both spiritual and practical standpoints.

—In one of the Ohio towns a good brother, who owns some Anti-masonic books, loans them to persons in other places, if the borrower will pay the postage both ways. In this way he is reaching the people and carrying the truth to those who are unable to purchase our publications. Let the light shine.

—Chicago policemen, who have been too demonstrative in their zeal to stop the preaching of Evangelist Rice and his wife on frivolous charges, have been notified by Chief Brennan not to make any more such arrests except for actual infractions of the laws of the State. The order has had a good effect.

—One of the comic writers introduces a conversation between a Union and a Confederate veteran, in which the former remarks: "We vanquished you in nearly every battle." "True," is the reply; "but from the looks of your pension list it would seem as if we wounded every mother's son of you!" The story is very suggestive.

—The North Michigan Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, at its recent session, left this testimony on record: "We have no confidence in those numerous societies that lock their doors and forbid an open investigation of their inward working. We are candid in our convictions regarding these institutions, and shall continue to work and pray for their complete overthrow." The truth has made these brethren free.

—A movement is in progress looking to a combination of all labor unions and orders under one central authority. In December next delegates representing the entire American Federation of Labor are to convene, and then the proposal for a closer confederacy will be discussed. Its objects, so far as published, indicate a conservation of all the influence maintained by the present organizations. We shall refer to them again next week.

—In answer to our query in a recent issue of the Cynosure, the Free Methodist says: "Many of our preachers give the anti-secret reform its due share of attention, while others, perhaps, might be reported as delinquent in the matter. While Free Methodist preachers may not feel it their duty to give their time wholly to this one reform, they should not fail, as opportunity offers, to 'cry aloud and spare not' against the corruptions of the secret lodge system."

—Prison Reformer Wines claims that among the evils connected with the immigration of foreign criminals we must place the exclusion of American boys from trades by the rules of alien labor unions. If the members of these selfish, tyrannical, secret labor unions are not criminals, the principles of their organization are vicious, as breeding conspiracy against the interests of all workmen who refuse to unite with them, or capitalists who decline to be governed by them.

—Our correspondent who writes from Big Springs, Kansas, asking the meaning of the Scripture in Matt. 16: 19, is informed that our Saviour appointed Peter to open the kingdom of heaven to all believers, which service, as the human instrument of the Lord, he performed on the day of Pentecost in that glorious sermon which he preached on that memorable occasion to representatives of about all the nations of the earth. The "keys" were furnished by the Holy Spirit; they were spiritual keys; and the fact that they are spoken of in the plural number is due to the peculiarities of the Oriental imagery—to open the outer and the inner doors. The kingdom having been opened then by divine authority, it has never been closed, and never will be until the end of the world.

—The New York Catholic Review intimates that the church which it represents so energetically, without carefulness as to correctness, is troubled with "flunkeys." This is what it says of the recent Catholic Congress in Chicago: "The delegates to the Catholic Congress resolved that the Catholic Truth Society was a bully good thing, or words to that effect, and then they went home without planking down their dollar for a year's dues to its treasury. Its fourteenth quarterly report, just issued, has a gloomy story to tell—its funds are so low that it has had to suspend the publication of new pamphlets. It is languishing for want of support." Did the Review ever read how the image of Dagon was thrown down and dismembered because it was worthless? That was God's method of warning against all religious shams.

—Archie McNeil, Secretary of Alcona Lodge, No. 322, Alcona, Mich., writes: "Some three years ago I received an exposition on Revised Odd-fellowship, and upon reading it I made up my mind to join the order. I have done so; think it is a splendid society. If a man lives up to its teaching he is a Christian man—straight-forward and upward—honest and true." Mr. McNeil is entitled to credit as the discoverer of Christianity in Odd-fellowship; but we fancy that he would fail to recognize real Christianity, which exists only outside of any order that, like his own, officially and persistently casts Christ out of its ritual and lodge prayers.

—The more we examine the reasons for our warfare against the lodge, the greater the magnitude of the reform appears. The interests of our whole country are involved in its success; the church, the family and the state are deeply impregnated with the evils of the lodge, and these evils are constantly growing and jeopardizing the very foundations of equal and just government. Week after week, month after month, and year after year, the N. C. A. and its faithful band of workers are striving to arouse the people to a sense of the dangers with which our whole constitutional fabric is threatened by this formidable instrument of Satan. From the papacy, which is the greatest of all secret societies, to the Good Templars, which is the weakest, the public good is menaced by secret combinations, some of them much more formidable in their operations than others against the general weal; but to cease from opposing all of them would be to compromise the truth and stifle the convictions of long years of experience. It is time that the people of this country felt the importance of our work.

—The Odd-fellows' lodge claims to be founded upon the "golden rule," to do to others as we would have them do to us. It has for its object, ostensibly, the giving of light to the novice, at his initiation, and when he sees it, amid the fol-de-rol of the ritual, it gleams from the torches of the scene-supporters, standing beside the conventional coffin and a plaster-of-paris corpse. Even in the light of the "golden rule," living up to it in its broad spirit, the lodge would be only half a Christian lodge—and it never went beyond this—for it rested alone on the relation of man to man, not allowing reference to the Author of that "golden rule" in its prayers. But it does not live up to any of the "golden rule." It takes a man's money, and when he is sick doles it out with a sparing hand. Another sick man, known to be quite as reputable as the first, will get nothing from the lodge, simply because he does not belong to the order. He has paid it nothing; he receives nothing—no "benefits," no "sick visits." Somehow it reminds us of the parable of the Jericho road. It is evident that the Good Samaritan did not belong to the lodge of the priests and Levites.

is no fear, however, that the key will be turned for any such discussion.

Reaching this place on Saturday evening, a place was kindly made for me in the home of Daniel Colegrove, who, with his wife, though both are aged and feeble, yet endeavors to maintain the Free Methodist church and its testimony against abounding evils. Bro. Coons, the new pastor, is hopeful of a good work for God here. By his request I spoke in the Sabbath afternoon service, on the paganizing of America by the lodge. In the forenoon, Rev. Mr. Griffiths, the Baptist pastor, invited me courteously to assist in his service, and gave an opportunity for a few minutes to give notice of our State Convention and the work it hopes to do.

A providential opportunity to reach Garrattsville, seven miles away, being offered, and Rev. Mr. Clapperton, of the United Presbyterian church, extending me a Christian welcome, I spoke to his people in the evening on the dangerous and destructive influence of lodge altars. Two days of visiting, tramping, and arranging for further work here set me along until I return this morning to Schuyler's Lake, on the way to Utica.

The Home.

BURNING DRIFT-WOOD.

Far more than all I dared to dream,
Unsought before my door I see;
On wings of fire and steeds of steam
The world's great wonders come to me.

And holier signs, unmarked before,
Of love to seek and power to save—
The righting of the wronged and poor,
The man evolving from the slave;

And life, no longer chance or fate,
Safe in the gracious Fatherhood,
I fold o'er wearied hands and wait,
In full assurance of the good.

And well the waiting time must be,
Though brief or long its granted days,
If Faith and Hope and Charity
Sit by my evening hearth-fire's blaze.

And with them friends whom heaven has spared,
Whose love my heart has comforted,
And, sharing all my joys, has shared
My tender memories of the dead—

Dear souls who left us lonely here,
Bound on their last, long voyage, to whom
We, day by day, are drawing near,
Where every bark has sailing room.

I know the solemn monotone
Of waters calling unto me;
I know from whence the airs have blown
That whisper of the Eternal Sea.

THE SUPPRESSION OF A GREAT EVIL.

Once upon a time a Great Evil came into a certain nice, respectable community; and, as is frequently the case, in order to attract attention, it assumed the guise of a woman, while in reality, it possessed all the mean traits ever manifested by the worst of men. Seen from one of its sides, its form and features displayed a great degree of feminine beauty, which elicited exclamations of admiration from the spectators, and it was not unusual to hear honest, sober citizens saying to one another: "I declare! it looks pretty well;" and the next would gleefully respond, "you're right; it does."

But seen from its other side, which was seldom exposed to the public gaze, an emotion of distrust and disgust superseded all feelings of admiration, and the beholder uniformly turned away with a shrug of the shoulders, and pronounced it an abomination.

It was not long before the presence of the Great Evil wrought serious injury to the community, by creating a sense of insecurity in existing institutions that had always been deemed profitable, wholesome and trustworthy. Selfishness, monopoly, rapacity, intemperance and other vices began to crop out freely in places where liberality, honesty, benevolence, sobriety and virtue had always been rigidly exercised from principle; and it did seem, as Deacon Gooding expressed it, "as if the very Old Boy had broken loose." And the citizens generally were not slow in discovering that all these disagreeable developments might be directly traced to the Great Evil that had come among them.

Singular as it may appear, there was a division among the citizens concerning the best methods of staying the effects of the Great Evil; and nearly every one of the principal wiseheads had a plan of his own for restoring the community to its former condition of quietude and prosperity. To harmonize these various proposals for reform it was decided to call a public meeting at the City Hall for a discussion of the subject, and to adopt such measures as should rid them effectually of the baleful intruder. It was also announced that the Great Evil would be present at the meeting, and should then and there be seen on all sides in the rays of the strongest lime-lights.

At the appointed hour the meeting was called to order, and a prominent individual took the chair. The Great Evil was placed conspicuously upon the platform, where all could behold it in the glare of the illumination, with its brightest and best side turned toward the audience. Nearly the entire community had responded to the call to satisfy personal curiosity, and assist in the rooting out of the public enemy.

Professor Scholasticus, taking the floor, said that according to his way of thinking, Education would tend to very greatly improve the character of the Great Evil, and so reduce the hideousness of its bad side as to render it tolerable in the sight of the people. He had come prepared to demonstrate the value of his theory, and he hoped that an opportunity might be given for a trial of his plan.

Several gentlemen doubted the success of the Professor's proposition; but it was unanimously voted that he might proceed at once with his experiment.

Ascending the platform, he first turned the bad side of the Great Evil toward the audience, and the effect was terrible, so great was its corruption and hideousness.

"I will soon change all this deformity into grace and loveliness," said the Professor, and then you will witness how the magic power of Education can be utilized for the reformation of all mundane evils."

With these words he proceeded to unroll and suspend by cords, between the audience and the Great Evil, one by one, a number of sheets of gauze, of varying colors, each bearing the name of some one educational or social accomplishment. There were etiquette, philosophy, mathematics, music, art, social development; and as each fell softly in front of the Great Evil, its appearance, as seen through the gauze, was gradually improved; the hard exterior gradually softened, the rough places seemed smoother, the angles became graceful curves, and the entire figure assumed apparent beauty. At last the work of Education was accomplished, to the satisfaction of the Professor, and all the spectators cried with admiration, "How charming it is! What wonders Educationc an perform!"

At this point of the proceedings a quiet old gentleman, with a twinkle of fun in his eye, but who had once been bitten by the Great Evil, arose and exclaimed: "But the nasty old thing is still there all the same, and as ugly as ever!"

This served, in an instant, to break the charm that Professor Scholasticus had thrown over the audience, and the criticism seemed so reasonable that many wondered why they had not thought of that before. So when the hall had again become quiet, it was unanimously voted "that while the influence of Education should in no wise be deprecated, it certainly could do nothing to reform a Great Evil;" and the Professor rolled up his veils and departed in a state of mental depression.

Mr. Morality then approached the Great Evil, and thus addressed it: "See here now, why don't you be good and go away? Don't you see how badly you are going on, deceiving and injuring many harmless citizens without any sort of provocation? You really ought to be ashamed of yourself! Now you might easily reform and be henceforth known as a Great Blessing; but if you go on as you are now going, you will get yourself terribly disliked. Don't you know that if you are virtuous you will be happy? Do be good to yourself and us, won't you?" As he asked this question, the Great Evil frowned so wickedly upon Mr. Morality that it drove him from the platform in a tremendous fright, and the audience heard the word "Fool!" emphatically hissed from the ugly mouth of the Great Evil.

A beautiful young lady, the embodiment of grace and innocence, next approached the Great Evil, and the result was awaited with considerable interest, for the young lady, Miss Piety, was greatly esteemed. Advancing to the Great Evil, she modestly whispered to it a few words from Holy Writ that more than once have made other evil beings to stand aghast and cry for mercy. Then she gently but audibly repeated the precious promises of the Scriptures to those who turn away from the wickedness which they have committed and strive to do only that which is lawful and right.

The effect of this upon the Great Evil was manifested in a loud burst of anger from its lips and a blow from its hand, which happily missed the young lady as she retreated from the hideous presence.

It began to look as if the Great Evil had come to stay—to rule and ruin; and numerous stout hearts quailed as they meditated the calamity that had overtaken the community.

A gentleman prominent in business and social circles, Mr. Broker, was the next speaker. "Since the prospect of ridding ourselves of this Great Evil is not flattering," he said, "and looking at the matter from a business standpoint, I would suggest that it be licensed for a good round sum annually while it remains among us. If we must endure its ravages let us also enjoy whatever income we may derive from it. I admit it would be better to have it go away, but no inducement we can offer it would probably result in its peaceable departure; and so the next best thing is to tax it heavily while it continues here. I therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that a remunerative license be placed upon the Great Evil, renewable annually."

At this point in the proceedings, Mr. Public Opinion, whose influence had been often felt in the affairs of the community with the happiest effects, immediately arose and said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen:—I am surprised and incensed to find any person in this assembly in favor of perpetuating the presence of the Great Evil in this community by offering to license its actions. To do so would be not only to share in its wickedness, for all its income is the wages of sin, and we cannot afford to thus put ourselves into partnership with such a monster. No! Perish the thought! We see how futile have been the influences of education, morality and religion in ridding us of this abomination. And now comes Mr. Broker, with a characteristic proposal to keep it among us for a consideration, as if money, flowing in upon us by millions, could prove an adequate compensation for longer harboring among us the destroyer of our homes, our children and our community. Now, Mr. Chairman, and you, Ladies and Gentlemen, if you will do as I direct, and support me with your influence and adherence, we shall soon be delivered from the curse of this vile creature, and our community will be restored to its former prosperity and happiness."

Shouts of applause greeted the speaker, whose timely counsels had dissolved the spell which the proposed license had cast over the meeting.

"And now," continued Mr. Public Opinion, encouraged by the cheering enthusiasm of the audience, "if we rise in the strength of our manhood and womanhood, and with one purpose, we shall go from here the victors."

With these words the speaker displayed an ominous cowhide whip and approached the Great Evil, whom he thus addressed: "You vile beast, you must leave us this instant forever, or be flayed alive! We are in earnest, and of one mind; and if you find any comfort in any victory you have here won to-night, your exultation will be very brief. Take that—and that—and that"—and every "that" emphasized by a terrific blow from the cowhide whip, cut deep into the carcass of the Great Evil, causing its life-blood to flow in torrents. "And that—and that!"—and continuously the tough rawhide fell upon the Great Evil with unabated force, until unable to withstand such overwhelming energy, it laid itself down and died where it had stood.

And then there went up from that hall such shouts of joy and wild enthusiasm as you and I have never heard, and can only hear when a Great Evil has been crushed out of existence by the power of Public Opinion.—Henry M. Hugunin, in the Union Signal.

GRACE DARLING.

[In a certain aisle of the Transportation Building one will hear, every few moments during the entire day, from passers-by, the exclamation, "Here is Grace Darling's boat!" and also, quite often, the questioning response, "Who was Grace Darling?" The following is a sketch of the incident which made famous a young unknown girl on an island off the coast of England, and accounts for the reverential interest of many visitors to the Fair, as they see her boat.]

On the verge of the sea on the Northumberland coast of England is a little village of white-walled, thatched-roofed cottages clustering at the foot of a grim ancient castle. In the old Bamburgh churchyard near by is an unostentatious tombstone with a canopy covering, under which, carved in the stone, is a sweet girlish face, a slender figure in graceful pose, with tiny hands folded over her breast and her arm encircling an oar, the emblem of her greatness.

On the most exposed of the Farne Islands on the Northumberland coast is Longstone Lighthouse. Standing within the castle keep one can see, even in the darkest night, the revolving light that sheds its intermittent gleams to warn mariners of the sunken rocks and perilous passages surrounding the group of islands known as the Outer and Inner Farne.

Here in this lighthouse tower, fifty-five years ago, was living Grace Darling, a name associated with heroism not only great, but sweet in unconsciousness of glory and in the gentleness of the humility which made her one reply to all who praised her, "I only did my duty."

On the night of Sept. 7, 1838, a steamer trading from Hull to Dundee, having disabled her machinery in the violent storm, drifted and struck on the deadly outer rock at 3 o'clock in the morning. The hull almost instantly parted and, with one exception, all the cabin passengers, twenty-five in number, were drowned. The captain was washed overboard with his wife in his arms. At 5 o'clock in the morning Grace saw from the lighthouse the vessel lying broken on the rocks nearly a mile and a half distant. This small, fragile girl, always rather delicate in health, was alone with her father and mother at the time of the wreck. With daring intrepidity she urged an attempt to rescue the shipwrecked survivors—if any there were. Her parents remonstrated, but yielded to her wishes and assisted her. She and her father stepped into their tiny cockle-shell of a boat, which could not have lived in the open sea for any length of time; it was pushed off by the bravely unselfish mother, and, in the face of the blinding storm, knowing that unless some of the shipwrecked crew were able to help them they could not return, under shelter of a range of rocks they crept, rowing with the gale, and by wonderful strength and skill they brought their boat to where the sufferers—nine in number—crouched. Darling himself picked the survivors off the wreck while Grace, with dauntless courage, managed to keep the boat from being dashed to pieces, and they returned to the lighthouse in safety. The storm raged on for three days in such wild fury that the survivors could not be conveyed to the mainland.

The Longstone Lighthouse was solitary and unknown no more. The daring success of this noble effort roused a warm and enthusiastic admiration throughout the world. A gold medal was awarded to William Darling, the father, while to heroic little Grace was given the highest honorary distinction of the Royal Humane Society—the gold medallion. These were forwarded to the Darlings through the Duke of Northumberland, who constituted himself the heroine's especial guardian and friend. Resolutions, awards, and other medals were bestowed by other National Humane Societies, money and gifts were heaped at Grace's feet by the wealthy and great who visited the wave-beaten, rock-bound tower. Even Her Majesty, the Queen, sent a mark of gracious approbation, and the gentle maiden, who in her pure loveliness and early death has been compared to a snowflake, found herself enrolled among the world's famous women.

In some respects this celebrity was troublesome. Applications for locks of hair came until Grace was in danger of baldness; the proprietor of a circus tried to engage her and groundlessly advertised her appearance; and even old William complained that sitting for his portrait seven times in twelve days was too tiresome.

Grace was quite unspoiled by the wealth of attention showered upon her. She only occasionally left her island, and invariably returned from the busy, crowded world outside with a stronger preference for her lonely life. Within four years after the loss of the Forfarshire her life was ended, and to her dying day the sight of the sea flying over the wrecked vessel was constantly before her imagination.

In the little church on St. Cuthbert's Isle containing her monumental slab Wordsworth inscribed this tribute to Grace Horsley Darling:

"Pious and pure, modest and yet so brave;
though young so wise, though weak so resolute."

SENSE AND SENTIMENT.

Prejudice is the yellow jaundice of judgment.

Some men, like pictures, are fitter for a corner than a full light.

Let no one overload you with favors; you will find it an insufferable burden.

Learn the art to be preferred before all others, of being happy when alone.

It is no point of wisdom for a man to beat his brains about things impossible.

A compliment is usually accompanied with a bow, as if to beg pardon for saying it.

Repentance without amendment is like continually pumping without stopping the leak.

Promises made in the time of affliction require a better memory than people commonly possess.

Nature has given us two ears and but one tongue, in order that we may repeat but one-half of what we hear.

As the shadow of the sun is largest when his beams are lowest, so we are always least when we make ourselves the greatest.

Hearken, therefore, to the voice of consideration; her words are the words of wisdom, and her paths shall lead thee to safety and truth.

SECRET THOUGHTS.

I hold it true that thoughts are things
Endowed with bodies, breath and wings,
And that we send them forth to fill
The world with good results—or ill.

That which we call our secret thought
Speeds on to earth's remotest spot
And leaves its blessings or its woes
Like tracks behind it as it goes.

It is God's law. Remember it.
In your still chamber as you sit
With thoughts you would not dare have known
And yet make comrades when alone.

These thoughts have life, and they will fly
And leave their impress by and by,
Like some marsh breeze whose poisoned breath
Breathes into homes its fevered breath.

And after you have quite forgot
Or all outgrown some vanished thought,
Back to your mind to make its home,
A dove or raven, it will come.

Then let your secret thoughts be fair;
They have a vital part and share
In shaping words and molding fate—
God's system is so intricate.

TEMPERANCE.

WHAT IT COSTS.

ELI PERKINS GIVES A LITTLE TALK ON THE FINANCIAL SIDE OF THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

"Britons," said President Cotton, "spend annually £130,000,000 of $700,000,000 in drink, an average of $19 for each Englishman."

Germany has 11,800 breweries, which turn out 864,000,000 gallons of beer.

America spends $900,000,000 annually for rum. The money wasted in drink in England, Germany and America would buy all the bread and meat eaten by the three nations. This awful burden compels twice the amount of labor in the world. This drink burden makes two-thirds of our sickness and three-fourths of our crime.

"Yes, but you don't have to bear this burden if you don't drink," says the drunkard.

You are wrong, my friend; I paid $425 taxes on my New York house last year. What was this tax used for? It was to govern a city where three-fourths of the arrests were made on account of drunkenness. I can govern myself, but I have to pay $425 a year to be protected from the criminal classes, made criminals through rum.

I was lecturing out in Kansas last spring, where they have prohibition. An intemperate man came to me one day and said:

"Yes, Mr. Perkins, this prohibition will bring ruin to the State."

"It will, will it?"

"Yes, it will impoverish us and destroy our business houses."

"Now, let's see about this, my friend," I said. "Let's examine this a little."

"If a Kansas farmer brings a thousand bushels of corn into Topeka, he gets how much for it?"

"Four hundred dollars," answered my friend.

"Now, if they take this thousand bushels of corn over to Peoria, how much whisky will it make?"

"Four thousand gallons."

"And this whisky is worth—how much?"

"Oh, after they have paid four thousand dollars revenue tax on it to the other thirty-six States, it will be worth about $4,600."

"And if this whisky should come back to Kansas you would have to pay about $4,600 for it."

"Yes; more too. We'd have to pay about $5,000 for it."

"Would it be worth anything to your citizens?"

"No; I suppose it would cause a great deal of idleness and crime. It would hurt us. I never did think whisky a positive benefit. I—"

"Well, how much would it hurt you?" I asked.

"Oh, I can't tell. I—"

"Well, I'll tell you," I said. "It will hurt you directly about $5,000 worth. You would sell the corn from which this whisky was made for $400, and then buy back the whisky for $5,000. You would be directly out of pocket just $4,600, and, indirectly, it would cost Kansas, in idleness and crime—caused by the 4,000 gallons of whisky—about $20,000. It would take 16,000 men a day a piece to drink it up, if they drank a quart a day each. The loss of 16,000 days' labor to Kansas would be $20,000, wouldn't it?"

"I declare!" exclaimed my friend, "I never heard it put in that way. I see it all plainly now. I'll never say anything about prohibition damaging Kansas again."

"Yes," I said, "if Kansas can save $25,000 on every thousand bushels of corn by letting it go over to Peoria, the more she is damaged that way the richer she will become, till finally, Illinois utterly impoverished, will have to call on Kansas to lend her money to build poor-houses. But there is one thing in Kansas," I said, "that will be ruined by prohibition."

"What is that?" asked my friend.

"Why, her poor-houses. Your poor-houses and jails will become empty. Think of a poor-house with not a soul in it but the poor-master! Think of a jail without a convict—poor bankrupt jail and poor-house!"

THE BEER TRADE OF EUROPE.

The Paris Temps publishes some interesting particulars with regard to the quantity of beer which is now brewed in Europe, the figures, which may be taken as approximately correct, representing the average for the last five or six years. The total quantity brewed is 5,105,000,000 gallons, Germany coming first with a production of 1,071,066,105 gallons, of which 644,752,505 gallons are brewed in North Germany, 344,830,305 gallons in Bavaria, 70,953,750 gallons in Wurtemberg, 56,445,840 gallons in Baden, and 17,083,305 gallons in Alsace-Lorraine. Great Britain comes next with a total of 874,192,275 gallons; while Austria-Hungary is third with a total of 308,889,675 gallons; and France follows with about 225,000,000 gallons. These are the only countries in which the production reaches 100,000,000 gallons; but relatively to their population, Denmark, with 49,189,000 gallons brewed and Norway with 38,304,990, have a much larger production than most of the others. But Russia, with its vast area and large population, produces only 65,892,870 gallons, while the quantity of beer produced in other countries is: Switzerland, 26,694,495 gallons; Spain, 53,062,500 gallons; Turkey, 3,150,000 gallons; Italy, 3,099,665 gallons; Roumania, 2,225,000 gallons; Luxumburg and Servia, 2,092,500 gallons each; and Greece, 150,345 gallons. The Temps adds that the average quantity of beer brewed out of Europe is 380,668,815 gallons in the United States, 36,258,940 in Australia, and 4,966,020 in Japan.

It is announced that General Booth, of the Salvation Army, is "maturing a scheme for carrying on a war against the liquor traffic all over the world."

There were 785,285 men employed on the railroads of the United States last year. Many are required to be, and all ought to be, abstainers from intoxicants.

The Young Abstainer's Union of China now numbers in its several branches at Shanghai, Foo Chow and other cities, upwards of nine thousand members.

A significant fact is shown by the latest census—that the States where crime is not increasing faster in proportion than the population are prohibition States.

Kentucky is said to have been the first State in the Union to grant school suffrage to women, in 1845. Kansas followed in 1861. To-day the women of twenty-one States have this privilege.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Belief in Christ's resurrection essential to belief in our own.—vs. 12–16. The doctrine of the Resurrection is one so commonly accepted at the present day, that we can scarcely make allowance for the incredulity with which it was heard by the heathen world of Paul's day. When he preached on Mars' Hill, the crowd listened to him patiently till he came to this one point of the resurrection from the dead. Then they dispersed, some mocking it as a crazy idea; others pondering it doubtfully, as something so new and strange that they did not know what to think about it. Greek philosophy had no place for such a doctrine as the resurrection of the body. The Stoics taught that the soul is ultimately reabsorbed into Deity, and therefore loses in the future state all individual being. The Platonists taught the immortality of the soul; but, believing matter to be the source and cause of all evil, they denied entirely any bodily resurrection. We can see that it was very easy to adulterate the Christian faith in its purity as the Corinthian church had received it from Paul, with the theorizings of their own philosophers—probably with the Platonist idea that there could be no resurrection, save a spiritual one, which was the same thing as denying it altogether, for it was denying the very corner-stone of the Christian faith: that Jesus rose again with the same body, only changed from corruptible to incorruptible, in which he had hung upon the cross and been laid away in the tomb. The whole Gospel hinges on this event, which was accordingly confirmed to all succeeding ages by the testimony of many eye witnesses—no less than 500 at once, the greater part of whom were living at the time the apostle wrote, as it was then only about twenty-five years from the time of the crucifixion; and finally he was seen of Paul himself, as of one born out of due time. Yet his testimony was none the less trustworthy, for it was not as a spirit that he saw Christ, but clothed with his glorious resurrection body, as John saw him in the Island of Patmos. All meaning would be taken out of our Saviour's resurrection "if the dead rise not," and it would be proved on the face of it a fable. And if Christ be not risen, how vain all efforts to save men; how vain the Christian faith itself! Christianity would be a lie, the Gospel a tremendous failure, and mankind could only take refuge in the Epicurean philosophy:—"Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." "And we are found false witnesses of God," willful deceivers, for if there is no resurrection for us in the future, there can have been no resurrection of Jesus in the past.

2. Christ's resurrection the basis of our Christian hope.—vs. 17–19. If Christ has not been raised, then it follows that there has been no atonement, and our sins are still unforgiven. Then they who have fallen asleep trusting in him are perished. They might as well have died like the heathen around them, without hope. "For if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." We lose both this world and the next.

3. The fact stated.—vs. 20–23. The apostle, now turning from this melancholy hypothesis, states the blessed and glorious fact, "Christ has risen, and become the first-fruits of them that slept,"—the earnest of our own resurrection to a glorious immortality. Life must come through the second Adam, as death came through the first. As we must all die, so we must all be made alive. "But every man in his own order." As there are fixed laws which control the motions of the heavenly bodies even when they seem most erratic, so

> "That divine far-off event
> To which the whole Creation moves"

must have its slow, orderly unfolding. The righteous dead will rise first. This is "the resurrection from the dead" which Paul's greatest desire was that he might "by any means attain unto;"—"the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," for which we are to strive, "forgetting the things that are behind, and pressing forward unto the things that are before."

4. Death destroyed.—vs. 24–26. "Then cometh the end"—of this present age or dispensation—when Christ's kingdom will be fully set up, and all powers which are hostile to that kingdom will be forever put down, whether earthly governments or demoniacal powers of the air. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "As Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more," so death cannot have dominion over those who are raised in his likeness. In reality we begin to die as soon as we are born. A process of change and decay begins and goes on continually. We have the seeds of death within us, just as in the resurrection we shall have the seeds of the eternal, the God-life. All we know about our resurrection body is that we shall be made like unto Jesus. The inexpressible cannot be expressed. Even Scripture cannot tell us more. Let us keep our earthly bodies clean and pure, so that having "borne the image of the earthly" we may hope to "bear the image of the heavenly."

AMERICAN BOARD.

Boston, Mass., Oct. 13, 1893.—Editor Cynosure:—While in Worcester I stopped at the Maple House. Here I found about fifteen of the Andover theological students. The Noyes case was naturally discussed at the dinner table. The young man sitting next to me said that he did not believe in a literal heaven or hell; that these were creations of the mind. Said he: "We grow into one or the other as we advance in life." These and similar views seemed to be entertained by all the students who expressed themselves.

These men were jubilant over the appointment of Mr. Noyes, as they regarded it a victory for the probation-after-death theory, which many of them, if not all, were holding.

The vexed question to be decided was: Shall Rev. Wm. H. Noyes, former missionary of the Board to Japan, return under its auspices? It was decided to return Mr. Noyes, by a vote of 106 to 24. Of those who voted in the negative, all but two were gray-haired men. There seemed to be difficulty in ascertaining just what Mr. Noyes believed regarding the probation-after-death theory. His friends claimed that while he hoped that some dying in their sins would have a chance to be saved, he did not found this hope on anything that he found in the Bible, and as a missionary he would teach only what the Bible taught. On the other hand Joseph Cook, who made the first address in the negative, endeavored to prove that Mr. Noyes really believed the probation-after-death theory, and would be likely to teach it, giving as evidence extracts from an address which he had made. Dr. Merideth, of Brooklyn, N. Y., formerly of this city, made the opening speech in the affirmative. Frequent applause showed that he had the sympathy of a majority in the audience. While the doctor is commanding in appearance and a very eloquent speaker, his theology is unsound to the core, if we may judge by this speech. Whatever Mr. Noyes may believe the doctor certainly favors the probation-after-death theory. He said: "To my mind, the teaching that the heathen goes into eternal darkness is as far beyond belief as its atrocity is beyond the bounds of exaggeration. It is a libel on God to represent the heathen as going into eternal perdition." Of the American Board he said: "I care very little about the machinery of the board, and would break it to pieces if I could." Of the church members he said: "The people can never go wrong. They do not bother and meddle, but work in the interest of Christ." When one of the brethren endeavored to apologize for some of the doctor's foolish statements, he arose and remarked: "I meant every word I said." If Mr. Noyes simply holds the mild views some would have us believe, he is certainly misfortunate in some of his friends.

AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY.

—The stated meeting of the board of managers was held at the Bible House on Thursday, October 5th, 1893, Theophilus A. Brouwer, Esq., vice-president, in the chair. On recommendation of the committee on distribution, grants of Bibles, Testaments, and portions were made to the value of about $1,648, including consignments for colportage work in Yucatan, Venezuela, and Columbia. The issues from the Bible House in September were 89,169 volumes; issues since April 1st, 1893, 523,477 volumes.

—An inhabitant of India some years ago said what is very true of us in a collective sense. He said, "You Christians not so good as your book. If you be so good as your book, you soon would convert all India to God."

BAPTIST.

—Chicago dispatch, Oct. 6:—"The Chicago University, a Baptist institution, is not only teaching the Darwinian theory of evolution, but, through Prof. Henry Drummond, one of the university's distinguished lecturers, is actually and actively upholding and defending it. The foundation rock of the university, so far as Professor Drummond is concerned, is the monkey. By that he will stand or fall. But while the majority of Baptists may be surprised at this information, the managers of the university can hardly claim to be, for Professor Drummond's views were well known before he was invited to lecture, and it was a foregone conclusion with all who know him that he would attempt to prove to the students that they were descended from simians. Prof. Drummond's first lecture on this subject since he became connected with the university was delivered last night in Immanuel Baptist church. He reviewed the theory of organic variations and in his peroration came out flat footed in favor of the Darwinian theory of evolution. It was a surprise to most of those in the audience, and even those who had expected it were grieved that it should receive even the tacit sanction of the University of Chicago."

FREE METHODIST.

—The discipline of the Free Methodist church prohibits the use of organs in the worship of the congregation. The trustees of a church in a Western State granted the use of their church building to a congregation of another denomination which wished to use an organ. Here arose a vexing question—should liberty be allowed to others which was denied to themselves? Should they testify to the truth by conditioning the use of the church upon the disuse of the organ? The matter was taken up to the State conference, which decided that if the trustees granted the use of the church, the congregation using it should be allowed to conduct the services in their own way.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL

—"I have filled all the offices in the whole gamut of the work of a Methodist preacher," says Bishop Haygood. "I began with blacking the itinerants' boots and getting even with them by galloping their horses often and by the longest way to the spring branch."

—A very pleasant reception was given at Miss Willard's home, Evanston, to Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew, recently returned from their Woman's Christian Temperance union tour around the world.

PRESBYTERIAN.

—The Interior says that 1,265 Presbyterian churches are vacant, seventeen per cent of the whole number, and nine per cent of the ministers are secularized or unsettled, and asks: "Cannot something be done to bring together the vacant churches and the without charge pastors?"

—Two Presbyterian missions, one in Eastern and one in Western Persia, have in all six stations, and a large number of out-stations, with sixteen ordained American missionaries, and forty American missionary women. They have forty-nine Persian missionaries, thirty-seven churches, 2,443 communicants and 5,000 pupils in Sunday-schools.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—It is proposed to celebrate the birth of Christ in 1900, but there is a diversity of opinion as to the form of the celebration. The Christian Statesman suggests a World's Convention of Reforms at New York, or Pittsburgh, a Missionary Conference at Bombay, an Evangelical Alliance at Jerusalem, a Sabbath-school Convention at Cairo, a Young Men's Christian Association at Rome and a Young People's Convention at London. Dr. Talmage proposes a World's Convention in New York. Congressman Wheeler, of Alabama, has introduced a bill into Congress to make a national commemoration of the beginning of the twentieth century, by an exposition in New York City during the whole of the year 1900.

—An exchange is informed by the Philadelphia secretary of the Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom that in more than thirty Episcopal churches "Mass was said with intention on the feast of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin." Of these churches six were in New York, including Trinity, five were in Philadelphia, and four were in Newark. The very expression "Mass was said with intention" is not know to the prayer book, and has to be interpreted by the usages of a church whose practices are contradicted by the very name of the Protestant Episcopal Church.

—The villages in the Russo-German and Austria-German frontiers are crowded with Hebrew families who have been expelled from Russia and are eager but powerless to emigrate to the United States. All are absolutely destitute and miserable. Men and women prostrate themselves before travelers and beg for bread or money. A report comes that the Czar has issued a ukase that 22,000 Russian Jews, most of them wealthy men, must leave that country.

—The London Tablet, a Roman Catholic paper in England, says: "Events now transpiring in Italy render the Pope's position one of extreme and imminent danger. The position of Italy is too insecure and unstable to make her a safe guardian of the venerable person of the Pope or the monuments which are the sacred heritage of the Catholic world."

—Thirty-five countries have been invaded by the Salvation Army.

—Bishop Turner, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church South, has issued a call for a convention of colored people at Cincinnati, Ohio, on Nov. 28, to "review and pass upon our condition patiently, impartially, and report truthfully, our knowledge of every person murdered by mobs, lynchers when and what for, with documentary evidence, if possible."

PROPHECY.
A STUDY.

BY REV. S. F. PORTER,
(College Agent N. C. A.)

In this booklet is found some views of truth not peculiar to the author, though for the first time put into book form; yet views which will doubtless be new to many. Its cheapness puts it into the hands of any earnest Bible student who desires light on certain phases of Christology. A hint only can be given of the contents by the following readings:

1. Prophecy: A Study of Christ's Comings.
2. From Earth to Heaven.
3. The Resurrection.
4. From Law to Gospel.

Paper Cover, 100 Pages.

Single copies, postpaid..... 25 cents.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

Rev. Leonard Bacon, D D.—Wishing you good success in your war against secret societies.

Rev. B. P. Aydeldotte, D.D., former president of Woodward College, O., (a renouncing Mason):—Freemasonry is a lie all over.

Rev. Justin Edwards, D D., author and head of Andover Seminary:—Whenever the cause of temperance is veiled in darkness and secrecy, it must lose its hold on the public confidence and sympathy.

Rev. M. Bennett, long presiding elder M. E. church—I am pleased to be counted in for the movement which is being inaugurated against tyrannical organizations and factitious distinctions in society.

Dr. Thomas Scott, the great commentator:—Rash oaths are above all things to be avoided; but if men are entangled by them, they ought rather to infringe the sinful oaths than to add sin to sin and ruin to their own souls.

Rev. J. C. K Milligan, editor of "Our Banner:"—Through such silence, secret connivance and horrid oaths "ever to conceal and never reveal," the state of our country is rapidly becoming such as to alarm every Christian philanthropist.

Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Free Methodist:—For us to keep silent respecting Masonry, and thus tacitly endorse the idea that a man can both accept Christ and deny him—that is, be a good Mason and a good Christian at the same time, would be treason to Christ.

John G. Fee, Berea College, 1868.—It is Freemasonry, Odd-fellowship and kindred associations that have spawned and now lend respectability to "Regulators," "Ku Klux Klans," and other bands of midnight assassins now ranging through Kentucky and other portions of the South.

Rev. J. P. Lytle, D. D.:—Masonry has damned all who ever trusted in it for salvation. It is now leading away thousands from the church, and from paths of virtue by association with the intemperate, unclean and profane, and is dragging them down the road which leads to the chambers of eternal death.

Rev. Edward Beecher, D.D.:—If on such anti-Christian grounds, prayers are framed, rites established and chaplains appointed, ignoring Christ and his intercession, God regards it as a mockery and an insult to himself and his church. In it is revealed the hatred of Satan to Christ. By it Christ is dethroned and Satan exalted.

Rev. W. W. Patton, D. D., 1869:—However secret societies may differ among themselves, yet they are all anti-republican in their tendencies; and are all leading to the same results, viz., a substitution of worldly and selfish innovations for moral and religious influences, and, ultimately, to the theoretical and practical neutralization of Christianity.

Rev. James H. Fairchild, D.D., Pittsburg address:—The point is not that the working of a secret organization may be perverted to selfish ends, but that in its very nature it strongly tends to such perversion. A worthy institution may be perverted, but an institution in which the tendency to perversion is inherent and constitutional, is not a good institution.

Rev. Dr. James. B. Walker, author of "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation."—There is probably not one in a thousand who enter the lodge, who know, when blindfolded they take the terrible oaths, that Masonry is an anti-Christ and one of the most powerful enemies of Christ that exists. But this is put beyond the possibility of a doubt by the highest Masonic authorities.

Rev. Nathan Brown, Editor "Am. Baptist" and missionary to Japan.—If Freemasonry had existed in the days of Christ, and in the same form that it exists with us, he could not have condemned it more distinctly than he did in his Sermon on the Mount: "If ye do good to them that do good to you, what do ye more than others? Do not even the publicans the same?" The Gospel is at war with every system of clique or clan, caste or combination that seeks to create distinctions in the human family.

Charles C. Foote:—What would the introduction of Christ into Mohammedanism be, but its annihilation? And thus would it be with Masonry.

Rev. John Todd, Pittsfield, Mass.:—Unhesitatingly I give my decided disapprobation of what I deem secret societies in college and elsewhere. I have never known any good results from them which could not have been attained in some other more appropriate way, and I have known great evils resulting from them.

Howard Crosby, Chancellor University of New York, 1870:—We have no hesitation in writing secret societies among the quackeries of the earth.

Idem, 1886:—The secret lodge system belongs to despotisms and not to democracies. Whatever in it is not babyish is dangerous.

Rev. Matthew L. R. Perrine, D.D., Auburn Theological Seminary, Rev. Joel Parker and Rev. Chauncey Eddy:—Having formerly associated with Freemasons, we deem it our duty, publicly to declare that the system of Freemasonry is in our judgment, of a tendency on the whole pernicious to the moral habits, and dangerous to the civil and religious institutions of our country.

Rev. Levi Chase, Fall River, Mass.:—The question has been asked by Masons, who wish to asperse the characters of those who have renounced Masonry, "Why did not they renounce it before?" For one, I will give them the reason why I did not. The Masonic oaths locked my tongue in silence—death, in all its horrid shapes and frightful forms, stared me in the face—I considered the oaths binding.

Rev. C. D. Burlingham, in history of the Genesee M. E Conference, 1860:—This new element of discord (Odd fellowship) began to introduce itself in our church, professedly as a mutual insurance company against temporal want, and a newly discovered and remarkably successful Gospel appliance for bringing the world, reformed and saved into the church. But our people very naturally looked upon it with suspicion, dreading its power as a secret agency acting through affiliated societies, and doubting its utility as a financial scheme. They feared it would drag the church, debased and corrupted, into the world.

Rev. Joel Mann, renouncing Mason:—Although portions of the Gospel are interwoven with its forms, I conceive that Masonry presents false grounds of hope; leads men to depend on their own defective righteousness;—to expect the favor of God without the interposition of a Redeemer, and even without repentance; and thus has a most injurious influence on their eternal interests. Under the most favorable circumstances, which in any place, have attended Masonry, it has occasioned a great waste of time and money, which might and ought to have been employed for better purposes. And furthermore, it interferes materially with domestic religious duties.

Rev. Aaron Leland, formerly Lieut.-Governor of Vermont and Deputy Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge (to a Baptist association):—He stated that the first objection which presented itself to his mind was the practice of praying for the soul of a brother Mason after he had been dead two, three, and sometimes four days—that he persisted in the practice for a short season to the injury of his conscience—that it was a Romish custom, and he never would preach at the burial of a Mason when Masonic forms and customs were attended to—that he never would preach to a lodge of Masons as such, and that he was ashamed that he had ever participated in the principles and practices of the institution.

Elder David Bernard:—I solemnly renounce all fealty to Masonry, and do most earnestly beseech my brethren in Christ Jesus, of every name, to come out and bear unequivocal testimony against it. Think, O think, dear Christians, that hundreds and thousands of precious and immortal souls will be lost forever, unless they return and repent, but that the name of the precious Jesus is rejected, your Saviour, your precious and adorable Saviour taken away—the cause of your bleeding Redeemer injured—the hands of the wicked strengthened, and the Almighty God dishonored! And O, let me entreat you in the mercy and bowels of Jesus Christ, to reflect that you have to answer for the blood of those who shall find also, when it shall be forever too late, that Masonry is not a Saviour!

Home and Health.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

"Length of days" was promised to the children of the Lord in ancient times as a reward for right conduct. Now, as well as then, other things being equal, the good man or woman will outlive the sinner.

Rest when weary. Do not whip up your languishing powers with tea and coffee but take rest, and you will never be troubled with overstrained nerves if you conform in other things to the laws of health.

Do not plant maples or other shade trees which make a large growth too near your house. Too much shade is injurious to the health as well as to the house. Sunshine is a wonderful tonic and it is a pity to shut it out from our houses. Set the shade trees north of the house or several rods away.

It is sometimes forgotten by Christians that there are physical as well as moral laws, and that the transgression of one has its penalty as well as the other. The man who gormandizes on rich food and stimulates with wine and brandy, reaps apoplexy, gout, or some other serious disease and will die before his time.

Love of pleasure and excitement is a fruitful cause of disease and early death. How foolish to strain the nerves and overtax the physical powers in trying to "have a good time." The man or woman who cannot enjoy a quiet day of rest is to be pitied. Yet many act as though it would kill them to stay alone, or with their families an evening or two.

The reason many mothers give for doing the work of the kitchen themselves and neglecting to instruct their daughters, is that it is easier to do it than to be bothered. They want everything to go right, but do not consider that in a few years these girls will annoy others as well as themselves by not knowing what or how to do in the kitchen. Childhood is the time for them to blunder and then learn a better way, and the mother is not doing her duty who fails to teach these needed lessons.

WORLD'S FAIR ROOMS.

Mrs. Rev. W. M. Howie, of 3557 Prairie avenue, is giving rooms, breakfast and evening dinner for $1.25, $1.50 and $1.75 per day, according to rooms occupied. By the week, $8.00, $10.00, and $12.00. Parlors and bedrooms are all convenient, and furnished for rest and comfort. The residence is four miles from business center, and three from Fair grounds. The Elevated railroad runs to Fair in 20 minutes, and the station is one-third mile distant. Write what rooms you wish and when.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.

BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: Earnest Christian: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: "Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' said 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ... The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,

12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches it with an earnestness born of conviction.

Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00.

Farm Notes.

Formerly there was no mode of harvesting corn but to cut down the stalks by hand, but the corn harvester has come to stay and is saving labor. But little work is now necessary in growing a crop of corn that cannot be done with horse power and at but a small outlay for labor compared with the work of former years.

If your manure pile is under the eaves of the barn the best investment you can make with a dollar is to get some troughing the first time you go to town and hang it so it will carry the water beyond where the manure is piled. Do this much at least to save the leaching of the manure. To shelter it would be better.

Farming is a business which depends on many little details and conditions affecting each other farm. The frost may appear on a plot of land, while but a hundred feet away its effects, if any, may not be noticed. One plot will be more difficult to work than another adjoining it, and the exposure of the land to the sun, its drainage, its nearness to timber, the texture of the soil, the kinds of crops previously grown, and other matters, make a farm entirely different from the next, each farmer being governed by circumstances affecting his farm only.

The incubator will certainly hatch chickens as well as the hen will, if all the necessary conditions of warmth and circulation of air are secured. But this is the difficulty, for the reason that artificial heat is so varying in quantity and so difcu't to maintain at the required temperature, allowing at the same time for the daily cooling of the eggs, as when the hen leaves the nest to feed, which is indispensable to secure the needed circulation of air in the eggs, that failures are more frequent than successes. There has not yet been discovered any certain method of maintaining the regularity of temperature that is absolutely necessary, and it is hardly reasonable to expect any device to secure this will ever be discovered, for the reason that the temperature in the incubator is affected by the weather, and must be regulated in accordance with the changes of the temperature without, and this calls for the closest attention day and night by the operator. The hen is still the best incubator, but her defects as a brooder may be most easily provided for by the artificial brooder. And this has no faults or defects that may not be easily provided for.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT
of the Holy Ghost,
BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few opinions:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by persuing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

RECENT PUBLICATIONS
OF
FLEMING H. REVELL.

Modern Ideas of Evolution.

As related to Revelation and Science. By Sir William Dawson, L. L. D., F. R. S., etc. 12 mo, cloth, $1.50.

In popular style, a testing by scientific facts and principles, the validity of that multiform and brilliant philosophy of the universe, which has taken so deep a hold of the science and literature of our times.

The New World of Central Africa

By Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness; with a history of the first Christian mission on the Congo. Maps, Portraits and numerous engravings. 537 pages, 12 mo, $2.00.

This comprehensive volume is as fascinating as the most entertaining romance. Its vivid portrayal of the dark side of African history makes one's blood tingle, while its earnest appeals create an inspiring sympathy with the effort to evangelize its teeming millions.

Power From on High.

By Rev. B. Fay Mills. White vellum paper, 20 cents.

This little work, revised from stenographic notes of Mr. Mills' address before the National Convention of the Y. P. S. C. E., is exceedingly effective.

Matthew Henry's Commentary.

An entirely new large type edition of this inimitable Commentary, in six large 8vo. volumes, fine cloth, $15.00; or, in half Morocco, $18.00.

"Biblical students who are most familiar with the very best commentaries of this generation are most able to appreciate the unfading freshness, the clear analysis, the spiritual force, the quaint humor, and the evangelical richness of Matthew Henry's Exposition of the Old and New Testaments."—New York Observer

"First among the mighty for general usefulness we are bound to mention the man whose name is a household word—Matthew Henry. He is the most pious and pithy, sound and sensible, suggestive and sober, terse and trust worthy."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer. 32 mo, 50 cents.

"It is sufficient to say its one direct aim is the present enjoyment of the precious promises. Mr. Meyer's earnest and persuasive teaching in this direction is admirably condensed in these brief chapters."

By the Same Author:

Christian Living. Cloth, 32 mo, 50 cents.

"A more suggestive and helpful volume it would not be easy to name."—Christian Leader.

NEW YORK STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The annual State Convention of the New York Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held (D. V.) in Utica, N. Y. (Tuesday and Wednesday), November 14 and 15, in the Welsh Methodist Episcopal church on Hopper street, near Steuben Square. The opening session will begin on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Some of our best representative speakers, from different parts of the State, will address the convention. Rev. J. P. Stoddard has engaged to be present, with his recent experiences at the World's Fair fresh in his mind. Every friend of our reform in the State is invited to come up to this meeting. Where this is impossible, send a contribution to aid the cause, either to the State Treasurer, Lucius Woodruff, at Binghamton, N. Y., or to Henry L. Kellogg, 4 Chatham street, Utica.

(Rev.) S. R. WALLACE, Pres.,
203 W. Colvin street, Syracuse, N. Y.

HOW TO GET THERE.

A morning train runs directly to Hopkinton from Davenport, arriving at 8:43 A. M. Persons coming by way of Cedar Rapids can get this train if they go by way of Oxford Junction from Cedar Rapids. Two freight trains, one from each direction (north and south) reach Hopkinton shortly before noon, and there is a night train from the north at 8 o'clock. Twelve miles north of Hopkinton, at Delaware, is the junction of the Illinois Central with our road—the C., M. & St. P.; eighteen miles north, at Oneida, is the junction of the C., M. & St. P. with the Chicago Great Western. At Oxford Junction Hopkinton branch connects with the main line of the C., M. & St. P., between Chicago and Council Bluffs.

A correspondent who read our anti-secrecy publications in the library of an Iowa college, many years ago, writes for a copy of "Odd-fellowship Revised" to keep a young man out of the lodge. Seed properly sown on good soil is sure to bear good fruit, if the seed be good.

A note from Rev. W. B. Stoddard, Oct. 28, announces that, if possible, Stephen Merritt (a converted Mason of high degree, with a ringing testimony against the lodge) will attend the New York State couvention at Utica on the 15th and deliver an address. He will be a valuable acquisition.

The experience of Harry P. Peters, related in the Berlin (Ont.) Gospel Banner, is not uncommon: "I was a member of two secret lodges when I got converted; but it was not very long until I received light to come out. I was a good fellow, and they spoke well of me as long as I paid my dues, but when I informed them that I would give up my lodges for Jesus, they cursed me." "Beloved," wrote Peter (1 Pet. 4: 12), "think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you, but rejoice.....If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye."

A dangerous individual is thus described by Dr. Samuel Johnson: "There have been men indeed splendidly wicked, whose endowments threw a brightness on their crimes, and whom scarce any villainy made perfectly detestable, because they could never be wholly divested of their excellencies; but such have been in all ages the corrupters of the world." The great leaders of the French Revolution were largely of this class, which is not yet extinct.

Rev. P. B. Williams announces meetings during November at the following places on the Pacific coast: 1 and 2—Leland, Idaho, evening; 3 and 4—Bald Mountain church; 6—Juliaetta, Idaho; 7—Guy, Washington; 8—Lowery school house; 9—Pils' schoolhouse; 10—Gates' schoolhouse; 11—South Palouse; 11—preaching at Clear Creek at 11 A. M, and Elberton, Wash., at 7 P. M.; 13—Lecture at Elberton on Monday night; 14 and 15—Garfield, Wash. "The series of meetings I am holding," he writes, "increase in interest daily. One of my Odd-fellow friends is truly converted; he has renounced the lodge, and will unite with the church. Others tremble under their load."

The assassination of Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago, by Patrick Eugene Prendergast, on Saturday evening last, at the home of the Mayor, created a wide-spread and profound sensation. As a crime, it was a premeditated and brutal murder, actuated by revenge, and the self-confessed murderer, who voluntarily surrendered himself to the police, will probably undergo the extreme penalty of the law. His professed reason for the deed was disappointment in a political venture, from his failure to obtain a coveted position in the city government. The circumstances attending the murder are peculiarly saddening. Mr. Harrison was, on the 16th of this month, to have espoused a wealthy and attractive young lady, Miss Howard. Preparations for their marriage on an extremely liberal scale were well-advanced, and the lady was in the city at the time of the tragedy. The grief and sympathy caused by this event extends to a very large circle of their mutual friends and acquaintances, here and elsewhere. Mr. Harrison was an educated gentleman, very wealthy, agreeable in conversation, and conversant with six or seven languages. As a traveler and writer for the press he had secured a fine literary reputation, and as a speaker in public he had proved himself eloquent and attractive. But it must be added, in sorrow, that with all these accomplishments he possessed glaring and fatal faults. Ambitious to excel and gain prominent positions, he sometimes resorted to unscrupulous political methods, and derived his strongest support from saloon men and the vicious classes of society. Under the influence of such affiliations, and devoid of Christian profession or practice, there is reason to believe that he has lost his soul while seeking enjoyment in the evanescent affairs of this world.

THE POLITICAL INFLUENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

[A paper by Rev. M. A. Gault, read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Chicago, October 5, 1893.]

I regret that pressing pastoral duties have prevented me from giving the study to this topic which its importance demands. But an experience of ten years in the field of reform work has brought me in contact with many facts, showing the power and influence exerted by secret societies upon our politics.

While the last National Republican Convention was in session at Minneapolis, the daily papers published a telegram sent to the convention by J.

H. Trainor, leader of the Orangemen of America. It stated that if the convention would nominate for a Presidential candidate Thomas W. Palmer of Michigan, he would receive one and a half million votes, none of which would ever be cast for James G. Blaine. It was generally understood that what prevented Mr. Blaine's nomination at this convention, was his sympathy with Catholicism. This arrayed against him such secret organizations as the Orangemen, and the American Protective Association. The latter in two years has grown to a membership of upwards of a million—the most remarkable growth of an order ever known.

The above telegram gives us a glimpse behind the screens, and throws much light upon the secret forces operating our political machinery. Let those who are interested in the success of republican government bear in mind that when secret organizations, which aggregate the power in the hands of the few, dictate who shall be our civil rulers, then republican government may be declared a failure in this land. There looms up on our political horizon no greater danger than these organizations whose secrets and obligations are unknown to the public, and which are created and chartered by our national and State legislatures. By granting such charters our government has evoked a spirit which will soon escape and defy control. Chauncey M. Depew tells us that "fifty men in this United States have it in their power, by reason of the wealth they control, to come together within twenty-four hours, and arrive at an understanding by which every wheel of trade can be blocked, and every electric key struck dumb." But such organization and control would be impossible were it not for the tactics of secret societies.

It has often been said that ten men, with an understanding with each other, can manage a hundred men in almost any assembly. In our politics, members of secret organizations act the part of the ten men. They furnish the machinery by which the financial, and monopolistic, and every force of evil in our land can get together, and fight with weapons it is difficult to parry. Lafayette, during the dreadful experience of the French Revolution, wrote that "It is necessary that the reign of the clubs should give place to the reign of law." But the reign of the clubs is already upon us. What mean those heaving, surging masses of the ground-tier of society? What means that ominous tramp of gathering legions, marching the streets of our cities with banners inscribed with the mottoes of the French Revolution? They carry the most improved arms, and are drilled by veterans of our late war, and half a dozen European wars. Gen. Sheridan said, shortly before his death, "A government that allows bodies of men on its soil to acquire a military drill and discipline independent of its control, does not deserve the name of a government." He, at the same time, warned this nation that in case of another war, rifle-cannon and ironclads would be as mere child's playthings—that science had placed in men's hands such destructive agents that a man might carry in his vest pocket what would blow up a fort or sink an ironclad.

Some years ago, when Chicago's Exposition building was crowded with tremendous and unexpected uprisings of the anarchistic and communistic classes, the startling feature of the meetings was that they were assembled without a note of warning, or a line of advertisement. Their meetings were under the auspices of red flag revolutionists bound together by terrible oaths, and assembled by means of secret tactics.

These demonstrations for a number of years have ceased. Anarchists have found it necessary to conceal their operations from public view, in order that they may more thoroughly prepare for the great outbreak. But our social structure is now more widely and deeply permeated with anarchistic principles than ever before, and there is every evidence that it will soon precipitate the great conflict of the ages.

And what city in this land more fully answers the description given in Rev. 18: 7, than Chicago, "the Queen City of the Lakes?" "How much she hath glorified herself, and lived deliciously, so much torment and sorrow give her, for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine, and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Is there not danger that Chicago, entrusted with the management of the World's Fair, and turning a deaf ear to the voice of the millions of petitioners, and from the lips of thousands of ministers and Christian citizens, pleading that its gates might be closed on the Lord's day—may not this city yet hear a louder voice from the lips of cannon, or in the crash of dynamite bombs? Or may it not yet be compelled to read a lesson in the glare of a great conflagration that will reduce its grandest structures to ashes and lay its towering buildings in ruins?

The spirit of anarchy is in the very air. Politically we are in the cyclonic belt of history. Political sentiment has become as violent as equinoctial gales. It runs in currents that cross and oppose each other, and are as restless as the waves of the troubled sea.

Our country is threatened by a war of religious ideas more fierce and aggressive than any of former times. The most powerful ecclesiastical organization known in history—the Church of Rome, more than twelve million strong, through the secret intrigues of the Jesuits, has for centuries been grasping for political power. Their influence in politics has become so alarming that they have been suppressed by most European and South American governments. In the United States they are making fearful encroachments upon republican liberty. Lord Robert Montague, once a champion of the papal church in England, and on intimate terms with Cardinal Manning, wrote to this country in 1887: "I know from personal experience in 1863 that your great war, by which you lost thousands of brave citizens, and immense capital, was planned and prompted by Jesuits."

In Harpers' Weekly, some years ago, there was the best of documentary evidence published to prove that in 1863 Napoleon Third, then at the head of the strongest papal power in Europe, succeeded in inducing England to join France in espousing the cause of the "Southern Confederacy." And what prevented them, and saved our government in that crucial hour, was a dispatch from the Czar of Russia, warning the nations of France and England that if they interfered in our civil war, Russia would at once dispatch its iron-clad fleet from Cronstadt to New York, and take the side of the Union.

It has been proved, beyond a doubt, that Maximilian's disastrous expedition to Mexico, in 1863, was a gigantic plot by the Jesuitical powers of Europe to found a papal empire upon the ruins of our Republic.

The unparalleled growth of the American Protective Association, during the past two years, is the result of the general alarm at the encroachments of Jesuitry, in seeking to control our public education and grasp political power. The indications are that these two secret organizations, like two dark storm-clouds approaching from opposite directions, will soon come in collision and cause a storm that will shake the nation and crimson our streets with blood.

The late Dr. Jonathan Blanchard, Senator Pomeroy and others have well proven that the war of the Rebellion was planned and organized in Southern Masonic lodge-rooms. I have read sufficient history of that rebellion to prove Dr. Blanchard correct in saying, "The Union would not be in existence to-day if God had not in mercy put this government, at a critical period of the war, into the hands of Anti-masons, such as Lincoln, Seward, Chase, Stevens and others, with Charles Francis Adams, and Thurlow Weed at the court of St. James."

Emmanuel Rebold, whose general History of Freemasonry is among the highest Masonic authorities, says (page 54): "During the troubles which desolated England about the middle of the seventeenth century, and after the death of Charles I, 1649, the Masonic corporations of England, and more particularly those of Scotland, labored in secret for the re-establishment of the throne destroyed by Cromwell; and for this purpose they instituted many degrees hitherto unknown, and totally foreign to the spirit and nature of Freemasonry, and which in fact gave to this time-honored institution a character entirely political. The discussions to which this country was a prey had already produced a separation between the operative and accepted Masons. The latter were honorary members, who according to long established usage had been accepted into the society for the advantage which their generally influential position in the country might effect; but this very position made them at this time naturally the adherents of the throne, and the strong supporters of Charles II, who during his exile was received as an accepted Mason by their election, and in consequence of the benefits he derived from the society gave to Masonry the title of Royal Art, because it was mainly by its instrumentality that he was raised to the throne and monarchy restored to England."

In a book now open before me, "Professor John Robison's Conspiracy," written in September, 1797, at Edinburgh, the author shows conclusively that Freemasonry is a conspiracy against all religions, and against all governments. Prof. Robison was himself a Mason, and Professor of Natural Philosophy in the University at Edinburgh. He had traveled extensively in Europe, and had made Masonry a deep study. At present I will only give his testimony in regard to the influence of Masonry in causing the French Revolution. He says, page 296, "Not only was the arch-rebel, the Duke of Orleans, the Grand Master, but the chief actors in the Revolution, Mirabeau, Condorcet, Rochefoucauld and others, were distinguished office-bearers in the great lodges." Again he says of the Duke of Orleans, page 298, "His authority as Grand Master of the Masons gave him the greatest opportunity that a seditious mind could desire for helping forward the Revolution. He had ready to his hand a connected system of hidden societies, protected by the State, habituated to secrecy and artifice, and already tinged with the very enthusiasm he wished to inspire. In these he formed political committees into which only his agents were admitted."

This testimony will be sufficient to show that secret societies are a dangerous element in politics. They have always been the machinery to propagate treason, and employed by the worst of men to overthrow republican liberty. They must be destroyed if the country is saved. To build them into any reform movement or into with any political party or civil government is to build wood, hay, stubble, which must be consumed in the final conflict.

EMERSON'S FAMILY MONUMENT.

BY JONATHAN EMERSON.

(Concluded.)

III.

Here lies the remains of a vigorous opposer of American slavery and secret societies, especially Freemasonry. He spent freely of his time and worldly goods to establish equity, righteousness and temperance in the earth. He loved God and his fellow man.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them. When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid. Prov. 3: 24. Say ye to the righteous that it shall be well with them, for they shall eat the fruit of their doings. Woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him. Isa. 3: 21. But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness and all things shall be added unto you. Matt. 6: 33.

Now, in the 19th century, people are more idolatrous than they were before the Reformation, but God knoweth your hearts; for that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God. Luke 16: 15.

Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you, for so did their fathers to the false prophets. Luke 6: 26.

By what fruit of the Spirit may we know that we are of God even in the highest? By love, joy, abiding peace, long suffering, patience, resignation; by gentleness, triumphing over all provocation, by goodness, mildness, sweetness, tenderness of spirit; by fidelity, simplicity, godly sincerity, by meekness, calmness. Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. John 2: 15. Also, I, Jesus, say unto you, whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God, but he that denieth me before men, shall be denied before the angels of God. Luke 12: 8, 9.

And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God, and the prisoners heard them (read next verse). Acts 16: 25.

He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed and that without remedy. Prov. 29: 1,

Thus saith the Lord: set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live. Isa. 38: 1.

When the wicked are in authority the righteous mourn. Righteousness exalteth the nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people. Moody says there can be no revivals where church fairs are held.

Men are known by the company they keep.

Before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now have I kept thy word. Psa. 119: 67.

IV.

I had been praying for years, but I kept saying: O Lord, call me in thine own way: and sure I had a call so loud that it nearly took away my life. But I was saved by bowing to God in my afflictions. I had two children, and I so loved them that it took my love from God, as it appears to me now. My object in writing this (A. D. 1890) is for all to profit and learn how to prolong life and save their souls in heaven. When afflictions come to you do not commit suicide, or indulge the drink habit to drown troubles, for you will shorten your days and lose your souls.

Scripture says: Go humble yourself in the dust and pray, as the Bible teaches us always to pray and never faint. God as yet (Feb., 1892), has saved both my soul and body, and I, Jonathan Emerson, still trust in God. I praise his holy name forever. Amen.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him. James 1: 5.

For here have we no continuing city, but we seek one to come. Heb. 13: 14.

And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might, and these words which I command thee this day shall be in thy heart, and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou sittest down, and when thou risest up, and thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hands, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house and on thy gates. Deut. 6: 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Read 6th and 7th chapter of Deuteronomy and 19th and 20th verse of 8th chap.

And he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey. Isa. 59: 4–15.

But Jesus said unto them: Ye know not what ye ask; can ye drink of the cup that I drink of and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with? And Jesus said unto them: Ye shall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of and with the baptism that I am baptized withal shall ye be baptized. Mark 10: 38, 39.

While they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption, for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage. 2 Peter 2: 19.

Where Christianity is preached, there will be opposition. When a Christian conforms to the world he denies Christ and becomes a backslider. Jesus, Paul, Peter, Silas, Luther and the Wesleys had all the improvements that a Christian needs.

Woe unto the world because of iniquity. Nations die from the effects of it, of which Sodom, Babylon, Rome and Jerusalem afford illustrious examples.

Practice reading the Bible every day, as all Christians do.

When secrecy goes up, Christianity goes down; when secrecy goes down, Christianity goes up.

Secret orders are inconsistent with the primal requisites of civilized society, so long as they are permitted. Some of them will be murder societies. All of them may be.

ON MY EASTERN GRAVESTONE.

Whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life: it is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. James 4: 14.

Sweet be thy rest, dear father,
While storms and tempests roll
Across the city of the dead,
But never molest thy soul.

Remember me as you pass by,
That, as you now, so once was I.
While you're in health, prepared be
That when death comes to follow me.

What would be thought of a man who should take an altar from some Masonic or Odd-fellows' lodge and set it up in his family and practice the lodge ceremonies about it for the salvation of his children?

THE TESTIMONY OF A SAVED PEOPLE.

The following is the report on secret societies adopted by the recent conference of the Free Methodist church of Central Illinois. There is no compromise with the lodge visible in this strong and encouraging testimony:

The Lord said, "Let there be light, and there was light." Jesus said, "I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life." Again, "And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." Ever since the devil tempted and seduced the first man and woman to sin, has secrecy been in the world. Their deeds were evil, and they sought the deepest glen, and darkest glade, to hide them from the light of God. Jesus Christ is the fountain of light; the devil is the prince of darkness. Secrecy is based upon the principles of moral darkness. Egypt, Greece, Rome and Babylon all had their secret societies and mysteries; America has hers, some of which are the most dangerous to our social, civil and religious institutions.

Masonry is like the Church of Rome: she cannot bear the light. Masonic oaths are extrajudicial and blasphemous in their character. Her votaries claim for her great antiquity, even to have existed in the days of Solomon. If their statement is correct, the high priests were its highest chief executors, and the Sanhedrim its highest tribunal, before which Jesus Christ was arraigned, tried, mocked, and condemned to death at the eventful hour of low twelve; and when the heathen governor would have let him go, they intimidated him by their threats, and thus procured the death of the Son of God, and to this day his dear name is not permitted to be used among them.

Masonry lies to its votaries, in imposing upon them fearful obligations, diabolical in their very nature. The master answers the candidate that his obligations to Masonry will not interfere with his obligations to his family, his God or his country; and before the poor man leaves her altar for the first time he swears with a horrible oath never to reveal the discoveries of that hour, no, not even to his dear wife, upon no less penalty than having his throat cut from ear to ear, and his tongue pulled out by the roots, etc. Secrecy binds the followers of Christ in a brotherhood with Jews, Mohammedans, Mormons, Hindoos, gamblers, drunkards, whoremongers, liars, profane swearers, and infidels.

To the question, "How shall we find out the iniquity of the lodge?" we would recommend to our people the careful perusal of Ronayne's "Hand-book of Freemasonry," and an exposition by Rev. Chas. G. Finney on Masonry, and other expositions published by the National Christian Association, or by T. B. Arnold, 104 Franklin street, Chicago.

Resolved, That we, the members of this conference, arouse ourselves, and investigate the evils of secrecy, inform ourselves and our people of its abominations and of its seductive and dangerous influences.

Resolved, That we encourage such reformers as shall be qualified and called, to travel at large, to faithfully and fully expose the leading secret societies of the age as subversive and dangerous to both church and state.

INTERNATIONAL BIBLE READING ASSOCIATION.

The object of this Association is to promote the more general and regular use of God's Word, as a book for home study and a guide in daily life.

The plan of reading is topical—the subject for each week's study being the International Lesson for the following Sabbath, and the reading is thus made practically beneficial to the large body of Sabbath-school teachers and scholars. The daily readings selected by the Association have met with the approval of many well-known workers in the United States and Canada, including Bishop Vincent, Dr. Hurlbut, Dr. C. R. Blackall, Dr. J. J. Miller, Prof. J. I. D. Hinds, Prof. Bradley, Dr. F. E. Clark, Dr. Peloubet, and Dr. McTavish,—and are published in the periodicals of several denominations.

The advantages of the plan are many. It provides one of the best means of preparation by teachers and scholars; it secures the interest of parents; it is a daily reminder of the Sabbath associations, and secures the continuity of study when absent from the class. The relation of the daily readings to the Sabbath topic also leads to reflection, and thus renders the reading more beneficial.

A "branch" may be formed by not less than ten members in any church, Sabbath-school, etc. The secretary's duties are to conduct the correspondence, keep a register of the members, and to sign and issue the cards and monthly "hints," etc. The office is in many cases efficiently filled by ladies.

The members include pastors, teachers, parents, scholars and any others who undertake to read the daily portions, and subscribe three cents annually if connected with a branch, or six cents if not. Members are enrolled at any time, but all subscriptions must be renewed at the close of the year. Each member receives a card of membership, monthly leaflets, containing "hints" on the daily readings, and quarterly illustrated "Circular Letters."

The fact that the readings are already published in several denominational papers does not diminish the advantages of membership of the Association. Those who are enrolled as members will have a strong incentive to regularity in reading, and their association with so many others in all parts of the world will add interest to the obligation. The receipt of the "hints" every month from the secretary will be a frequent reminder of duty, and abundant testimony proves that these brief words of council are also practically helpful.

The progress of the Association has been rapid. It was commenced in 1882, and the membership for 1892 is indicated by the issue of nearly 400,000 English cards in Great Britain, United States, Canada, Newfoundland, Bermuda, Brazil, West Indies, Honduras, Demerara, Chili, Falkland Islands, South Africa, Sierre Leone, Congo Free State, India, Ceylon, China, Japan, Burmah, Australia, New Zealand, Malta and Gibraltar. Cards have, in addition, been issued in French, German, Dutch, Swedish, Italian, Samoan, Rarotongan, Armenian, Lettish and Welsh.

A branch may be formed by any friend obtaining the consent of ten or more to become members. Application should then be made to one of the district secretaries mentioned below, enclosing subscriptions, and giving particulars of the church or Sabbath-schools, etc., with which the branch is to be associated. Individuals can become members, and may obtain cards in the same way, enclosing six cents for subscription. The "hints," etc., are sent quarterly, and postpaid to branch secretaries and individual members. The cards of membership cannot be sold, but are issued only to members personally, or through branch secretaries.

Applications for further information and for membership cards may be made to either of the following honorary district secretaries:

Canada—Mr. J. McNab, 125 Huntley street, Toronto.

United States—Mr. W. Shaw, 50 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass.; Miss H. B. Chaddock, 38 Hague street, West Hoboken, N. J.

Or to the Honorary General Secretary, Mr. C. Waters, Sabbath-school Union, 56 Old Bailey, London, England.

A SCHEME FOR LABOR CONSOLIDATION.

When delegates representing the entire American Federation of Labor convene in December it is proposed to form an amalgamation of every labor order and labor union in the United States, whereby all shall recognize a single supreme authority, and in which hundreds and thousands of workmen shall be an organized unit in everything that seems to affect their interests. Only one potent influence is being exerted to thwart the execution of this scheme—that of Samuel Gompers. Another man, willingly or unwillingly, is looked to as a champion of the movement, Terence V. Powderly, and he has already given it a qualified approval. There are indications of internal upheavals in all the labor orders. The utterances of such leaders as John C. Costello, of Pittsburg, Pa., John T. Byron, of Massachusetts, Thomas J. Morgan, of Chicago, and R. M. Campbell, of Memphis, have been long for consolidation. The apathy of Mr. Gompers has naturally crystalized opposition, and especially as T. V. Powderly is in favor of union on general principles. For this reason he has advocated a final action recently with the Farmers' Alliance and similar organizations, as well as closer identification with political movements. When the Knights of Labor Assembly opens in November the routine business must first be attended to. Then westerners propose to bring forward their consolidation scheme in spite of whatever opposition the powers that be may manifest. Briefly embodied the objects of consolidation are:

To exterminate militarism in the settlement of labor disputes by abolishing the Pinkertons and rendering the maintenance of State militia an evidence of despotism.
To influence legislation more effective.
To save the expense of maintaining rival organizations, which, after all, have the same ends in view.
To do away with the internal dissensions of labor organizations.

The other aims are more less subsidiary. It is proposed to have a committee appointed for the purpose of conferring with a similar body from other labor orders, and if the question of autonomy comes up it will be urged that the knights are to maintain their present independence and organization. The only thing in the way of all this is the personal disagreement among rival labor leaders. It is expected by the advocates of the scheme, however, that these differences of opinion and policy may be harmonized by concession or otherwise and that the main objects of the consolidators may be carried into execution. —New York Telegram, Oct. 22.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Conditions versus theories.—Religion and politics.—The cigarette in New Haven.—"Too busy to come back."—Gleanings from a lodge paper.—Rome and the schools.

Why can't the papers, which are continually throwing out their gibes against reformers, say something new occasionally, just for variety's sake? They keep repeating the old stale arguments, and going the old round of objections, that I have no doubt Father Noah grew perfectly familiar with while he was building the ark, with wearisome sameness. I am inclined to think the devil has not much originality, to thus keep repeating himself. Referring to the movement to have the churches devote one Sunday in the year to the cause of universal peace, one of our city dailies sneeringly asks: "But what are they to say of the building of modern navies, and the increase of modern armaments? Do they forget that they are confronted by a condition and not a theory?" Not at all. For haven't reformers always been confronted by a condition, and isn't it the condition that has always made their work a necessity? If the nations were turning their warships into trading vessels, and disbanding their armies, the Peace Society could disband too. It was a condition that made our great-hearted and now sainted leader, President J. Blanchard, devote himself heart and soul to fighting organized secrecy. It was a condition which made Lucy Stone, whose grand life has just ended, battle for the emancipation of her sex, careless of the ridicule and contempt of weaker minds. Reformers have not been confronted, but possessed, by their theories, and with them they have always moulded conditions; while the demagogues and the time-servers have always let the conditions mould their theories.

"We are told we must not mix religion with politics. If I had the politics some men have I should hate to mix it with my religion," was one of the sharp, bright sayings of Rev. Anna H. Shaw at the recent State meeting, in Springfield, of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. This common saying, by the way, is of a piece with another which we hear with unusual frequency just now since Rev. L. A. Banks has become the Prohibition candidate for governor, that "ministers should keep out of politics." I do not wonder at all that the devil is disturbed by their intrusion on what he has always claimed as his special domain, but the very fact that he is so disturbed inclines me to think that he has his own reasons for wishing that they would hie to "their proper sphere." Saloon-keepers and their sympathizers say to the ministry of to-day what the unclean spirits said to their Master of old, "Let us alone."

It is stated by reliable Connecticut papers—though it seems hardly credible—that twenty-five million cigarettes have been sold in New Haven in one year, and the business is constantly increasing. "This," says the New Haven Palladium, "would mean 250 cigarettes for every man, woman and child in the city, with a few thousand left over for good measure." The time will surely come when, with tobacco, as with alcohol, prohibition must step in to save the boyhood of the land. I have often thought that the argument against tobacco as an unclean, filthy nuisance, has been too much from the standpoint of our sex, and that more should be said about the rights of decent men in this regard. I am therefore glad to notice that at a recent dinner of the Boston Boot and Shoe Club, at which the jury system was under consideration, ex-Gov. Long, while defending the system, urged on the judge a more liberal treatment of the jurors, and said, among other things: "Don't keep them, if they are out all night, in a crowded room full of tobacco smoke." I certainly should not want to risk my chance for life, or even simple justice, with jurors who had gone through such a sickening, stupefying ordeal. The cigarette-dealers seem bent on exhausting every device possible for the corruption of youth. The simple cigarette, death-dealing to soul and body though it be, is not in itself enough, but with every package they have begun to enclose a game of chance in two small pictures which are tossed up in the air, and the lucky thrower whose pictures both fall face up or face down wins them both. And thus along with the debasing, demoralizing taste for the weed, the passion for gambling is excited, and the foundation laid for a wrecked and ruined life.

"I shall be too busy to come back," said Lucy Stone, when some one suggested the possibility that her spirit might return and be cognizant of happenings in this lower sphere;—a remark which it seems to me ought to be enough to make every person with the slightest modicum of sense see the absurdity of spiritualistic messages from the wise and good who have gone before. Wherever their place may be, and whatever their work, we may depend upon it they are much too busily and happily employed for any such folly. And those other brave, hopeful words of hers: "I look forward to the other side as the brighter side, and I expect to be busy with good things." Why do we not try to habitually bring more of the joy of our future life into our present, and see how its cares would be lightened and its drudgery sweetened by the thought of all that is waiting for us on that "brighter side?"

What do such words as these mean, taken from the secret society column of a Connecticut paper just sent to me through the kindness of a friend in that State? "In our convivialities it should be remembered there is a golden mean. The dignity of our order should always be maintained. In a word, temperance should be observed in all things." It is well, when reading the above, to bear Sickles' definition of temperance in mind, as "that due restraint upon the affections and passions" which will keep a Mason from ever disclosing "some of those valuable secrets which he has promised to conceal and never reveal." And how about this? "Some of the members' wives think that all the lodge meetings are smoke-talk, judging by the aroma clinging to their husbands' clothes." Now is not this a most uncalled-for disclosing of one of the valuable secrets of the order? At least, it so strikes me. And in fact the nonchalance with which lodge-writers will persist in divulging to the profane eyes of outside cowans these secrets of the lodge-room, is a matter for continual marvel. Again, how can Christian men and women apologize for Masonry and swallow this? "Masonry embraces within its limits the fundamental principles of all religious thought. . . . . She is the church's handmaid, and they go forth through the world, not as enemies, but hand in hand, with the same Bible between them, the same Shiloh within them, and the same God above them, on their common mission of good will to men." Masonry is far too serpent-wise to set up any outward pretensions of superiority to Christianity. She only modestly claims her as an equal. I do not think the Jews who worshiped Baal in Elijah's time claimed any superiority for Baalism over Judaism, but were satisfied if they could put the two on the same platform and cleverly contrive to delude people into thinking that, after all, there was not much difference between them.

Another sentence contains all the animus of her parentage: "Trust not the man who professes to have renounced Freemasonry because he could not be a Mason and a Christian." This is concentrated venom, but it does remind me just a little of Bunyan's immortal picture of poor, old Giant Pope sitting in the mouth of his cave and biting his nails at passing pilgrims because he was powerless to do anything more.

Apropos to the foregoing, the Bar Harbor Record prints an extraordinary story regarding President Eliot's strenuous endeavors to have Catholic services held in a certain church in that place, contrary to the will of its members. Dr. G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, seems to share the liberal views of his brother president at Harvard, judging from his speech at the recent New England Conference of educational workers: "We realize that we have much to learn from the Catholic church which embodies the great culture of the world. . . . . When the church takes hold of the school and brings to bear upon it all its forces and culture then Protestants must look to their laurels." Does President Hall realize what an object lesson we have in our next-door neighbor, Mexico, of what Rome can do in this line? The church has tried to take hold of our schools, and so far we have said "Hands off." The culture Dr. Hall waxes so enthusiastic over is a kind we do not admire. It is alien, parasitic. Its embrace means death. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25, 1893.

Unless President Cleveland shall interpose his veto, the property of the Mormons in Utah, which was a few years ago confiscated by the United States, under the Edmunds law, will be distributed as a charity fund to the Mormons in that Territory, a bill providing for its distribution in that manner having passed both branches of Congress, and being now in the hands of the President. The amount involved is something like $275,000.

After much doubt as to the final outcome, it seems now to be agreed by Senators of all shades of opinion that the Senate will pass the Voorhees bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the present silver law in a very few days, possibly before this letter is printed. It has been a long contest, and at times a very angry one, and the Senators appear to be pleased that the end is at last in sight.

The House of Representatives is now debating the Oates bankruptcy bill, practically the old Torrey bill, which has been prominently before several sessions of Congress. It has many bitter opponents, but the impression seems to be that it will be passed by the House, although some of its friends fear that it may be loaded down with amendments to such an extent as to make it objectionable to some who now favor it.

The government finances are far from being in a satisfactory condition. The gold reserve is down to $81,000,000, lower than it has been for many years, and the expenditures are largely in excess of the receipts. It is now regarded as certain that this Congress will have to make some provision for the large deficit which Secretary Carlisle estimates will exist at the close of the current fiscal year. Just what that provision will be is at this time a matter of conjecture. It is probable that President Cleveland's message at the beginning of the regular session of Congress, in December, will be largely devoted to this subject.

Chaplain Haddaway, of the House of Representatives, whose health has been in a precarious condition for a long time, is dead.

Rev. Rosina Davies, the Welsh evangelist, concluded a series of meetings here on Sunday night, and left yesterday for Minnesota, where she has an engagement to preach to a Presbyterian convention. From there she will go to Southern California, where she will spend the winter for the benefit of her health. After hearing her preach and sing one is not surprised at the success which has attended her work wherever she has been. She made such a good impression in Washington that she was invited to return in the spring and conduct a series of revival meetings, and she has promised to do so, her health permitting.

Captain Magnus Andersen, of Christiana, Norway, who conceived the idea of sending to the World's Fair an exact duplicate of the Viking—he pronounces it Wicking—ship in which Leif Erickson, the venturesome Norseman, is supposed to have visited America five hundred years before the arrival of Columbus, and who afterwards navigated the vessel across the Atlantic and took it to Chicago, where it was an interesting exhibit during the exposition, delivered a very interesting lecture here this week, under the auspices of the National Geographic Society. He told of the finding of the original Viking ship buried in a mound of clay, which had preserved its timbers through the centuries, of its acquisition by the Christiana University, where it is now on exhibition, and of the building of its duplicate, care being taken to see that it was an exact counterpart of the original even to the number of iron bolts used; also, of its trip across the Atlantic and its reception in America. The Viking was not sent by the government of Norway, as many have supposed, but by the people of that country, the money to build the vessel and to pay its expenses having been raised by popular subscription. Captain Andersen wishes to present the Viking to this government, but will not do so unless he can be assured that the government will undertake to keep it permanently on exhibition in Washington. He thinks it would make a fitting companion to the Columbus caravels which have been presented to the government and which will be brought to Washington in the spring and placed on exhibition. Members of the Geographic Society will endeavor to aid in carrying out his wishes. He proposes taking the Viking down the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, stopping at intermediate points, this winter. *

REFORM NEWS.

REV. J. P. STODDARD AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The end is near, and not a few who anticipated the opening day with delight are contemplating a release from long and laborious confinement with great complacency. Among employes (Ecclesiastes 7: 8), "Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof," is a very popular text, especially since the cool, damp atmosphere has taken possession of every inch of space in the fireless apartments of the mammoth buildings. There is monotony in changes repeated, and variety becomes tedious when followed as a routine, from month to month. To those who come and go it is variety with the "spice of life," but with those who come and stay it loses its twang.

I have seen so very little of the Fair myself that consistency suggests that I should be very moderate either in praise or criticism; but accepting the statements of others, which are corroborated by cursory observation, I must admit that the Fair is a most wonderful exhibit. I freely admit this at the N. C. A. booth, and claim that the most remarkable feature of this cosmos of wonders is that the secret lodge system is exhibited; the doors to its "temples" thrown wide open, and that "Light which shineth in darkness" reveals the naked truth to those who are willing to "comprehend it." I confess to some real pleasure in taking a poor blind, bewildered, enslaved sorcerer and leading him down and through one cavern of mystery into another, and still another, each deeper, darker and more profound in its bewitching enchantments, while attentive listeners stand amazed at the man's embarrassment and the astounding disclosures of "the mystery of iniquity." Had I no antidote to present, my feeling would be only sad and painful in the extreme, but since I can hold up the "Light of the world" and offer pardon and "a well-grounded hope" in the atonement, I have great joy in reproving sin and preaching the Gospel of "peace on earth and good will to men."

I am under a debt of gratitude both to the pious dead for their faithful instruction, and to the godly who yet live for contributions and prevailing prayers by which this exhibition has been sustained in the midst of a truly "perverse and crooked generation." It is God's favor, your prayers and benefactions, and not my wisdom or tact, or the sagacity of the committee in charge, that has kept the headlight and danger signals bright in the moral mists that have shrouded "Midway," "Wild-west," grog shops and the less public haunts of harlots and harlequins that have clung with a tenacious grip to this cosmopolitan display of the genius, culture, achievements, discoveries and victories of the whole world; and in fidelity I must regretfully add, an exhibit of greed and infidelity to Christ and the Sabbath, and a lack of keeping faith with the government and the good people who embarked in the enterprise with a distinct understanding that the laws of God and of the country were to be observed by the management. Let the responsibility rest where it belongs. J. P. STODDARD.

BROTHER I. R. B. ARNOLD IN KENTUCKY.

PADUCAH, Ky., Oct. 17, 1893.

DEAR BROTHER:—We have been here in Paducah three weeks; have had the floating chapel and tug both out of the river, on the ways for repairs—cost, $100. I have given several temperance lectures, have had the chapel in three different parts of the city, and as election comes soon, the temperance people are making a desperate effort to elect a no-license board. We are entering into the fight with good results, so far, as near as we can see.

We have many barrels of excellent papers, including Cynosures, Wesleyans and Free Methodists, which we are handing out as fast as we can. We have all we can use for six months to come, as large quantities have been sent to us.

Our line of work is much needed here. The temperance and Christian people show themselves very friendly, and are doing all they can to make it a success.

The Wheaton boys were a great help, this summer, with their singing. We expect to go up to Nashville soon, as Captain Ryman offers to tow the chapel up free of charge. Our little tug can handle the chapel coming down the river. The prejudice is so great here (where the race-riots were some months ago) that we cannot work with both whites and blacks at the same time; but we are quietly giving the colored people literature, and will soon lecture among them. It is pitiful to see so many colored men here burdened with balls and chains, working the streets to pay a fine for being drunk. If the saloons of Paducah can be closed, it will be a great blessing to the colored people.

I send a copy of "Our School," which we send once a week into every house in the city.

I am going to try to call at the Cynosure office before many months. Your brother in Christ,

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

THE EASTERN AGENT IN NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 27, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Christian Workers' Convention, conducted by Bro. A. A. Hoyt, in session at the time of my last writing, was not as largely attended as it was hoped it would be, but God, by his Spirit, was manifest. The saying, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," proved true in this case. I am sure all who participated in this convention had their faith strengthened. Those who go forth relying only for support on the divine arm will have support indeed. God still continues to use the weak of earth to over-

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE W. C. T. U. CONVENTIONS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As your representative at the World's and National Women's Christian Temperance Unions, I feel that I must say a few words, though both of these meetings have been so thoroughly reported in the daily and religious press that your readers have doubtless become familiar with their proceedings ere this.

Thirteen countries were represented in the world's Convention, some of them appearing in their native costumes, among these being Mrs. Chika Sakurai and Mr. Sen Tsuda, of Japan.

Large audiences testified to the interest in the world's-around-work of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Henrotin made brief addresses of welcome, as did President Bonney of the World's Congresses, in these opening words: "Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in the sacred name of God, and home, and native land, in the sacred names of temperance, and social purity, and every other virtue, I hail you and bid you welcome."

Other words of welcome were extended by Josiah Strong, D.D., in behalf of the Evangelical Alliance.

Lady Henry Somerset was the presiding officer, and with her able corps of assistants made the meeting one of success and profit to all.

At the noontide hour Amanda Smith, whom most of us have seen and heard, led in prayer, during which she said, in pleading for the abolition of the liquor traffic: "Oh, dear God, hasten the time just as quick as you can."

Addresses were made by Susan B. Anthony, and Kate Bushnell and Elizabeth Wheeler Andrews, two of our world-around missionaries; and to hear their earnest words, their wonderful experiences, and the way the Lord had led them, was only to verify the truth of God's Word, that "When he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them."

Wednesday the National opened its sessions, Mrs. Caroline B. Buell being elected chairman to fill the office in the absence of Miss Willard, the beloved president, who, on account of ill-health, was forbidden by her physicians to come over the waters to be present, though he assured her and us that with proper caution she can in a few months be fully restored.

An able address, covering the various departments of the W. C. T. U. work, was read by Lady Henry Somerset.

Mary Allen West was sadly missed from her accustomed place, and many were the words of loving remembrance spoken of her in the memorial services both in the World's and National meetings; "and her works do follow her."

The deliberations were, as a rule, harmonious, though at times spicy. The Temperance Temple received considerable attention, much of the time being given to asking and answering questions. Mrs. Carse has faith to believe that in two years it will all be paid for. God grant that it may be so! The Temperance Hospital was reported as doing excellent work, and indeed all the departments showed increased interest and activity, with an appeal for the co-operation of the women all over the land in pushing the various lines of work.

During one of the sessions it was announced that Lucy Stone, of Massachusetts, was about passing over the river of death, and a telegram of consolation was ordered sent from the convention; also one to Miss Willard in her enforced absence. Greetings from numerous friends of the work came by letter, in person and by telegram; so the good work goes on.

Frances E. Willard was re-elected president; Mrs. Mary A. Woodbridge, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, recording secretary; Mrs. Helen M. Barker, treasurer.

Mrs. Alice J. Harris, of Boston, had charge of the singing, which, as is always the case, was full of spirit and enthusiastic. In union there is strength; and may the women of the W. C. T. U. strive earnestly to attain to that at all times, for in thus doing they may be able to be a still greater power in the conflict against evil of all kinds. May they also be fearless to oppose every form of evil, ever living up to their convictions. Yours for the cause.

The convention closed with an excellent annual sermon on Sabbath afternoon.

ANNA E. STODDARD.

LETTER FROM MRS. ZARAPHONITHES, IN GREECE.

KATAKELON (OUR MOUNTAIN HOME), }
ANDROS, Greece, Sept. 19, 1893. }

DEAR READERS OF THE CYNOSURE:—It is a long time since we wrote anything for your benefit, but we have not forgotten you; and as we believe that many of you are praying for us and for the work, we take pleasure in writing to you.

We wrote to you last about our first two open-air meetings. Shortly after this, Mr. Zaraphonithes told Sister Hayden and I to go out and call the people in, and we did, and eighteen men, women and children came and we had a real good meeting. Then one Sunday we went over to a merchant friend, and asked him to let us have a meeting in front of his store, and he said, yes, only he was afraid that the mayor might disturb us. Mr. Z. preached from the text, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," and we had a large audience, and not the slightest disturbance. More or less came every Sunday to our house to hear the Gospel and the hymns. In May we had a most blessed visit from a classmate and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. F. J. Stanley, missionaries to Japan, who were on their way home to regain their health. While here he addressed an audience of Greeks, through Mr. Z., about the progress of the Japanese during the last thirty years. We had the meeting in our garden. Before Mr. Stanley came, Mr. Z. had been invited by a friendly priest to a distant village, to preach the Gospel to his people, on a great holy day, called St. George's day, when a great many people would be present from the surrounding villages. He also promised him that he might preach to them in the yard just outside the church, a most unheard-of thing for him to do here in Greece. So Mr. Z took Mr. Stanley with him and went to that village. It is a journey of a day over the mountains; and, although they had mules with them, about half the way was through such bad streets that they had to walk, and they did not know which way to go many times, and in answer to prayer, the Lord sent a man each time to show them the right way. The road is a lonely one. They went to the home of the priest who had invited them, and reached there on the eve of the holy day. They were cordially received by the priest, who took them to the church with him the next morning, and after the services were over, immediately took him outside of the church and told him to speak to the people. He did preach the Gospel to them; but other neighboring priests were there, and one of them sent a monk to interrupt Mr. Z, but the friendly priest said: "This is my church; you go away," and he went. Mr. Stanley and Mr. Z., in company with the priest, met that monk a number of times that day as they went from house to house to salute the people, and they had some discussions in which the monk got worsted every time, until, finally the monk asked Mr. Z.'s forgiveness for being so severe.

We have made a building this last year, which opens on to the main street of Batse, and a few weeks ago we held a meeting there for the first time; the room was nearly full, and a great many stood outside. There was no disturbance. This building was intended for a store, and we were to have it together with a nephew of Mr. Z. who had promised to keep the Sabbath, and not to sell liquor or tobacco; but afterwards he did not want to keep this promise; so we took it ourselves, and we will use it for a meeting-house and a reading room, and keep the Scriptures for sale. We will also hold meetings as often as we can during the week.

We kept up two or three services on the Sabbath, and one, and afterwards two prayer-meetings during the week all last year. Sometimes we had quite a little congregation, and again only one or two Greeks would come in. During the spring we scarcely ever had morning prayers alone, for some one or more persons would happen in on an errand or for medicine, and they would stay, and we would invite the work men on the store to come in, and they would gladly do so.

There has been, and there still is, a great deal of sickness here this summer. Mr. Z has treated a good many. He was sick himself twice, and the second time he did not seem to get his strength again in Batse, so we came up here to our mountain home, where he began to improve at once. Then our brother, Wales, who is with us again, got very sick and we had him come up here and stay until he got strong again. He and our son, Leroy, together with Mr. Z.'s mother, stay down in Batse to take care of things.

Mrs. Dr. Kalopothakes, the wife of one of the missionaries in Athens, spent several weeks with us, and she also came up here, and the first Sabbath afternoon we had a meeting, and thirteen men, women and children were present, and we had a very solemn meeting. Since then, many things have happened to interrupt, so that but few have come in and those were mostly children. Sickness kept Mr. Z. from traveling as much as he had planned for this summer. We all unite in Christian love to you all. Your sister in Christ,

MRS. A. D. ZARAPHONITHES.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Paper cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By REV. LEWIS O. THOMPSON. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master."—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D.

Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects.

By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers.

Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical—valuable because time saving—the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

Lodge Notes.

(From secret society papers.)

WOMEN CAN KEEP SECRETS.

The Chicago Herald is responsible for the following:

"Out on the Pacific coast there are four or five Chinese women who belong to the order. [Tong Suen Tong, or Masons]. They are the wives of high officials in the society. If a member should divulge any of the secrets of the order he would be killed, but no Mason was ever heard of who paid the death penalty.

"It is an old saying that a woman can't keep a secret, but Chinamen are of a different opinion. Many years ago a Chinawoman was admitted to the order, and some men tried to make her divulge the secrets. They tortured her to death, but the secrets of the society were not divulged. That is why Chinese Masons have faith in women, and it is considered a great honor for a woman to be admitted to the society. There are four or five hundred Americans in Chicago who belong to the Chinese Masons. They are not given more than six degrees, however. Dr. Flavius M. Wilder, who was killed by John Redmond, was a member, and when he was buried the society spent $600 for carriages, music, and other things. According to ancient custom, the members who were initiated Sunday night will give a banquet to the officers on the third night after the initiation."

The Washington Post, of Sept. 22, has the following item in regard to the biennial encampment of Knights of Pythias: "The prospect for the meeting of the Supreme Lodge and the grand encampment of the Knights of Pythias in this city in 1894 brightens every day, and there is no doubt of the ability of the local Knights and their business friends to raise sufficient funds to meet all expenses required. The members of the order in this jurisdiction are enthusiastic in the expectation of the Supreme Lodge's coming here at its next biennial session, and they are working to a man to further the idea."

An exchange speaks thus of the usual lodge praying: "Praying in lodge rooms is all right and proper, but when the brother who is entrusted with this special duty recites the prayer in a singsong tone it becomes ridiculous in the extreme and has no more effect on the members than a call from the chair would have for volunteers to sit up with a sick brother suffering with the small-pox."

"Bub," said a stranger who lived across the street, "is your father a Mason?"

"No, sir," replied the boy.

"Does he belong to the Knights of Malta?"

"No, sir."

"Ah? Perhaps he is an Odd-fellow!"

"No, sir."

"Is it possible! Then he must be an Elk?"

"No, sir."

"Is he a Grand Army man?"

"No, sir."

"That's strange. Er——can you tell me what in thunder your father means, then, when he gets out on the sidewalk every morning and makes all kinds of signs, and swings his arms and shoulders!"

"Oh, you mustn't mind that."

"Why not?"

"Pa has had St. Vitus' dance for thirteen years."

With Pure Blood

You need not fear the Grip, Pneumonia, Diphtheria, or Fevers, because your system will readily throw off any of these complaints. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes pure blood and builds up the whole system. You can rely upon Hood's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for rheumatism and catarrh, also for every form of scrofula, salt rheum, boils and other diseases caused by impure blood. It tones and vitalizes the whole system. If you ask those who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla what they think of it, the replies will be positive in its favor. Simply what Hood's Sarsaparilla does, that tells the story of its merit.

"Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething" softens the gums, reduces inflammation, allays pain and cures wind colic. 25c a bottle.

FAIR AND CLEAR—that's the way your skin will be, if you'll take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Pimples, blotches, eruptions, and humors are utterly banished by this medicine. It takes away more thoroughly and certainly than anything else, the blood poisons or impurities that cause them.

For every Skin, Scalp, and Scrofulous affection, no matter how it came, the "Discovery" is a direct remedy. It cleanses, builds up, strengthens, and invigorates every part of the system. Eczema, Erysipelas, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Boils, Carbuncles, Enlarged Glands, and the worst Scrofulous Sores and Swellings are completely and permanently cured by it.

Unlike ordinary spring medicines, the "Discovery" works equally well at all seasons.

Practically, it's sold on trial. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back. You pay only for the good you get.

No cheap substitute, urged by a tricky dealer, though it may be better for him to sell, can be "just as good" for you to buy.

The Christian Cynosure.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1893.

SOME CRITICISMS ANSWERED.

We notice remarks concerning the Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies made by the Wesleyan of Syracuse and the Conservator of Dayton, Ohio. They seem somewhat in the nature of criticisms, the Conservator saying: "That every other Congress at this time should attract national, and many of them international attention, and this one disappoint even its best friends, shows mismanagement or misplaced confidence. In either case it is unfortunate for the cause." We think that the Conservator has failed to read the Cynosure in respect to this meeting closely. We were not intending to have any meeting at all in case the Fair should be open on the Sabbath. We supposed that that question would be determined in ample time, so that arrangements could be made and definite announcements issued. As all conversant with the history of that subject know, the matter was postponed, and yet postponed, until in September we finally got the decision which settled it that we were to have no relief. In accordance with the order of the Board of Directors, the committee then gave up expectation of holding any meeting, though the provisional announcements had been made several weeks. At the meeting of the Board of Directors there was a majority who felt that we should hold such a meeting as we should be able to, and we went forward according to the best of our ability. The meeting was a disappointment to us all, as probably the proportion of persons who follow the lead of the Conservator rather than the Telescope is a disappointment to our brethren in that office. We console ourselves, as doubtless they do themselves, with the thought that we are responsible for acting according to our best light, and not at all for the apparent result of our labors, provided only we have used the best judgment God has given us and have acted as we thought right in the matter. We have no doubt our brethren at Dayton are entitled to this consolation, and we also think that it belongs to us.

The remark made that all the other Congresses attracted national or international attention seems based on a decided misapprehension as to the facts in the case. Only a few of the Congresses have been generally attended. Many of them have been quite small. This was unavoidable in the nature of the case. Over one hundred and fifty such assemblies could hardly hope, each of them, for a large attendance of friends and the gathering of speakers of national reputation.

Respecting our announcements, we never promised the presence of those who had agreed to present papers. We hoped that they might be able to be with us personally; this we could not know and did not say, but we announced papers from no one who had not promised to prepare and present them either personally or by another.

OATH-BOUND.

Common law surrounds the oath of a witness in a court of record with deep solemnity, and provides a restraining penalty for false swearing. If a witness has conscientious scruples against taking a judicial oath, his affirmation to the truth of his evidence, without calling upon God to hear and help him, is allowed and deemed as sacred and effective as an oath, and the punishment for a false affirmation is as severe as for false swearing. The equality of an oath and an affirmation is therefore definitely established.

In the three Blue Lodge and the four Chapter degrees of Masonry (to say nothing of any other degrees in the fraternity) each obligation ends with: "So help me God and keep me steadfast," etc. This is the oath in its primary or judicial form, but extrajudicial and blasphemous in its use under such circumstances.

It should be observed, in this connection, that in each and every instance in which this form of oath is used, it is to strengthen the bond of secrecy as to anything and everything that occurs in the fraternity, be it right or wrong. There is no escape except by breaking the obligation.

Odd-fellowship, which is, in many respects, no better than Freemasonry, claims that while it also is a secret order, it is not an oath-bound one. Yet, before he can enter the lodge-room to undergo initiation in the first degree, he is obliged to affirm: "I hereby pledge my sacred honor that I will keep secret whatever may transpire during my initiation." Even Masonry has not the assurance to demand such a preliminary obligation from the novice who would enter its doors. At the end of his initiatory "promises," in the Odd-fellows' lodge, he must add: "To the faithful performance of all which I pledge my sacred honor." And a similar pledge is required whenever a higher degree is conferred upon a member of the order.

Will some one tell us what difference there is between the oath of the Freemason and the pledge of the Odd-fellow, so far as the binding power of the respective obligations is concerned?

With regard to the Royal Arcanum, Bro. Rosenberger has the statement from a reliable member of that order that it is an oath-bound society. "But," remarks Bro. Rosenberger, in the Gospel Messenger, "it is immaterial whether the memberships, or obligations, are assumed by affirmation or by an oath—the principle is the same. It is the grave sin of SECRECY, and needs to be dealt with promptly, without any measures of compromise."

The worst feature of lodge secrecy, however, is found in the fact that the candidate for lodge promotion is sworn to conceal matters of which he knows nothing, and cannot, until he takes the obligation.

THE A. P. A. IN CONGRESS.

On Friday last, in the House of Representatives, a memorial was presented from Henry M. Youmans, a member of the Fifty-second Congress from the Eighth Michigan District and a candidate for re-election. praying that the House investigate the circumstances attending the election of the present representative from that district. The memorial alleged that the election was brought about by the machinations of the American Protective Association, a politico-religious organization existing in Michigan and other western States—and went on to arraign the society in very severe terms. This was resented by Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Dingley, Mr. Morse, Mr. Paynter and other members crowded around the gentleman from Michigan in a threatening way. Finally the gentleman who introduced the memorial threw oil on the troubled waters by announcing that he would withdraw the memorial until the occupant of the seat was present to speak for himself. There will be renewed interest when the case is resumed in the House.

The pressure upon our columns, owing to an unusual influx of Reform News, crowds our space.

—We continue to-day the publication of the very able papers read at the recent Congress.

—Our esteemed friend and occasional contributor, Josiah W. Leeds, recently had a theatrical agent in Philadelphia prosecuted, convicted and fined for displaying obscene play-bills in public. As a precedent it is important, because the offence is common in nearly all towns and cities, and can only be reached by a similar summary process.

—Rev. S. F. Porter left here on Monday last for Kansas, and from there (D. V.) to Southern California, in active pursuance of his anti-secrecy work among the various colleges. The importance of this mission work, which includes lectures to students and the placing of anti-secrecy literature in the libraries to which they have access, is being felt and appreciated, and the prayers and best wishes of people will greatly encourage Bro. Porter in pursuing it.

—At Hebron, Ind., last May, the Good Templars' lodge prepared a list of eighteen citizens who, in its judgment, were ruining themselves and causing humiliation and suffering to their families and friends by their intemperate habits. This list they gave to Charles Miller, the saloonman of the town, forbidding him to sell any of them liquor under penalty of prosecution. The name of George C. Childs, a prominent business man, was on the list and now he has filed a suit in the Circuit Court asking damages from the chief Templar, David T. Brough, whose name was signed and by whose authority the list was made public. The outcome is looked for with interest, as a principle is involved in this case.

—A national convention will be held in the First United Presbyterian church, Allegheny, Pa., November 14 to 16. Addresses will be delivered by able speakers of nearly all denominations on the application of the law of Christ for the solution of the great practical problems of the day, such as the Sabbath question, the marriage and divorce question, the race problem, the Chinese and immigration and labor questions, the Bible in the schools, peace and arbitration. No more important gathering for the deliberations and planning of action of patriotic citizens was ever called. The President of the National Reform Association, the Hon. Felix R. Brunot, Joseph Cook, Dr. Herrick Johnson, Dr. Josiah Strong, Judge Hinckley, Josiah W. Leeds, and a large number of other leading citizens all over the country unite in this call. Dr. Robinson, pastor of the church, will deliver the address of welcome on Tuesday evening, Nov. 14. All Christian societies and communities are invited to send delegates.

come the mighty, human philosophy to the contrary.

The missionaries go forth from this little meeting filled with an inspiration born of God. Who can tell what the results of their labors may be?

On Sabbath morning I accepted an invitation to lead a Christian prayer and conference service, held in the Scotch Presbyterian church of this city. The attendance was large and a good spirit was manifest. I found the pastor, Rev. Mr. Gunn, and some of the members at least in partial sympathy with our work. As lodge men were connected with the church, it was not thought best to accept my offer to address them on the subject. Much personal kindness was shown and some will hereafter read our paper. I felt that had we been better acquainted the officers would have risked letting me give my opinion of the lodge. Perhaps at some future date this can be arranged.

On Monday evening I took part in the Christian Endeavor meeting held in Dr. Gordon's church. Here I renewed old acquaintances and found new friends. Some of the young men who remained after the service asked questions regarding the lodge, and expressed a wish to attend a lecture when opportunity should be given.

Yesterday afternoon I went to Lynn, and was accompanied in my calls by Bro. G. Eide. This brother is much enlisted in the temperance reform. He is planning to visit cities in the West this winter, speaking and working as he may have opportunity. He is a reader of the Cynosure, and a believer that open methods are the best in reforms.

In the evening I returned to Boston and attended a meeting of the Scandinavian Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Dedrickson, pastor. Bro. Dedrickson invited me to occupy a few moments in telling of my work. Bro. S. Clements, whose acquaintance I made some years since, followed in the Scandinavian language with remarks in opposition to the lodge. A cordial handshake showed that I had the sympathy of a majority of those present. One young man expected to join the Masons, but was willing to read my tracts and consider what had been said. If as sensible as he appeared, he will not unite after the light he received. A future lecture will be welcomed by this people.

I am now concluding my work in New England. I expect soon to return to Washington and thence labor as the Lord may providentially direct. I am much indebted to our dear Bro. Pratt, who has so generously aided our work in the past, for financial backing in my labor of the month past. The financial depression is being much felt in New England. Unless there is a change for the better soon, thousands will suffer. Even the dry-goods houses are reducing the number of their clerks. Many of the factories that are running are operating only on part time. It will be but natural that reforms which at best are but poorly supported will suffer. We doubtless need lessons of adversity. As long as millions are worse than wasted on strong drink we must expect "hard times." "All things work together for good to them that love God." This thought may keep us joyful in tribulation.

THE EMPIRE STATE.

PREPARATIONS FOR THE CONVENTION AT UTICA.—IMPRORTANT WORD TO NEW YORK FRIENDS.

Mountains of difficulty can be removed and cast into the sea. Our Lord's promise (Mat. 17: 20; Mark 11:23.) is sure. Let us praise himfor his grace.

PLACE.

After one of the most trying week's work the place of our New York State convention was fixed last evening by the vote of the trustees of the Welsh M. E. church, who agreed to rent their building for a reasonable sum. This church is very centrally located on the corner of Hopper and Union streets near Steuben Park. A street car line from several railway stations passes the door. The car line on Genessee street from the West Shore road runs within a block. The house will seat several hundred and is a handsome brick structure. In a former letter I mentioned the willingness of the Free Methodist brethren that the convention should meet with them. A note from Bro. O. M. Owen, district chairman, withdrawing the favor, did not explain fully the reason therefor and I have not been able to see him since. A quarterly conference is to be held, I understand, opening on the 16th. This will be a good arrangement for the brethren in the district. They can attend both meetings.

SPEAKERS.

At the suggestion of one of the leading pastors of the city, who has had full experience of lodgery, and is through with it, I have written Joseph Cook to know if he can give an address during the week of the convention in some large hall or church. The project is favorably viewed by several pastors. Mr. Cook is deservedly popular here, as everywhere; and such an address would increase that popularity with many good men of Utica.

Every possible effort will be made to secure entertainment for all who come. Let there be hundreds. Good speakers from all the various denominations opposing secretism are invited. As part of this work was left with Bro. W. B. Stoddard I have not learned and cannot report all the speakers. But we hope to hear addresses from Revs. F. M. Foster and Stephen Merritt, of New York City; S. R. Wallace and E. Jennings (editor of the Wesleyan), of Syracuse; B. H. Roberts, of the Earnest Christian, No. Chili; J. B. Clapperton, Garrartsville; W. H. Clark, Binghamton; and J. P. Stoddard, of Boston. The promise of the latter to return by Utica from his work in the World's Fair promises a rich treat. His experiences in that great center of instructfon and interest will be well worth hearing.

TO ALL WHO CANNOT COME.

It would be good to see every friend of our cause at this meeting. Utica needs the presence and above all the prayers of you all. But if the Lord keeps you at home do not forget that he gives the victory to faith. We overcome only by him. So pray, brethren; pray constantly for the Spirit's power on this cnovention. Write a letter also. No matter if it be a short one. Write your experience, your suggestions, your words of good cheer. Let us have a hundred letters. Hold up the hands of those in Utica in this inspiring way.

We shall need funds also. Bro. Lucius Woodruff reports a little in the treasury. A dear brother, who says: "report this from a friend," sends $5 00. Let others do likewise. Large sums or small, the cause in New York needs all you can spare for it from the Lord's funds. Send on then freely as God has given you.

THE WEEK.

My last letter closed with the work in Otsego county, which is on the whole a very hopeful field. Those who favor the secret lodges are a small minority. But those who object to them, are seldom able to give so good a reason as they might. There is work enough to be done in educating and informing the people, and establishing conviction. Our friend, Byron Tunnicliff, of Schuyler's Lake, is thoroughly awake to the dangers of secretism and his influence for good is felt widely in the county. May there be many who shall emulate his zeal.

Reaching Utica on Friday, the 19th, I found a pleasant lodging in the Christian home of Mr. Bradish, and began to work for a place of meeting. Next day Rev. W. E. Sitzer, of Herkimer, welcomed me and I spoke to his people in the Free Methodist church next day morning and evening. They are fully in sympathy with the reform. Other pastors were more or less opposed to the lodge; but the Methodist brother, while personally a very friendly man, yet seems to affiliate with the lodge. Rev. Rufus Coons, of the F. M. church lives, at Herkimer and prays for the downfall of secretism.

Folts Mission Institute has just been opened at Herkimer. It has a fine building and excellent equipment. Rev. J. L. Davies is the president, and kindly explained the plan followed in this promising training school. He has known of our work and co-operated somewhat in past years.

In Utica a most cheering and helpful acquaintance has been made with the friends of the Christian Alliance. Mrs. Bradish and Mrs. Kellogg have been especially interested, and all are praying for the visitation of blessing and power on the meeting of Nov. 14th and 15th. Of their work here I must write more in future.

AN ANTI-SECRECY LECTURE AT ENGLEWOOD.

ENGLEWOOD, Chicago, Ill., Oct. 23, '93.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The well-known representative of the National Christian Association at the World's Fair, Rev. J. P. Stoddard, lectured at the Swedish Lutheran Bethlehem church, Englewood, Ill., Oct. 22, '93. His subject was: "The Secret Lodge System a Rival of the Church and Home." The lecturer gave a clear exposition of the secret lodge system, illustrating with charts. The attendance was large and we hope for good results. We rejoiced to hear the speaker especially mention that the Augustana Synod of the Lutheran church is not alone on the list of "cranks" on this point, as is oftentimes claimed. May God bless the work of the National Christian Association and its representatives in bringing light to the people in these matters.

GEO. E. YOUNGDAHL.

OUR WORK IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

REPORT OF THE SEVENTEENTH MEETING OF THE NEW HAMPSHIRE STATE CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, AUXILIARY TO THE N. C. A.

The seventeenth annual meeting of the New Hampshire Christian Association was held in the Congregational church at Barnstead Parade, October 19-22, 1893. It was the largest and most successful State convention ever held since our organization. Four States, twenty towns and ten Christian denominations were represented. The meeting-house was crowded at the evening sessions and nearly full in the day-time. More young men identified themselves with our work than ever before, and more new members were admitted than at any previous sessions.

Although the treasurer reported about $20 in the Home Mission treasury, $110 were cheerfully paid in or pledged for reform and Christian work. Four noble young men, brothers and grandsons of a minister of the Gospel, who were saved at our last annual meeting at Canterbury, were present, rejoicing in the Lord, and joined our association. Two other excellent young men, Charles W. Hardy, Jr., and William A. W. Hardy, of Penacook, were approved as local preachers for one year.

The glory of God filled the house from our first session on Thursday afternoon to the close on Sunday evening. Christians were wonderfully refreshed, backsliders reclaimed, sinners struck under conviction and some, we trust, saved. Evangelists Henry J. Pierson and wife of Newark, New Jersey; Pastors A. L. Smith, C. L. Baker, Jonathan H. Leavitt and others preached the Gospel with the power and demonstration of the Spirit. Miss Abbey E. McIntire, president of the Rockingham County W. C. T. U.; Mrs. F. J. Brown, president of the Laconia W. C. T. U.; Robert A. Frohock and Frank J. Brown gave addresses on temperance. Bros. Brown and Frohock, aided by the proper officers, raided the Bofcobel, a famous rum hotel, the only liquor place in the parish, and the proprietor was bound over to appear before the higher court, under $200 bonds. Some people criticised the reform methods of these brethren, but no farmer can be expected to clean out a hog-pen with kid gloves on. The writer reported home and foreign mission work of the Association during the past year, and a collection of $23 was taken for our two lady missionaries at work in the West India Islands. Miss Isadore D. Haines has been abroad about two years and Mrs. Mary H. Harmon one year.

The anti-secret reform was very ably presented by Bros. Ezra T. McIntire, President R. A. Frohock and Deacon Simon Rowe. Words can not do justice to the grand work of Bro. McIntire as he taught the people with Moore's Trestleboard in one hand, the blessed Bible in the other, and like Stephen of old, filled with the Holy Spirit. It was not possible to resist or gainsay the wisdom and power with whichhe spoke. Some of our good brethren do not approve of our method of anti-secret work, but we willingly submit that all may judge whether it is wiser to spend our time and strength rehearsing the silly antics of the lodge room to a handful of simpering hoodlums and maddened lodge dupes, or in the church of God, his Spirit manifestly bearing witness to the truth, before a crowded audience of sincere and candid, but to a large extent uninformed, people; to show with overwhelming proofs and abundant witnesses that the fundamental principles of the secret empire are utterly antagonistic to sound morality and the Word of God. Beloved brethren, we have become thoroughly satisfied that the most skillful housewife cannot make a good soup of one vegetable.

Mrs. H. J. Pierson and the writer explained the promises of the Bible to sick Christians; after which sixteen intelligent and trustworthy persons testified that they had received bodily healing in answer to prayer. These witnesess gave glory to God for healing them of neuralgia, sciatica, rheumatism, impaired eyesight, nervous prostration, influenza, chronic headaches of forty years' standing, hernia, insanity, consumption and other diseases incurable by human means or natural remedies. Six sick Christians were anointed with oil and prayed for, according to James 5:14.

Miss Ella Carter, of Boston, glorified God by singing his praises during the convention. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we commend the Christian Cynosure, 221 West Madison street, Chicago, the organ of the National Christian Association, as specially worthy of the patronage of Christian people for its able defence of sound morality and pure religion. We approve its resolute stand against all secret societies.

Resolved, That we disapprove of all secret societies and solemnly testify that membership in them tends to unfit men for good citizenship and worthy churchmembership.

Resolved, That we believe in total abstinence from all intoxicants and narcotics, and will pray and vote that the traffic in them be prohibited by law.

Resolved, That we discountenance turning the house of God into a dining-saloon or play-house, to raise money for religious purposes.

The convention also voted thanks to the Concord and Montreal R. R. system for reduced rates, and to the people of Barnstead for their ample and generous hospitality in entertaining the convention.

The writer's commission as Home Missionary and General State agent was renewed.

The following officers were chosen for the ensuing year.

President—Robert A. Frohock.

Vice-presidents by counties: Belknap—John H. Bartlett. Carroll—William H. Mason. Cheshire—Franklin S. Wood. Coos—Horace Holton. Grafton—John Howland. Hillsboro—Geo. L. Kibbee. Merrimac—Chas. W. Hardy, Jr. Rockingham—A. L. Smith. Strafford—D. C. Dargin. Sullivan—J. L. Kimball.

THE HOME.

SCHOOL LIFE.

I sat in the school of sorrow—
The Master was teaching there—
But my eyes were dim with weeping,
And my heart was full of care.

Instead of looking upwards
And seeing the face divine
So full of the tenderest pity
For weary hearts like mine,

I only thought of the burden,
The cross that before me lay,
So hard and heavy to carry
That it darkened the light of day.

So I could not learn my lesson
And say, "Thy will be done,"
And the Master came not near me
As the weary hours went on.

At last, in my heavy sorrow,
I looked from the cross above,
And I saw the Master watching
With a glance of tender love.

He turned to the cross before me,
And I thought I heard him say,
"My child, thou must bear thy burden,
And learn thy task to-day.

"I may not tell the reason:
'Tis enough for you to know
That I, the Master, am teaching,
And give this cup of woe."

So I stooped to this weary sorrow;
One look at that face divine
Had given me power to trust him
And say, Thy will, not mine.

And then I learned my lesson,
Taught by the Master alone,
And he only knows the tears I shed,
For he has wept his own.

But from them came a brightness
Straight from the home above,
Where the school life will be ended,
And the cross will show the love.

A CHRISTIAN SACRIFICE.

A young man who was half through his medical course in one of our large universities, and who accepted Christianity and professed to follow its teachings, one day awoke to the fact that, having been absorbed by his studies, he had forgotten that his profession placed him under sacred obligations to lead a generous, unselfish life.

While in this frame of mind the thought of another student in the university came to him—a fellow-townsman—who was fast rioting himself to death. The two had been friends, but when the younger man began to drink and to seek questionable associates, the medical student avoided him. Now he felt that he had done wrong to abandon a man when he most needed a friend.

That day he hunted the poor fellow up, and found him partially under the influence of the last night's debauch. His books were lying before him, and he was stupidly trying to prepare for his next recitation.

"This place is not for a man like you. Come to my rooms. We shall share them together."

The poor fellow answered: "I can't leave. I'm in debt. I'm no good. I'm past any hope of reform. Let me alone."

"Not a bit of it," answered the other cheerily. "I've let you alone too long."

The young man paid his townsman's debts and took him to his own neat rooms.

The next morning his guest was sober, and the host proposed a written contract between them, if they were going to live together. This paper stipulated, among other things, that neither of them was to go out alone; that twenty minutes should be allowed to get to the university or back, and all extra time should be accounted for. One hour each day was to be reserved for pleasure. Under all circumstances bygones were to be bygones.

This contract was signed by both students. A month passed without any violation of it. Then the man who had been rescued threw down his book and exclaimed:

"I can endure it no longer. I can't and I won't continue the struggle to keep that contract.

"All right. Break it, then, and break it here," was the calm reply.

"But how can I? I must drink. There is no brandy here.

"Drink, if you must; I'm studying."

"All right! I will."

The half-reformed fellow rose to put on his hat. His host also arose and took his.

"What are you doing?"asked the other, querulously.

"Remember our contract. If you must drink, I must go with you."

The guest's eyes fell, and he dropped to his chair. His face grew deadly pale. Should he break away from this man, the only true friend he had? If he did there was no hope for him. It meant a drunkard's degradation; possibly a drunkard's grave. The horrible craving for liquor stirred every nerve in his body. The struggle, the alternations of feeling, the intensity of desire, convulsed his whole nature.

There was a pause. For some moments in silence the men faced each other, one sitting, the other standing. At length the set lips of the tempted man relaxed, the frenzied eye softened, and he said feebly:

"Thank you, old fellow, I'll stay here, and try—and—try—to overcome," and then, crying like a child, he threw himself upon his bed.

Another month passed. The temptation came again. Again this constant friend stood by him, supporting him by his stong will, and his firm sympathy.

When eighteen months had passed the drunkard was a cured man. His old haunts had been abandoned, his old tastes overcome. During this period of convalescence his friend, each day in the quiet of his little sider-oom, had offered openly his morning prayer, and had read some time during each day a book which he had not invited him to share. It was the Bible.

"You never talk religion to me," said the puzzled man one day."

Talk religion, when his self-sacrificing host was leading the life of Christ before his eyes? It was the life that had saved. It ought to have spoken louder than words.

"I would have talked religion had it seemed best that I should do so," said his friend. "I have not shunned to show you the motive that has governed my conduct. Your feelings and opinions, with regard to Christ, whom I love, have been indifferent, almost antagonistic. More than I can tell you, I should rejoice could I know that you have the hope and the incentive to a true life that I have found in Him I love."

When the savior of his friend left the university, he took no honors, for his work of mercy had not left him time to do so. He was simply what is called a "common-place man." The other, who was a man of brilliant parts, ranked among the first in his class—he who but a little while ago had been picked upout of a debauch.

This story is a true one. The like occurs, in different ways and under varying conditions, oftener than we suspect. It is a sacred drama, forever new, forever inspiring, when one life is given in some beautiful form for that of another—unknown, unrecognized by man, but honored by God.—Youth's Companion.

ABOUT FLOWERS.

According to a tradition of the Peruvian Indians, the sunflower was given to one of the Incas by the Spirit of Light. The Inca gave it the place of honor in his garden, and yet the flower would not rest content. It was homesick for the realms of everlasting light, from which it had become a reluctant exile. All day long it kept its face turned to the sun, and when night came, was inconsolable until the first flush of dawn. Then it would look eagerly, watching for the appearance of the sun, again to follow it all day long as it traveled across the sky.

This beautiful myth recalls the lines of Moore:

"As the sunflower turns on her god when he sets
The same look that she gave when he rose."

It must not be thought, however, that the blossom follows the sun. It is the young plant which makes this display of devotion. No plant responds so readily to the feeblest glimmer as the sunflower, unless it be the flower bud of the pond lily. After the sun has been down an hour or more, all the sunflowers will stand, bowing their heads toward the lingering twilight in the northwest. But when the twilight is over, every plant stands looking straight at the zenith, and maintains that position all night. In the early morn, the sunflower perceives the daybreak as soon as any human eye can. At the very first faintest flushes of dawn, all the young sunflowers bow to the east, and stand in the reverent attitude of the peasants in Millet's Angelus.

Those who only know morning glories and moon flowers as climbing plants, will be interested in knowing that one species grows as a tree, in Western Mexico, twenty or thirty feet high, and with a trunk three feet in circumference. The flower is about two inches long, and white, though yellowish below.—Youth's Journal.

THE WIFE IN BUSINESS.

A man's wife often knows more than he does about a great many things, and while he need not lower himself in her estimation by admitting her mental superiority, it is sometimes well for him to silently recognize her superior intelligence, and profit by it. If he is a wise man he will not be too ready to come into accord with the opinions of his wife, but will affect a great deal of wisdom of his own, even though he knows he has none. It never increases a wife's respect for her husband to know that he is her inferior in anything, and it certainly does not increase her respect or affection to have him intimate by word or look that she does not know anything at all. The judgment of the average woman regarding the disbursement of money is often better than that of the average man, particularly when it comes to spending money for domestic purposes. It takes a shrewd tradesman to get over the average sensible woman, while the tradesman finds it easy to work off stale goods on the average man; and the most conceited man might as well acknowledge frankly that his wife can attend to most of the affairs of her own household better than he can attend to them for her. Women very often have the most acute perception regarding business affairs. If men would only "talk business" with their wives instead of taking it for granted that women don't understand "anything about business," there would probably be fewer failures. Many a successful business man owes his success to the keenness of judgment of a partner whose name does not appear in the firm or over the shop window, and who is not supposed to have any connection with the business—and that partner is his wife, in whom he is wise enough to confide—Merchants' Review.

SAVE TIME.

"I am so busy in the morning that I may catch the regular train to the city to my business, that I cannot take time for family worship, and so I observe it with my family only in the evening," said a leading merchant to his pastor; and it is doubtless true that many church members act on this principle, and all to save time. But does it save time? Luther used to say that he was so busy that he could not get his work done unless he spent several hours in prayer every day. A celebrated judge in England declared that if he neglected to ask God's direction and guidance in the morning, everything would go wrong through the day. The writer of this article has a friend who, when he finds his business getting tangled through the day—mislaying this letter that required a prompt answer, and spending precious time hunting it up—forgetting that important appointment until it is too late, and neglecting to remit that draft which was promised to-day, etc.—he stops and inquires at himself, why is all this confusion? Did I neglect to ask God's help and guidance this morning? and he invariably finds that this is what he did, and hence his trouble.

We ought not to forget that wisdom for temporal, as well as spiritual, things cometh from God. His indwelling Spirit can keep our minds and hearts in such peace that it will be an easy matter to attend to the duties of the day without distraction, so that it indeed becomes true we will save time by using a part of it in asking the guidance of God. Some one may say that is a new thing to attribute to prayer, but it is as old as Luther at any rate, and not a whit more wonderful than other things it accomplishes. Prayer turned the council of Ahithophel to foolishness. Prayer overthrew the army of Sennacherib.

Prayer has healed the sick and raised the dead; why cannot it secure wisdom to help us in our daily work? It can. Try it, and see if in your prayerful days you cannot do twice as much labor as in your prayerless days.—Selected.

SHEAVES FROM MANY FIELDS..

A small sin hides the face of God.

When you cannot see in any other direction, look up.

All truth is nonsense to the man whose life is a lie.

Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people.

No matter where faith steps, it always finds solid rock.

The man God sends never tries to pick out easy places.

Riding a hobby is more restful to the rider than to anyone else.

The first duty the Christian owes to God is to be happy.

The only joys which live and grow are those we share with others.

It is not a good plan for the head of the family to do all the giving.

No life is worth living that is not a blessing to others.

If you do not want to be detested don't be a chronic growler.

The only work God pays for is that which we do for nothing.

Every soldier in God's army ought to be willing to be a private.

It is the duty that lies nearest we are most apt to neglect.

He who lives for himself lives for a mean fellow.

You cannot whiten your own character by blackening others.

There can be no right use of a wrong thing.

Beauty in the heart will find its way to the face.

The pleasure-seeker is a man of many disappointments.

Every dollar some men get widens the gulf between them and heaven.

Practice the same kind of religion in the street car that you profess in church.

It will not make you any cleaner to throw mud at another.

It is hard to be a friend to a man who is an enemy to himself.

Considering that the world is so wide it is strange that some people are so narrow.

If the devil had to travel without a mask he would never be followed.

Surround a sinner with happy Christians and he will either be converted or leave the country.

It is just as needful that Christians should rejoice in the Lord as that they should go to church.

The devil never goes into a warm prayer-meeting to invite people to go to the theater.

Some people never find out the real worth of their religion until they lose all their money.

The man who walks over a precipice with his eyes shut is as sure to be killed as the one who throws himself from it.

As soon as a man gets right with God he can't bear the thought of being wrong with anybody else.

The right kind of a Christian will thank God every hour of his life, whether there is anything in sight to thank him for or not.

Much of the trouble in this world happens because men take too much time to make money and too little to enjoy it.

God's cause is injured when parents observe the Sabbath in a way to make their childen hate it.

The prayer of faith always holds out both hands to receive the answer.

Call the day lost on which you have not tried to make somebody happy.

If we would spend more time in looking for something to love we would see less to hate.

A hypocrite is a man who, in trying to fool everybody else, fools only himself.

A heresy trial is like a dog fight in a flower garden; nothing is settled but the flowers.—Anonymous.

TEMPERANCE.

ONLY.

Free from all care in his boyish play,
A face as the sunlight, cheering and gay,
The pride of a mother whose arms entwine—
Only a sip of his father's wine.

A growing knowledge with manhood's strength.
A mind far-reaching in wisdom's length,
A smile for the merry, for the grieving a tear—
Only a glass of the foaming beer.

Shining in circles of mirth and song,
A love of the right and a hatred of wrong,
A friend to be sought for whose friendship is gain –
Only a toast in the bright champagne.

In the manly face a line of care,
Some silver threads in the dark brown hair
A cloud on the brow, in the eye, alas!
Only an occasional social glass.

A figure bent in the noon of life,
A weeping mother, a pleading wife,
A weakened brain and a mind grown numb—
Only a drink of the fiery rum.

A squalid room in an attic high,
A pain-wrought moan, a pitiful cry,
A bundle of rags 'neath the rafters' gloom—
Only a dying drunkard's home.

A coffin of pine, unfinished and rude,
A widowed mother with starving brood,
A lonely ride o'er the rattling pave—
Only a pauper's nameless grave.

ALL OVER WITH HIM.

Dead!

Dead in the fullness of his manly strength, the ripeness of his manly beauty, and we who loved him were glad! His coffin rested on his draped piano, his banjo and his flute beside it. And as we looked upon his brown curls thrown up from the cold, white brow, on his skilled hands folded on his breast, on his sealed lips, of which wit and melody had been the very breathings, the silence was an awe, a weight upon us, yet our voiceless thanks rose to God that he was dead.

Always courteous in manner, kind in work, obliging in act, everybody liked "Ned," the handsome, bright, brilliant Ned.

Three generations of ancestors, honorable gentlemen all, had taken the social glass; as gentlemen may, but never lowered themselves to drunkenness—never, no, not one; but their combined appetite they had given as an heirloom to Ned, and from his infancy he saw wine offered to guests in the dinner parties, and, when he had been "a perfect little gentleman," was given by his father one little sip.

He grew, and the taste grew, and when his father was taken, all restraint but a mother's love was taken.

As the only child of a praying mother, now the church would hold him up, now the saloon would draw him down; now his rich voice would join his mother's to swell the anthems of the church, now make her nights hideous with his ribald songs. So all along the years he was her idol and her woe.

When her last sickness was upon her the mother said to a friend:

"They tell me when I am gone Eddie will go down unchecked; that in some wild spree or mad delirium he will die. But he will not. His fathers created the appetite they gave my boy. His disgrace is their sin and my sin too. He saw it on our table, tasted it in our ice creams, jellies and sauces. For this, my punishment is greater than I could bear but for the sure faith God has forgiven me and will answer my daily, nightly prayers, and Eddie will die a humble penitent. It is just what I am forbidden to enjoy here, the promised land, but I know whom I believe, and my boy will be carried safely over."

As death drew nigh every breath was a prayer for Eddie; and as he chafed her death-cold hands, the pallid lips formed the words no other ear could catch, "Meet—me—in—heaven." And his voice, rich and full, responded, "I will, mother, I will."

And as from her mountain height of faith and love she caught a sight of that "promised land," with a seraph's smile she whispered, "I—thank—thee—O Father," and was gone.

And his uncontrollable grief made one say to another, "His mother's death will be his salvation."

He covered the new-made grave with flowers, and when others had left the cemetery he went back and sat beside it until nightfall, and then went to his lone home, and the oppressive silence drove him out to walk. He passed a saloon; some of his old associates came out and said kind words of sympathy. His soul was dark and sad, and from the open door came light and cheerful voices, and he went in.

Before the long spree was over he bade a crony "take that old book out of my sight."

That old book, the Bible he had seen his sainted mother reading morning, night, and often at midday, and from which he had read to her through those suffering, dying days.

Then a friend of his mother took him to her home and brought him back to soberness, remorse, and a horror of himself. For months he did nobly and became active in Christian work, and refused all urging to "just step in and see your old friends," and we felt there was joy in heaven.

Then he was asked to bring his banjo and sing at an oyster supper at the most respectable saloon in town, where "no one was ever asked to drink."

A wild spree was the result, and his robe was so mired we doubted if it ever had been white. And he doubted, too, lost hope, lost faith in himself, and, worse, lost faith in God.

Kind arms were thrown about him, and again he was placed upon his feet. Very humbly, very weak, he tried once more to walk the heavenward path.

"I am very glad to see you so well," I said one day when I met him.

"I don't know how long it will last," he said sadly.

"Forever, I hope," I said cheerily.

"I shall try hard to have it, but there will come an unguarded moment—but you know nothing about it."

Some two weeks later I met a physician.

"I have a case for you, ladies. Ned is very sick."

"Has liquor anything to do with it?"

"No, not at all. He has pneumonia, but his old drinking has so ruined his stomach, it will go hard with him."

His nurse told us he thought he should die, and constantly exclaimed: "My wasted life! my wasted life! God cannot forgive it!" He would fear to die, and pray to live to redeem his past; then he would fear to live, and pray to be taken from temptation. So wore on a week, and then he gave up self and grew calm in Christ.

One Sunday he said his mother was in the room, and wondered we could not see her, and with a smile on his face and "mother" on his lips, he passed beyond.

As I came out of the house one of his whilom associates, sober and sad, took off his hat and asked, "Is it all over?"

Impressed with the vast meaning of those two little words, I bowed and answered:

"All over!"

With a voice full of pathos he said:

"The dear fellow is all right now. There are no saloons up there."

I walked on repeating to myself: "No saloons up there! Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."—Issue.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE EPISTLES.

LESSON VII.—Fourth Quarter, 1893.—November 12.

SUBJECT.—The Grace of Liberality.—2 Cor. 8: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich. —2 Cor. 8: 9.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The spirit of true giving. vs. 1–5. We note here (1) that giving to others is a privilege granted to us through the grace, or favor, of God. He could so have arranged his universe as to require nothing from his creatures in the way of gifts or service. He might have relieved the poor and suffering by the direct effort of his own will, but he has chosen the opposite method, and made us his instruments through which to work. Human hands must minister to the poor; and human, not angelic, lips, preach to them the Gospel. (2) That trial and affliction, though they may limit the amount of our charities, should not stop us from giving, but should rather have the effect of enlarging our sympathies. We have periodical recurrences of hard times, as at the present, but we happily know nothing of the grinding, hopeless poverty of the mass of the people in Paul's day. The literal rendering of the word "deep" is "down to the depth;" and the Geneva version has it, "the poverty which had consumed them even to the very bottom." Macedonia had suffered greatly from successive civil wars and ruinous taxation, besides losing one chief source of income in its mines, which had been appropriated by the Roman government. Besides, here as elsewhere, the church was made up, not of rich and noble, but of the common people; and yet, like the widow with her two mites, they have stood all these centuries a blessed example of true Christian liberality. (3) Theirswas a willing offering, given with a glad, free spirit. They "were willing of themselves;" that is, gave of their own accord as their hearts prompted them. (4) They first gave themselves to the Lord. We come now to the most important part of their giving; that which gave value and sacredness to the whole, and made it a real heart-offering, acceptable and pleasing unto the Lord. It is no use to give our gold or silver if we do not give ourselves. This latter term, as popularly used, has grown to have a false significance, as if it could be applied only to those who engage in direct personal work for the Master. But a merchant, a mechanic, a washerwoman, when they go to their store, or bench, or washtub, with "singleness"—the literal rendering of liberality in v. 2—of heart and purpose, glorifying all they do with the one motive of love to Christ, as truly give themselves as did these Macedonian Christians.

2. Where the Christian graces abound there will also be abounding liberality.—vs. 6–8. There may be liberality without the graces of holy living. There may be works without faith, but no sincere faith without works. Systematic, cheerful giving is one of the greatest helps possible to growth in grace. We love a cause in proportion as we deny ourselves for it. To sacrifice in order that we may give unto the Lord is the strongest proof that we love him, and he so considers it. That is the right kind of emulation which seeks to excel in good works; it is the kind which Paul, in this and kindred passages, urges on believers. A Christian should not feel disturbed if his worldly neighbor makes more show or gets ahead faster than he does, but he ought to feel rebuked when those poorer than himself are more forward than he to give and suffer for Christ's sake.

3. The example of our Saviour.—v. 9. Our Lord was rich, for he had the wealth of the whole universe at his disposal; yet he freely laid it all aside for our sakes and became poor. Had he been born into the world a Cæsar or Crœsus, it would still have been in a relative sense poverty, for compared to the glory he had voluntarily cast aside, the richest earthly surroundings would have been less than the light of a glow-worm compared to the sun. But he did more than this; he descended to the lowest depths of human poverty,—cradled in a manger and poorer all his life than even the foxes and birds of the air, which had their homes while he had none. How little at the most we can do for him who has done so much for us.

4. A willing mind the first requisite.—vs. 11, 12. We have seen that there can be no genuine giving, none which the Lord recognizes and accepts, unless we give ourselves, too. There are many who can give only their two mites, and a still greater number who withhold the little they might give because it is not more. They forget that it is a willing mind which must give their offering all its value, whether it be a million dollars or one cent. Suppose the mites were all brought in—brought cheerfully, and God's blessing invoked on each one as it was dropped into the contribution box—how speedily the world might be won for Christ. Let us pray (1) that God will enlarge our hearts and grant unto us the same grace as to those Macedonian Christians. (2) That we may be delivered from poverty of soul, which is a far greater affliction than poverty of purse. (3) That we may have the example of Christ always before us, and his Spirit within us.

LITERATURE.

TOUCHING INCIDENTS AND REMARKABLE ANSWERS TO PRAYER, as Related by John B. Gough, Bishop Bowman, Mrs. Mary G. Cramer, Dr. Jas. H. Potts, Matthew Hale Smith, John Wesley, T. DeWitt Talmage, Geo. Muller, Bishop Simpson, William Carvosso, John Knox, Martin Luther, D. L. Moody, A. B. Earle, Chas. G. Finney, S. A. Keene, Dr. S. I. Prime, Chas. H. Spurgeon, Mrs. Maggie Van Cott, B. Fay Mills, Edward Payson, Geo. Fox, Mark Guy Pearse, and many others. Compiled by S. B. Shaw. One volume, pp. 303. Published at Dutton, Mich,, by S. B. Shaw. Price, in cloth binding, $1.00.

These 134 brief narratives contain as many helpful sermons to those who believe in prayer as "the Christian's vital breath," and also to those who are doubtful whether "the great and terrible God" will deign to hear the supplications of his fallen and finite creatures. Fear him as we may, and ought, yet those who fear him and desire to serve him will find him a tender, loving God, who, for Christ's sake, will hear and answer prayer; and to this end has given us many great and gracious promises to induce us to believe in him as a bountiful giver to his children.

Even sinners may pray to him with the happiest effects, if they come to him in a humble, submissive spirit. One of the most touching incidents of this kind is that told of a little neglected child, perfectly ignorant of the first principles of Christianity. A kind clergyman instructed her to pray to God this simple prayer every day for a week: "O, Lord, show me myself." At the end of that time he found her a convicted sinner, distressed beyond measure at the depravity of her own heart. For another week, he advised her to offer another simple petition: "O, Lord, show me thyself," and at the end of that period she found herself a happy Christian child, thoroughly converted. As an evidence of this, she gave her life to missionary labor, in the service of her Saviour. Sinners should be kindly persuaded in this manner to forsake self and seek the Lord.

With the Christian, who has already won the ear of the Lord, there should be no difficulty in going to him in sincere, earnest prayer. The incidents in Bro. Shaw's book are guarantees of the acceptance of their petitions, if they are offered in the simple trust of a little child who knows no will but that of God. To those who live so near the Lord that they may at any moment put forth their hands and touch the hem of his garment, prayer is natural and easy, faith has passed into knowledge, and the soul is lost in devotion. They are Christ's, and in him all things are theirs.

The lessons of this volume are worth the wealth of the world; "for ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." (2 Cor. 8: 9.) "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye may ask what you will, and it shall be done unto you." (John 15: 7.) Mr. Shaw's book contains many receipts in full from those who have enjoyed such glorious bounty.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

Scribner's for November presents its usual quota of autumnal attractions of letter-press and pencil, and will be found a readable number. Its contents are as follows: Madame Roland at the Conciergerie, a full length portrait of this unfortunate woman, which, with other fine illustrations, accompanies an impressive article by Ida M. Tarbell. In Camp with the Katchins (cattle-raiding mountaineers on the borders of China and Burmah), illustrated, by Col. H. E. Colville. Indian Summer, by Archibald Lampman. The Proud Pyersents, by Octave Thanet. Love's Guerdon, by Elizabeth C. Cardoza. Glimpses of the French Illustators, illustrated—concluded, by F. N. Doubleday. The House of Commons, by Aug. St. Nicholas, having absorbed that other bright magazine for youth, Wide-awake, starts out on its twenty-first volume permanently enlarged to 96 pages, which are brimfull of interest to its large number of embryo men and women. Rudyard Kipling begins a series of tales of India, where he lived in childhood. Mark Twain revives an old favorite in a new illustrated serial—Tom Sawyer Abroad, by Huck Finn. Susan Coolidge sketches A Member of the Harnessing Class. Geo. W. Cable describes New Orleans. Clara Doty Bates finds curious children on the Plaisance at the World's Fair. Mary S. Roberts tells the story of Nicholas Ferry, the historic dwarf. Numerous minor tales, sketches and verses, with abundance of "pictures to match" and a general air of attractiveness, aid in making up an exquisite issue of this popular periodical. New York: The Century Co., Union Square: price, 25 cents.

The November number of Worthington's Magazine is replete with interest. Its principal papers, copiously illustrated, are as follows: A graphic description of the Ramoni (N. M.) Indian School, by John H. Whitson, and Random Notes on Hawaiian Life (continued), by Dr. C. T. Rodgers. Fiction and poetry are well represented in A Calm Flower, by Edith Brower; The Lover in Feathers, by Olive Thorne Miller; Married by Accident, by Margaret Johann; Genius, by Emilye A. Braddock; "'Lias," by Kate M. Robb; The Wind Among the Maple Boughs, by Jennie E. T. Dowe. The special and editorial departments cannot fail to please the various members of any intelligent household, with their many attractive topics. Published by A. D. Worthington & Co., Hartford, Conn. Price, 25 cents.

PAMPHLETS.

"The Study of the Bible," by Prof. G. G. Findlay, is the second number of "The Helpful Hour Series." The Expository Times says the article "is a wise word on the right way to the study of the Bible by one who has studied it, and loves it well;" and Prof. W. T. Davison says: "It is admirably suited as an elementary guide to the study of the Scriptures." We can recommend it to the thoughtful perusal of our readers. It is published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 2 Cooper Union, New York, and the price is 15 cents, postpaid.

Our agricultural friends will find Bulletin No. 19, from the Nevada Agricultural Experiment Station at Reno (University of Nevada), interesting. It treats, at large and in detail, of Sugar Beets, their culture, harvesting, pitting and manufacture into beet sugar, with numerous facts and figures relating to this important subject.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

BAPTIST.

—Ohio has 622 churches in thirty-two associations. There are 491 ordained ministers, of whom only 378 are in the pastoral relation. Last year there were 3,274 baptized, and the total membership is 53,217. Value of church property reaches $2,485,651. Salaries and church expenses are put down at $312,348, and $63,996 was contributed to missions, $2,643 to education—an aggregate of $461,735 for contributions of all kinds.

—In the recent meeting of the General Association of Illinois, the report of the committee on the state of religion "showed that the year has been one of trial among the churches in the State, and results are not in all respects as we might desire. Although, however, contributions for State missions have not been sufficient to meet all needs, there has been large blessing upon the labors of the missionaries. In the churches there has been manifest blessing, with many souls hopefully saved. The Sunday-school work has been greatly prospered, an interesting incident of the year being the erection of the model Sunday-school building at the Columbian Exposition, in the erection of which our churches and Sunday-schools have shared. The educational progress of the State has been unexampled. There is much to encourage renewed consecration and larger effort, which also the report urges upon the brethren as what is chiefly needed."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

—The Indiana statistics for 1893 report 20 Methodist Christian Endeavor societies, with a membership of 464 active and 188 associates; also 32 Sunday-schools, with a membership of 420.

—In Australia, Victoria leads the way in Christian Endeavor societies: Victoria, 310; South Australia, 204; New South Wales, unknown; New Zealand, 45; Tasmania, 17; Queensland, 16; West Australia, 3; total, 595.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. WM. M. BROOKS, Pres. Tabor College.—Our faculty is a unit in opposition to secret societies, not excepting those formed for literary culture.

PRES. L. H. HAMMOND, Lebanon Valley College.—My conviction is firm that the influence of Freemasonry is baneful in whole and in part; that, religiously, it is a stumbling-block; and that, socially and politically, the benefaction it offers to one is a robbery of others.

PRES. E. K. HILL, Washington University.—I have long regarded the secret conclaves as unnecessary to any good cause, and dangerous from their irresponsibility. Especially do I think that Freemasonry, from its nature, record and prevalence, is an enemy to the political purity and social morality of our country.

PRES. H. H. GEORGE, D. D., Geneva College.—No man can, at the same time, be a lover of Christ or a Christian, and a sworn member of a Christ-dishonoring and disowning fraternity, provided he know the true character of that fraternity. No man can be innocent in going into such a fraternity without knowing its true character.

PRESIDENT J. H. FAIRCHILD, Oberlin:—The tendency to organize in secret bodies, political, social, religious and literary, seems to indicate distrust of the ordinary institutions of society, and will surely generate the distrust from which it seems to spring. The very idea of a secret combination implies a barbarous age, or a state of social anarchy in which such arrangements are necessary for safety. There is no place for it in a Christian civilization.

REV. JOSIAH BRADLEY, Principal of Rock Spring Seminary, Illinois, 1829:—Masonry is a human, and cunningly formed system of deception. Is it not rightly named "Speculative Freemasonry?" Millions have been drawn within its veil, and led away captive by its false pretensions and exhibitions of morality, charity and brotherly love. And many may still rejoice for a season in their delusions, despise reproof, and perish without remedy.

PRES. L. N. STRATTON, D. D.—One other fact worth naming is, that the oaths and secret workings of Freemasonry are out and well-known to the world. They are published in the reports of several State legislatures, and in Wendell's Supreme Court Reports of the State of New York, Vol. XIII, pp. 9–26. Their oaths are no less murderous than those taken by the Mollie Maguires, for obedience to which latter twenty-one have been tried and hung in the State of Pennsylvania.

LEONARD WOODS, D.D., Professor in Andover, 1829:—Now I have never seen or heard of any evidence, of any kind or degree, in support of the pretended antiquity of Freemasonry; and I suppose the same is true of all others. What then can we do, consistently with reason and common sense, but to withhold our belief. As to probable evidence; it would be very proper to inquire, whether it can be reconciled to the acknowledged character of Solomon, and of the twelve apostles to suppose, that they belonged to a society, established on the principles and practicing the rites of Freemasonry. If these principles and rites are what the community at large understand them to be, and what Freemasons themselves understand them to be, an answer to this inquiry would be no very difficult thing.

PRES. TIMOTHY DWIGHT, D. D., in a Fast Day Sermon, Yale College.—These [the doctrines of Illuminism] were: that God is nothing; that government is a curse, and authority an usurpation; that civil society is the only apostasy of man; that the possession of property is robbery; that chastity and natural affection are mere prejudices, and that adultery, assassination, poisoning and other crimes of a similar nature are lawful and even virtuous. A large branch of the Masonic Societies in Germany and France had already adopted the same objects, as the great and controlling ones of all their personal and united labors. Here secrecy furnished the most advantageous opportunities for the formation of every design and the most advantageous opportunities for its successful execution.

JOSEPH COOK:—I do abhor the selfish, clannish spirit of secret societies.

WILLIAM OTTERBEIN, founder of the church of the United Brethren in Christ:—A Freemason cannot be a Christian.

BISHOP WARBURTON:—Each of the heathen gods, beside the worship paid to him in public, had a secret worship to which none were admitted but those who were prepared by previous ceremonies.

RICHARD S. STORRS, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn.—My judgment and feeling are both strongly opposed to the secret lodge system. I heartily agree with what Dr. Howard Crosby has so forcibly said about it.

CARDINAL MCCABE, Dublin:—Secret societies, which seem to possess a fatal charm for our people, have from time to time drawn thousands of misguided youths within the fatal circle from which there is no escape.

REV. LEBBEUS ARMSTRONG:—Among the various stratagems of Satan in opposition to God and holiness, and for the purpose of destroying the souls of men, the institution of speculative Freemasonry holds a pre-eminent rank.

HENRY G. LUDLOW, pastor Spring St. Presbyterian Church, New York, 1829:—I can hardly think that any candid and intelligent Master Mason can seriously assert that Masonry should be kept up. For my own part I have ever been disgusted with its nonsensical ceremonies, and ashamed of myself for submitting to them.

GEORGE F. PENTECOST, D, D., pastor of Tompkins Avenue Congregational church, Brooklyn, editor of "Words and Weapons."—I would do almost anything in my power to help on the work of rescuing all Christian men from the "grip" of Masonry and all other secret and unchristian societies. I believe that Masonry is an incalculable evil and essentially anti-Christ in its principles and influence.

H. L. HASTINGS.—Freemasonry is the one institution of this country that will not bear investigation. Schools are inspected; churches throw their doors open and invite the strictest scrutiny; political parties are examined, searched and riddled if anything like corruptness is seen or suspected in connection with them; all these institutions simply ask a fair field and no favor.

REV. J. E. ROY, D. D., Secretary American Missionary Association:—A man is not fit to be a juryman who has taken these Masonic oaths and holds to them. Such a man is not competent to be a constable or a justice of the peace. He has disqualified himself practically and really, for he has by these oaths perjured himself for the one side or the other, and so is unable to do justly in his official relation between man and man.

REV. JAMES H. BROOKES, D. D., editor of the "Truth," and pastor of Washington Avenue Presbyterian church, St Louis:—It would give me pleasure to aid you in your work of seeking to bring Christians out from entangling alliances with secret societies. It seems to me that the positive injunction of the Holy Ghost, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," applies particularly to those disciples of our Lord who have been led into such societies.

THE BISHOP OF BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND:—Freemasonry is built upon the basis of a natural religion having for its foundation the honor and worship of the Supreme Architect of the Universe, but excluding the divine Incarnation and the mysteries of human redemption. Whilst using the sacred Scriptures, as Freemasonry it ignores the divine doctrines of the Christian faith. Pretending to a special and progressive illumination, it resembles, and through several of its writers even claims descent from the secret societies of Pagan Egypt, Greece and Samothrace.

REV. HENRY JONES:—On what then does the whole superstructure of Freemasonry rest but a base fabrication of wicked men, who in some dark and apostate age of the world, have risen up, united into a secret society and darkly handed down their inventions to flatter us to believe that their institution is good as having originated among wise and good men; and being ignorant of the manner in which their false pretensions would be exposed, have told us that it was established on certain specified facts and events, which by looking at them carefully, and comparing them with our Bible, we find never had existence!

HOME AND HEALTH.

TRY THESE:

Washing mirrors with warm suds, dusting with whiting in a muslin bag, and polishing with chamois.

Wetting paint which has been spattered on a glass with water, and then rubbing with a silver dollar.

Removing tar by putting soft grease on the spot, rubbing it in thoroughly with the hands, and washing both grease and tar out with warm soda water.

Sweep a carpet with a broom wet with warm salt water.

Always sweeping the right way of the carpet.

Flour and cold water made into a paste, for removing grease spots.

Removing black grease stains from clothing with cold water and soap.—Exchange.

CANDY MAKING AT HOME.

The most difficult part of candy making is the boiling, and the best and surest method of cooking the sirup is over a gas stove, as the heat is quick and perpectly even and no necessity arises for moving the kettle to replenish the fire. A small gas burner, made to spread the flame, can be obtained at any large hardware store at a trifling expense, and a few feet of small rubber tubing will connect it with any burner in a house where gas is used for lighting. This, however, is one of the luxuries for cooking and can be dispensed with, but a quick, even fire must be maintained, whatever means be employed.

The materials needed are white crushed sugar, bakers' sweetened chocolate, cream of tartar, vanilla extract, a small bottle of fruit coloring, and a little glycerine; with these can be made all the plain cream candies, chocolate creams, baby creams, etc. For a still greater variety, supply a pound of assorted nuts, a few dates, prunes, a little grated cocoanut, and a pound or two of confectioners' xxx sugar. For candies containing brown sugar, get if possible the unrefined.—Good Housekeeping.

Hall's Hair Renewer cures dandruff and scalp affections; also all cases of baldness where the glands which feed the roots of the hair are not closed up.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.
BY MARIA WATERBURY.

Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: EARNEST CHRISTIAN: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wan ed one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun 'orgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: 'A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands, and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Sermons of Rev. John McNeill,
12mo. cloth, 416 pages, $1.50.

The fame of this Scottish Spurgeon, as he is very generally called, is becoming as wide-spread as the English tongue. The secret of his power over the masses, has been discussed on both sides of the Atlantic. If one may judge from these printed sermons the secret lies in a homely and pointed putting of the old truths of the Gospel in plain Anglo-saxon. There is evidence of study, but more the study of human nature, and particularly the human heart, than that of books, other than the Book of books—with this volume Mr. McNeill is evidently in love. With unquestioned faith he believes the writen word, and preaches with an earnestness born of conviction.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference M. E. Church—a seceding Master Mason. 10 cents each.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 DeGREES OF FREEMASONRY. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its own utterances; its doctrine and practice examined in the light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth 50cts; paper covers, 25cts.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and other secret societies, by Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran church. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms, and the duty to disfellowship Oddfellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias and Grangers, is clearly shown by their confessed character as found in their own publications. 10cts each.

United Sons of Industry IllusTRATED. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret tradesunion of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords etc. 15cts each.

Oaths and Penalties of FreemasonRY, as proved in court in the New Berlin trials. The New Berlin trials began in the attempt of Freemasons to prevent public initiations by seceding Masons. These trials were held at New Berlin, Chenango Co., N. Y., April 13 and 14, 1831, and General Augustus C. Welsh, sheriff of the county, and other adhering Freemasons swore to the truthful revelation of the oaths and penalties. 10 cents each.

Anti-masonic Sermons and AdDRESSES. Composed of "Masonry a Work of Darkness;" the Sermons of Messrs. Cross, William M'Nary, Dow and Sarver, the two addresses of President Blanchard, and the addresses of President H. H. George, Prof. J. G. Carson and Rev. M. S. Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00.

HEN OPINIONS OF THE EGG MARKET.

As all are aware, the price of eggs is pretty good for this time of year. The following imaginative conversation is supposed to have lately taken place on South Water street, Chicago, when a commission man there was asked the reason for this. He replied:

"Well, the cold weather ——"

"Tut, tut, tut," cackled a big, coarse, all-bone and no-meat Shanghai hen as she poked her head out from between the slats of a box near by, "the Parliament of Religions recently in session in Chicago may partially account for the shortage."

Then up spoke a Black Spanish hen, upbraiding the Shanghai in unsisterly or unhenlike words and figures as follows, to-wit: "You know nothing of the market. You are neither good eating nor do you lay. To gnaw your bones is to break teeth. You are a capper for a dentist's shop and you are too penurious to let loose of an egg. The cause of the bulled market is that the weather has been so dry that there's not enough moisture to build eggs."

"That's not right," piped up a big Plymouth Rock hen, one of those speckled waddlers, reminiscences of the fine flavored meat from the kindred of which loll about memories of epicures. "The trouble has been those maternal Buff and Dark and Light Cochins, old-time bears of the egg market, have been devoting their entire attention to the perpetuation of the species. The visible supply has been thereby decreased."

A Buff Cochin pullet which sat picking her teeth with her claw angrily retorted: "Yes, there's hens like you and the Black Spanish and White Leghorns and other such trash that associate with you have no maternal feelings and spend your lives bearing the egg market. Why, I was talking recently with a Leghorn upstart, and she told me in a swaggering way that she was turning out an egg a day. She said that during all of last winter she deposited a diurnal egg, and you remember how cold that winter was. Why, you could hear hens' teeth chattering all over the hennery, and that flirt was a laying two and a half dozen eggs a month. I don't believe it, so, there," and she pettishly shook herself and resumed her tooth picking.

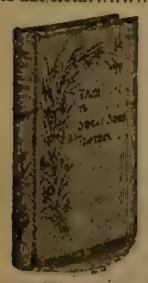
A Light Cochin clacked out: "The stringency in the money market pushed up the price of eggs."

"We need a closure rule in this coop," crowed a rooster. "It's bad enough to be deprived of liberty and hauled away to be slaughtered, without being encooped with a lot of garrulous hens that make one's last hours on earth miserable by their ante-mortem flights."

On turning to the commission man for further information the reporter found he had tired of the hen expressions and disappeared.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Talks to Sunday-School Teachers.

By Rev. J. G. Terrill. 12mo, 200 pages, bound in fine cloth.....75



This book is the result of twenty-five years of experience in Sunday-school and treats of: 1. The Sunday-school organization and management. 2. Methods of work. 3. Studies in human nature. 4. Rules of Interpretation as applied to the Bible. 5. Illustrative exercises for primary classes and children's meetings. In the style of presentation, subject matter and price of the book, the wants of the officers and teachers of the ordinary Sunday-school are kept in view.

S. S. Times:—A very comprehensive book. N. Y. Independent:—A sensible manual for the average Sunday-school teacher. Evan. Mess.:—We have been very favorably impressed with the book, because it is so intensely practical. The subject is systematically treated, and leaders of teacher's meetings can not do better than adopt it as a text-book and devote half an hour of each session to teaching the theory and practice of teaching as here systematized. Christian at Work:—Any school that will adopt this book generally and carry forward its work or doctrines here laid down will not be long in developing into a model school and reaping the harvest of a rich fruitage. Herald and Presbyter:—These Talks are well attested in their profitableness and excellence. Buffalo Advocate:—A plain, practical, common sense book on a very important subject. The author has had wide experience in this field of work. He knows thoroughly the ground over which he would lead others, and possesses the happy faculty of packing a great deal of valuable information as to matter and manner of teaching into this little hand-book. We commend it to the attention of all Sunday-school workers. Religious Telescope:—We are pleased with the plan and treatment of the subjects throughout, and are sure that the diligent Sunday-school teacher who longs for more thorough equipment, will find in this book a helper of great value. Illustrated Christian Weekly:—The author talks from observation and experience, and talks well.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers. Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polermical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatising on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

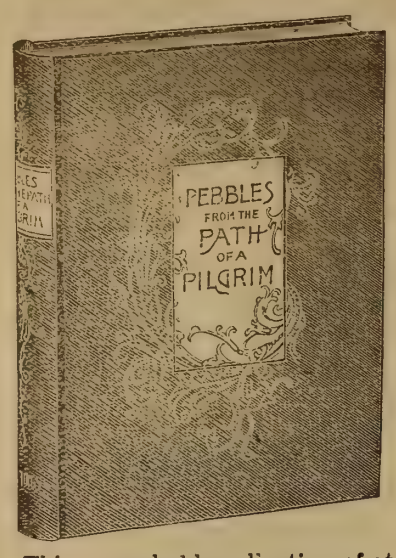
Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim.

—BY—

MRS. H. L. HASTINGS.



This remarkable collection of stories from the eventful life of a Green Mountain girl has been pronounced "more fascinating than any romance." A member of Congress writes: "'Pebbles' has been read by me with great interest. The introductory chapter has followed me into dreams. My copy is read to pieces by the family, and borrowed to death by the neighbors." An editor says: "Surely the faith that 'obtained promises, wrought righteousness, and stopped the mouth of lions,' must have been given in large measure to the writer of this truly remarkable book.... No family library should be without it." "'Pebbles,'" says the Christian Cynosure, "is such a book as Christian parents are always glad to put on their center-tables."

"Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim" is a large and beautiful book of over 300 pages, printed on heavy book paper, from clear open type, and is profusely illustrated. It is artistically bound in handsome cloth, with fancy panels, and specially attractive side and back cover designs. Price, $1.50.

ATTENTION, IOWA!

It is requested that all the pastors of churches in Iowa in sympathy with the State Association opposed to secret societies, will take up collections in their congregations in the interest of this work and send the same to the treasurer, Rev. L. Mendenhall, Fairfield, Iowa, or bring the money with them to the State meeting, to be held at Hopkinton, Delaware county, Iowa, Nov. 14, 15, 1893.

IOWA STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The Annual Convention of the Iowa Christian Association will be held in the Reformed Presbyterian church at Hopkinton, Delaware county, Iowa, November 14 and 15, 1893.

PROGRAM.

4:00—Adjournment.

Evening—7:00—Devotional exercises.

7:15—Address by Rev. W. P. McNary, D. D.

8:00—Address—"The Duty of the Hour respecting Secret Organizations"—President C. A. Blanchard.

HOW TO GET THERE.

A morning train runs directly to Hopkinton from Davenport, arriving at 8:43 A. M. Persons coming by way of Cedar Rapids can get this train if they go by way of Oxford Junction from Cedar Rapids. Two freight trains, one from each direction (north and south) reach Hopkinton shortly before noon, and there is a night train from the north at 8 o'clock. Twelve miles north of Hopkinton, at Delaware, is the junction of the Illinois Central with our road—the C., M. & St. P.; eighteen miles north, at Oneida, is the junction of the C., M. & St. P. with the Chicago Great Western. At Oxford Junction Hopkinton branch connects with the main line of the C., M. & St. P., between Chicago and Council Bluffs.

NEW YORK STATE ANTI-SECRECY CONVENTION.

The annual State Convention of the New York Christian Association, opposed to secret societies, will be held (D. V.) in Utica, N. Y. (Tuesday and Wednesday), November 14 and 15, in the Welsh Methodist Episcopal church on Hopper street (Coke Memoral church). The opening session will begin on Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Able speakers will discuss the folly, expense and danger of the sceret orders and show why all good citizens should avoid and withstand them. Among them are expected:

Rev. S. R. Wallace, Syracuse; Rev. W. H. Clark, Binghamton; Rev. F. M. Foster, New York; Rev. Stephen Merritt, New York; Rev. B. H. Roberts, editor Earnest Christian, Rochester; Mrs. D. P. Rathbun, Syracuse; Mrs. V. A. Stone, Steamburgh; Rev. Nathan Wardner, Rome; Rev. J. P. S. Stoddard and Henry L. Kellogg.

All Christian people and the public generally are invited to be present. Where this is impossible, send a contribution to aid the cause, either to the State Treasurer, Lucius Woodruff, at Binghamton, N. Y., or to Henry L. Kellogg, 4 Chatham street, Utica.

(Rev.) S. R. WALLACE, Pres.,
203 W. Colvin street, Syracuse, N. Y.

AN EXPLANATION.

In the Cynosure of Nov. 2 is an announcement of a State Convention of anti-secretists to be held in Utica, Nov. 14,15, in the Welsh M. E. church, etc. In the same issue is a letter from H. L. Kellogg, in which he says: "A quarterly conference is to be held, I understand, opening on the 16th. This will be a good arrangement for the brethren in the district. They can attend both meetings."

Our general quarterly meeting commences Nov. 23, in the Free Methodist church, and the quarterly conference will be held there on Saturday, the 25th. I do not wish the people to get the dates or places confounded. O. M. OWEN.

Herkimer, New York, Nov. 4, 1893.

In the Odd-fellows' lodges a member must suffer from a week's illness before he is entitled to "benefits." But that week's lodge dues must be paid promptly, or he will be neglected longer.

Prendergast, the assassin of Mayor Harrison, is on trial for the murder this week. His conviction is desirable; and even if the hollow plea of "insanity" should save him from the gallows, the temper of the common people, friends of his victim, threatens to place his worthless life in jeopardy.

President Cleveland has issued the customary official proclamation for a day of thanksgiving and praise on Thursday, the 30th instant. As usual, God only is mentioned as our benefactor, and the simple phrase "year of our Lord" is the only reference to our obligations as a people to the Lord Jesus Christ, our Saviour, Priest and King. But Christians will not forget him and his wondrous works for the children of men. They can afford to be true to the "whole family in heaven" on this occasion.

The funeral of Mayor Harrison, last week, was marked by ostentatious displays of mourning, a military and civic escort, formed of many organizations, and a procession of, it is estimated, 50,000 persons. On the Sunday following the assassination, the leading preachers in the city made it a theme for consideration. Joseph Cook, who occupied the pulpit at the First Congregational church, referred to it as follows:

Certainly no other nation has been so humiliated as our own by assassinations in high places within thirty-five years. Can we sow wind and not reap the whirlwind? Can a governor of a great commonwealth commute anarchists and not make assassination cheap? That is the question, not an assertion, I beg you to notice. I am slandering nobody. It is the business of the pulpit and of every honest man to think for himself about all these matters, and for one the question that will not down in my heart is, how far is the easy excuse for lawlessness among respectable American citizens responsible for this terrific outburst of crime?"

Other clergymen also made the subject a vehicle for timely cautions.

THE CREED AND CANON OF FREEMASONRY;

OR LANDMARKS OF THE ORDER.

[A paper read before the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Chicago, October 5, 1893, by Rev. J. P. Stoddard.]

This is not purely a Masonic term, but when used by Masonic authors it has special reference to the fundamental tenets of the order.

The Landmarks are to Freemasonry what the Ten Commandments were to the Jewish system, an epitome of doctrine, faith and works. They constitute a standard by which to try all mooted questions in legislation, administration and religion. In every controversy an appeal to the Landmarks is final; and when they speak, strife among the mystic brethren must cease.

Practically they are the Bible of the craft, giving the oracular utterances of the Masonic god. This is demonstrated by the fact that in controverted cases constant reference is made to these oracles, and there is no authoritative treatise on the ethics, homiletics, polity or religious creed of Masonry extant which does not appeal to the Landmarks as the sine-qua non of the order.

Permit me to emphasize this fact, for it is the key to the whole situation, viz: The so-called ancient Landmarks are the Bible of Freemasonry in the practical control of the order. Whoever, or whatever may be its god, these are his unalterable utterances. This is not directly asserted by Masonic writers, but the proof is even stronger, if possible, than direct assertion.

Take a question in point. When a question arises among Christians, an appeal is taken from church creeds and courts to the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, because this is the Christian's Bible. Under similar circumstances the Mohammedan has recourse to the Koran, because it is his Bible, but the Mason's appeal is neither to the Christians' or the Mohammedans' standard as ultimate authority, but to his own Bible, the Landmarks of his order; from which the inference is direct and conclusive that what the Divine Word is to Christianity and the Koran is to Mohammedism, the Landmarks are to Freemasonry.

Conceding this claim, and admitting the supremacy of the Landmarks in the lodge system over the Bible of the Christian, the Koran of the Mohammedan and every other code, sacred or secular, religious or political, let us examine with care this great chart which guides the neophite in his perilous journey to the east, and governs the grand lodges in their deliberations and official actions.

What are the Landmarks of Masonry?

On page 270 of his Lexicon of Freemasonry, Albert G. Mackey says: "Those peculiar marks of distinction by which we are separated from the profane world, and by which we are enabled to designate our inheritance as sons of light, are called the Landmarks of the order."

This same distinguished Masonic author, in closing a brief discussion of this subject, says (page 17) of Masonic Jurisprudence." The Landmarks of Masonry, so far as I have been able to compute them after the most careful study, are twenty-five in number," which he gives entire, with comments, explanations and footnotes.

Thus we are supplied with an approved copy of this most important document.

The last in order of arrangement, Mr. Mackey esteems the first in importance of these precepts, and with this we will begin. He says: "The last and crowning Landmark is that these Landmarks can never be changed. Nothing can be subtracted from them—nothing can be added to them—not the slightest modification can be made in them." Lest some one should doubt, he says (page 16 Juris.): "What they were centuries ago, they still remain and must so continue in force until Masonry itself shall cease to exist."

Language is incapable of expressing immutability in more absolute and unqualified terms. Now immutability is a sequence of perfection, and hence we are forced to the conclusion that Masonry claims for its canonical code absolute perfection in every particular. Whatever is defective in ethics or theology may be improved. Whatever is incomplete may be added to, subtracted from, or modified; and since the Landmarks of Masonry can never be changed, they must be absolutely and unqualifiedly without fault or blemish.

The unchangeableness of God himself is a sequence of his absolute perfection, and immutability is possible only on the pre-existence of perfect holiness.

The adoption of this code by a society or an individual results in a practical rejection of all others. As there can be but one God supreme and over all, so there can be but one ultimate, absolute, unchangeable rule of right which covers the whole plane of human action and obligation; from which it follows that Masonry rejects the Christian's Bible by degrading it below its own unerring standard of faith and practice.

It is no palliation to say that there is no conflict between the Landmarks of Masonry and the law of God, for such a position is an utter impossibility. It is claiming as an accomplished fact what never has existed, and what in the nature of things can never exist.

Remember that both the Landmarks and the Bible claim to be supreme in authority. Both cover the whole field of human action and obligation by virtue of their absolute perfection. Both are unchangeable, and yet each exists, and the very fact of existence establishes the dissimilarity of the two. The divine law covers the whole field. The Masonic law, as a sequence of its perfection, must do the same thing. There is no room outsid the one for the other to act, and hence it is impossible in the nature of things for the two to exist without a difference; and if a difference, then there must be a conflict; and if a conflict, one or the other must be imperfect and subject to change, which we have seen is not true of the Landmarks; and hence the man who swears obedience to Masonry adopts a code of laws which must antagonize the law of God; else their very existence would be an impossibility.

The Scriptures include and determine the character of every action; and if we accept the claim of the Masonic code to perfection their distinction can be maintained only by their antagonism; otherwise they would be absolutely and in every respect one and the same.

A second result is that since Masonic Landmarks furnish a perfect and unchangeable standard, covering the entire field, all others must be measured by this ultrimatum from which there is no appeal. Everything in the Bible, the Koran, the church creed, or any civil code, or constitution, not in harmony with this higher law, must be eliminated, where Masonry has jurisdiction.

In perfect accord with this sentiment Masonry mutilates the Scriptures used in its initiatory ceremonies, by omitting Christ's name, and reveals its attitude toward civil governments, when defining the covenant which makes the Mason. Robert Morris says: "No law of the land can affect it, and no anathema of the church can weaken it. It is irrevocable."

The late Ecumenical Council, declaring the Pope infallible in his official utterance, claims no more for the papacy than Freemasonry unblushingly asserts of its Landmarks. Both are infallible, and alike supreme.

Let us now examine some of the tenets of this unchangeable digest of Masonic infallibility to learn what it is, and what it requires of its religious devotees.

IT IS A CONFESSION OF FAITH.

The nineteenth and twentieth Landmarks contain an epitome of the religious creed of the order, which consists in a belief in God and a resurrection to a future life. These are the only essential articles in the Masonic confession of faith, and the first of these only is religiously insisted upon. Whatever opinions a man may entertain about the resurrection or concerning a future state of rewards and punishments, he must profess faith in the existence of a God before crossing that threshold which separates the profane world from the sanctum sanctorum of the brotherhood.

In this nineteenth Landmark it is written: "A belief in the existence of God, as the Grand Architect of the universe, is one of the most important Landmarks of the order." Beyond question, then, this Masonic syllabus is a profession of religious faith, and the one all-important tenet is belief in the existence of a God.

Nowhere in the unchangeable Landmarks is it said that men are accountable to this Grand Architect, or that they have any further connection with him than that of being superintended by some mysterious architectural power. He is not even recognized as a sentient being, possessed of intelligence or invested with a single moral attribute. For aught we may learn from these infallible utterances, he may be a simple mechanical force, like gravitation, arranging matter and binding the universe together by a power simply mechanical.

Do you ask who or what is this object of adoration which the neophite is required to acknowledge before entering the lodge and worship when once within its tyled precincts? The Landmarks answer, "The existence of the Grand Architect of the universe." Nothing more.

Note carefully the expression, It is not God, but existence, that the man must believe and consequently worship. A personal god is not made the object of the man's faith. It is simply and solely existence, and that in a restricted sense. No account is taken of the moral character of this god, nor of his attributes beyond his skill or architectural ability. The man is not required to believe in the self-existence of his god or in his eternity or that he created one particle of matter, only that he somehow is, and that he, she or it constructed the universe out of material that he, she or it may or may not have originated. The most that can be made out of this unchangeable Landmark is that the Masonic god is an ideal impersonation of existence, exerting itself in combining matter in that huge mass called the universe.

Taking the bare facts, stripped of grandiloquent, sonorous empty phrases, and you have for your Masonic god, existence, which in point of fact is no god at all. The late Dr. Thomas, Professor in Lane Theological Seminary, and beloved pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Dayton, O., struck this image of the beast between the eyes when, in a discussion before the Piqua presbytery, he exclaimed: "Masonry—Freemasonry—what is it?" Replying, he shouted at the top of his voice, "It is the godless ape of the bride of Christ."

Freemasonry, while professing deism, is practically atheism. It denies Christ and heartlessly ejects him from his own Word. It is Satan's device to shut the only door through which a sinful soul and a lost race may return to the living and true,—the personal and eternal God and Father of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Yes. It tramples the Infinite Jehovah, and the Word that was made flesh and dwelt among us, and the ever-blessed Spirit, beneath its feet, while it leads its votaries to pay their devotions at an idolatrous empty shrine, in the secret chambers of its imagery, "superintended" by the existence of a mechanical force, which is in reality no good at all; from which it follows that acts of devotion purely Masonic are like the Gentile sacrifices of which Paul speaks in the tenth chapter of 1 Corinthians, that were offered to devils and not to God. It is in the atheistic creed and demon-worship of Masonry that we find its real power. But some one says the lodge quotes Scripture, and so did Satan when he proposed to go into partnership with Jesus Christ and put into a joint-stock company the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them as his share. But the Masons pray. So did Dives (or the rich man) in hell, but his request was not granted. The heathen pray. But Masons have the Bible in their lodges. So do Mormons in their temple, only adding the writings of Joseph Smith as Masons add their traditions and legends. But there are good men and ministers in Masonry? Grant it. But will you stake your reputation on the proposition that ordination is conclusive evidence of entire sanctification? Dare we deny that there may be wolves in sheep's clothing, who are worldly, sensual, even devilish? Read Ezekiel's lodge exposition in the eighth chapter of his prophecy, where the seventy elders in Israel were worshiping the sun, with their backs toward the temple. Remember there was a Judas among the twelve. Surely you cannot have forgotten who it was that persuaded the people that they should ask for Barabbas, and when confronted by the last alternative, cried "Crucify him, crucify him; his blood be upon us and upon our children." I believe, and not without evidence, that the Christian ministry is the purest, most intelligent and trustworthy class on earth to-day, and that the church which Christ has purchased and purified with his own precious blood is the salt of the earth and the light of the world; and God forbid that I should bring accusations against my brethren; but I may not forget that it is written, "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man and maketh flesh his arm." I cannot forget there were once, and that there may now be, sepulchres which outwardly appear beautiful, but within are full of dead men's bones and all manner of uncleanness. I cannot forget that the rival of Christ's bride is a proud, abandoned woman, who courts the darkness and abhors the light. I cannot forget the words of Him who spake as never man spake, "Every one that doeth doeth evil hateth the light, and he that doeth truth cometh to the light.

Let us have no fellowship with the "unfruitful works of darkness;" but let us "walk in the light as he is in the light," that we may inherit the promise that "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

THE GREAT NATIONAL DANGER.

[A paper by Rev. Henry L. Kellogg, of Wheaton, Ill., read at the World's Congress of Christians opposed to Secret Societies, Oct. 5, 1893.]

"What greater calamity," writes Emerson in his essay on Duty, "can befall a nation than the loss of religion." The secret societies of America are bringing this danger on us: and this paper will attempt to show how our country, and every other, may be certainly paganized by their means.

No careful student of American history can have failed to note the reverential acknowledgment by our fathers of God as the source of authority and giver of prosperity. "In the name of God, Amen," from the Mayflower platform, echoes in all the great state documents that succeeded, notably in the Farewell Address of Washington and the Act of 1787, in which Congress, before the Constitution was adopted, accepted the cession of the "Northwest Territory" from Connecticut and Virginia. Religion and morality, say these eminent authorities, are fundamental to good government and must be purely transmitted. The speeches of Sumner and the Adamses, the "Higher Law" proclamation of Seward, and the argument of Webster, "expounder of the Constitution," in the Dartmouth will case, that "Christianity, general, tolerant Christianity, is the law of our land,"—these and many others, to our day, pass on the great and fundamental doctrine. Victoria, dearest, if not greatest, of England's rulers, said the same when she answered the question of the foreign prince as to the source of England's prosperity. "This," said the pious queen, handing him a copy of the Bible, "this is the source of England's greatness." Let us gratefully accept this judgment.

Whatever, then, deteriorates or destroys true religion or morality must be of "fatal tendency," as Washington truly says; and men or devils have invented no surer means to this end than the setting up of false altars and the proclamation of false doctrines in religion.

The effect of Manasseh's altars in Jerusalem was no more certain than the result of false doctrine in France, which, derived from Locke, Cousin argues began that most direful and bloody epoch of modern times, the Revolution of '93. There was but one loop-hole in the Mormon creed, that of the insufficient revelation of the Bible, but it was big enough for the devil to drive through with his coach and six, of lust and murder, bigotry and oppression, superstition and treason. Mormondon, indeed, left to itself, would fall to pieces by its own weight of corruption. We have seen the experiments of Owen and Fourier, of the Oneida community and New Ulm, and believe their failures emphasize the principle that no community can permanently prosper where Christianity is inexcusably rejected. The evangelist Mills powerfully uses the case of New Ulm to prove this law. "There was a town in Minnesota," he says, "where the people agreed there should be no mention of God. They hung Jesus Christ in effigy. I went through there once, and a man would tremble at the thought of staying there over night. The Indians came down upon them. The fire burned them out. They experienced a cyclone. But there was something worse—the demoralization of their children. Their sons grew up to be violent men, and their daughters became impure women." Not until the Sabbath-school and Christian church became established there, did property become safe or woman respected.

But, as Dr. Henson has so pithily put the case in his published letter: "It is as wicked to ignore Christ in a lodge as it is in a church"—or a community. And this brings us to consider the paganizing tendencies of the lodge system and the fatal results that must follow to religion and the state.

How are these tendencies paganizing?

1. Because the secret societies of America teach false gods. This was the accusation that put Socrates to death. Let it not be made lightly. Christ condemns most severely those who teach men falsehood in religion. I do not make any apology that the argument is familiar. It is a fact that needs to be trumpeted, repeated, inculcated,—that is, put in with the heel, stamped in, —that the secret societies teach false gods.

They do teach belief in a god. Their constitutions, creeds, monitors, ritualists, histories, encyclopedias, initiations, all require this,—from Jesuitism, Mollie Maguireism and Masonry, to the Good Templars and the American Protective Association. If there be any exception, it but proves the rule. But it is a god who is worshiped by all sorts of devotees. Masonry, speaking by its historian Hyneman, says: "The God named in connection with religion, in effusions of orators and addresses, is the God of Theology, a contracted being, and not the God of Masonry." —History of Freemasonry in England, page 8.

So the Grand Lodge of Illinois three or four years ago, in the Vienna case, where the Grand Master was voted down and infidelity endorsed—that is, Christ was voted out. So the action of the Grand Lecturers in Baltimore in 1843 in explaining the significance of the symbol of the Blazing Star. So the decision of the Grand Sire of the Odd-fellows and action of the Supreme Grand Lodge that the name of Christ cannot properly be used in lodge rooms.

But is not the name of Christ used in Knight Templarism and some other of the Masonic degrees? Yes; of such a Christ as we should have, had our blessed Saviour yielded to the devil on that high mountain and fallen down and worshiped him.

There is no doctrine of the Word more clear than that there is no true God out of Christ. Says Scott in his comment on 1 John 2: 23: "The supreme being, the supposed deity, which ancient and modern deniers of the personal and mediatorial honor of the Son have professed to worship, is in fact the creature of their own imagination, and not the wise, just, holy, merciful and faithful God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." Says Albert Barnes on John 5: 23: "Those who do not render proper homage to Jesus Christ do not worship the true God. There can be no such God as the infidel professes to believe in." Christ being set aside by law or custom, the lodge teaches false gods.

2. It sets up a false worship. This is a corollary perhaps of the first proposition.

The worship of Masonry, we are taught again and again by its authors, is that in which "all men can agree." But there is no such religion or worship. It is a fiction like their deity. The Word teaches that there will be no such thing until the end, when to Christ every knee must bow. The worship of the secret orders is such that all sorts of men are supposed to join in it, whatever their creed or their practice, so long as they are members. Such a mongrel worship is worse than that of the Samaritans (2 Kings 17) which Christ condemned in his talk with the woman at Jacob's well: "Ye worship ye know not what." That worship and all like it is a worship of devils (2 Cor. 10), and demonizes the worshiper: that is, makes him like the object worshiped. Masonry, Odd-fellowship, the Knights of Pythias, etc., trace their likeness to the old mysteries. Albert Pike, from his place at the head of the Masonic system, says it is identical with those abominable mysteries which Paul condemns in his letter to the Ephesians. (See Morals and Dogma by Pike, page 624.)

The further effect of this system in its destructive influence may be noted in its multiplicity of oaths and teaching of false morals. Washington solemnly warned us against the time when a sense of morality should be cast out of the oaths which are the protection of justice and the bond of every public officer. The barbarous penalties of two centuries ago are transmitted and copied, until the threats of death become a mockery and a jibe; and moral principles enforced by such oaths become as rotten as their foundation. Why do the saloon and brothel hail every conclave of our larger secret orders? They keenly know that there is no obligation in these lodges to interfere with their trade. The Knight Templar conclave last in Chicago strewed the Lake Front with proofs of its debauchery and even raised the price of liquor by making it scarce. Do the morals taught by Christ and his church give any such encouragement to vice? But these practices are shielded by the religion taught by the lodge system. Truly says Shakespeare in the "Merchant of Venice,"

> "In religion,
> What damned error, but some sober brow
> Will bless it, and approve it with a text!"

To introduce such morals, such worship and such a creed among our churches and schools and open Bibles, would be impossible if it were done openly. The cover of mystery is needed to deceive, and it does its work fatally. A large body of men from Chicago attended the Mohammedan ceremonies at the dedication of the Mosque at the World's Fair and joined them as far as they were able. They belonged to the Mystic Shrine, whose religious ceremonies and principles our missionaries tell us are Mohammedan: and they ought to know. An English proselyte to the Moslem faith, we are told, is making an effort to introduce it in this country. Do we fear the result? Do we believe he will convert any of our communities to that effete system? Will our young men follow his instructions given openly? Nothing will come of it. But thousands of our young men are practically Moslemized by the Mystic Shrine lodge, and our churches are as blind to the fact as Samson

> "Eyeless, in Gaza,
> At a mill with slaves."

This is the trouble with our young men. They are being subtilely paganized under the very shadow of our churches. Says the St. Louis Republican quoted by a church paper:

> "Out of 7,000,000 young men in America, 'tis said that 5,000,000 never go to church. On the other hand statistics show that 67 out of every 100 criminals are young men; and young men are the chief patrons of the saloon, the gambling den and houses of ill-fame, etc. Despite the multiplied agencies at work among men, like the Y. M. C. A., Christian Endeavor, et id genus omne, the neediest heathenism in the world is found among the young men of America."

Yet in the face of such facts we are as heedless as Ruskin says we are of the fate of Tyre. "Since the first dominion of men was asserted over the ocean, three thrones, of mark beyond all others, have been set upon its sands: the thrones of Tyre, Venice and England.....The exaltation, the sin and the punishment of Tyre have been recorded for us in perhaps the most touching words ever uttered by the prophets of Israel against the cities of the stranger. But we read them as a lovely song and close our eyes to the sternness of their warning."

He that prophesies against the towers of the Lodge is even to-day scorned and derided. "The prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad." Hosea 9: 7. "Is there no hope?" said the people to Jeremiah. Is the case so bad as you say? We don't believe it. No! we have loved strangers and their gods. Their altars are set up even in our temple: and after them will we go. For this iniquity the Lord God threatened in vain that he would visit on that sinful people such punishment as would make the ears of men tingle to hear of it. He would wipe Jerusalem as a man wipes a dish. The word came true. God is the same, hating above all iniquities that of false worship. Against no other are we taught that he is jealous. Shall not his church also begin to be jealous for his name and separate itself from so great an evil, teaching men so? Else will blood be found on her skirts.

THE WORK OF THE A. P. A.

Captain Wm. R. Myers, a prominent Democrat from Indiana, was interviewed, while here the other day, by a representative of the Chicago Herald. The subject was the political aspect in Indiana. Among other things, Mr. Myers said:

"The only uncertain elements in politics in Indiana, the one feature that may cause considerable uneasiness to Democrats in the next campaign, is the American Protective Association, or the A. P. A., as we call it for short. As is well known, the A. P. A. is an organization opposed to foreign-born voters, and sworn by secret ties to defeat them when candidates for public office. It is said three-fourths of the members are Republicans, but still a few Democrats belong to the organization. The A. P. A. has considerable strength in Indianapolis and in several sections oft he State, and its influence will certainly be felt in the next campaign. As Indiana is a battle ground where close political fights take place, it needs only a few Democrats to go astray and join the A. P. A. in order to cut the plurality of the Democracy to a dangerous minimum.

"And it wouldn't surprise me to see that the A. P. A. will be quite a factor in this country in the next national campaign," concluded Mr. Myers. "The organization also fights Catholics, and is drawing support away from Governor McKinley now, because he refused to grant the requests of the A. P. A. to not appoint Catholics to office. The A. P. A. is quite a factor in Colorado, Michigan, Nebraska and Illinois. And it may be heard from in the contests in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts this year. The A. P. A. has formerly paid more attention to municipal and local campaigns, and in this respect it had remarkable success this spring in Michigan and Illinois, in towns that were formerly carried by Democrats. Now, if the A. P. A. enters national politics, which seems altogether likely, it will prove to be an uncertain quantity and one to injure Democracy. The spread of this know-nothing spirit is, no doubt, due largely to the influx of paupers and scallawags from every foreign country, who could flock here by the wholesale under unrestricted immigration laws for years. This country has been the dumping ground for anarchists, communists and wild-eyed foreigners with all sorts of wild ideas, who come here and turn liberty into gross license. The reaction against the system of immigration has driven many native-born men to the other extreme, and they have adopted Know-Nothing doctrines. And they forget that we still have many desirable classes of foreigners coming here."

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Modern witchcraft.—Religious sentimentality.—Military drill in our public schools.—Baseball and co-education. Rabbi Schindler.—The Apostle Eliot.—The Iron Hall.

"There is nothing new under the sun," said King Solomon; and if sometimes we feel inclined to doubt his word, we generally come up, with a suddenness that nearly takes away our breath, against some old truth clad in modern garb, but older than even the royal sage himself. Christian Science, for instance, our fathers knew not of; and yet what is the difference between teaching that some persons are capable of exerting such a malign influence on the physical frame of another by simply concentrating the whole force of their evil thought and will on the unfortunate victim of their hate so as to cause bodily illness, and witchcraft pure and simple? I was at a church-party recently where this subject came under discussion. "If it be really so," said one of the ladies, "all our fathers were wrong about was the hanging," and it is difficult not to accept this conclusion. The "crank" mania that is now sweeping over the country, and which so suddenly shrouded in funeral gloom the last day of your great World's Fair, may have something to do with this newly-discovered realm of hypnotism. The assassin's exclamation, "I had to do it," has been the feeling probably of all other assassins, from Ravillac to Booth and Guiteau. Having surrendered themselves to evil, a dark, mysterious power seems to take entire possession of such, impelling them on till the fatal deed is wrought. Satan and his angels are the great hypnotizers of this world, as the Bible plainly teaches in the case of Judas. But how far he can delegate this power to members of the human race is a subject on which the Scriptures are silent. That we are born into a universe so full, at every step, of terrible and unknown possibilities ought surely to be enough to make every reasonable being heed the warning to "watch and pray."

Mammon's latest appeal to religious sentiment comes from Palestine, where there is a firm actually engaged in supplying water from the river Jordan to churches, putting it up in sealed bottles which are sold by the case, a consular certificate being affixed to each one to prove its genuineness. I hope the New England churches are few and far between that would purchase this new kind of "holy water." The more of mere sentimentality about our religion, the less of genuineness, and the nearer it sinks to the level of mere superstitution.

Instruction of high-school pupils in military tactics, under the auspices of our national government, is one of the things that may be looked for in the nigh future. At least, so says the Boston Herald, from what seems to be authentic information. There is no good reason why military instruction should be given in our public schools, and every reason against it. Our best teachers of physical culture do not favor the military drill, as it brings into play but one set of muscles, and gives stiffness and rigidity rather than a graceful command of all parts of the body. Aside from the fact that it must take time and energy that ought to be spent on legitimate studies, the feelings of those parents who are opposed to the training of their sons in the tactics of war should be respected. Thinking minds on both sides of the Atlantic are united in denouncing war as a mischievous, costly and idiotic way of settling national differences, while leading novelists have written volumes showing up its horrors. When a reform gets into fiction it is pretty good evidence of the ripeness of the popular mind to receive it. One of the reasons given for this step on the part of government is that "it gives the boys a proper sense of subordination and command." But it will train them, as Rev. H. H. Hinman has ably pointed out, in that habit of unreasoning, machine-like obedience which makes good soldiers and good lodgemen, but not intelligent citizens of a free republic, whose glory is that they think for themselves in matters of duty and conscience.

The craze for foot-ball has led to a curious result in a Wesleyan University, one of New England's few collegiate institutions that practice co-education. The boys dislike the idea of feminine class-mates who cannot play football, and, by a system of ingenious boycotting, are trying to drive them out;—which does not look as if this renowned college game was much of an inspirer to gentlemanliness, and inclines one to think that after all, in spite of the gibes of the newspaper press, which would be hard put to it for news in summer if they could not fill up with details of the last match between Harvard and Yale, that the Princeton faculty were right in their opinion "that football is beneath the dignity of a divinity student." Perhaps, as some one suggests, there is a modicum of jealousy underlying their unchivalrous treatment of these young women, and that it is not so much the inability of the latter to play baseball that they cannot forgive, as their superior standing in the class-room. If so, it only makes the matter worse.

The resolution of Rabbi Solomon Schindler to retire from the pulpit—or, rather, the reason he gives for doing so—is worth considering, in the light of the fact that he is not only the most noted Jewish preacher in the country, but liberal in his views to such an extent that one hardly knows where to place him as to creed, or whether he has any—even a self-formulated one. He told a reporter that "it was the indifference of his congregation in all religious matters" which drove him to take this step. Such indifference will always follow preaching that presents no definite ground for faith to stand on. I was struck by what a Christian worker of many years' standing said to me the other day:—that she had known work among fallen women to be sometimes undertaken under Unitarian auspices, but never successfully. Yet the failure could not be laid to the lack of funds, the patrons being generally wealthy; nor to lack of real desire on the part of of the workers for the uplifting of these unfortunates. The reason was because the great motive power, the Christ-love, was wanting, and the mere love of humanity was less than a spider's web to take the place of that golden cord. The retirement of Rabbi Schindler for the cause assigned is also significant of the change going on among a large part of our Jewish population, who have lost their faith in a future Messiah, yet are not willing to accept Christianity, and so are drifting anchorless and rudderless on the sea of rationalism or open infidelity.

The record of the baptism of the Apostle Eliot has just been discovered in the parish church of Widford, England; and in this ancient structure, dating back to the days of the Normans, where Bishop Whately was baptized, and Charles Lamb frequently worshiped, it is proposed by his descendants to erect a stained glass window to his memory. The records of this apostle's life are so meagre that this is an interesting discovery; yet to me the great oak, but two miles from my own home, under which he gathered his beloved redmen, and preached to them the Gospel for the first time, is a grander memorial than any which can be erected by human hands. Its rustling leaves seem to have the gift of tongues, and carry one back on a tide of dreams to those early days, gone forever, with those sons of the forest to whom he preached. But on the background of our Puritan history no other figure stands forth so vividly as that of the great-hearted, simple-minded man, who, I am often glad to think, did not know of "the century of dishonor" which was to be such a blot on our future history. Even then he had to contend with the curse of the white man's "firewater," and found it one of the greatest impediments in the way of converting the natives. Who can read the last letter of the young missionary Thornton, murdered by a drunken native, with its touching appeal for justice and protection from the government, and not feel that Uncle Sam could much better employ the public funds in banishing this great curse of civilization, than in teaching school-boys the art of war.

The dupes of the Iron Hall may receive from six to twelve per cent of their money, if it is not lost in litigation. This is cold comfort. The immense sum of $5,000,000 remains to be accounted for. Where has it gone to? And has the community learned this severe lesson so thoroughly as to make such wholesale swindling impossible in the future?

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1, 1893.

This week will be a memorable one to all who have taken part in the legislative struggle over silver, which has in some respects been the most extraordinary in the history of Congress. It has arrayed friend against friend to a more marked degree than your correspondent, during many years spent at the capital, has ever known any legislative measure to do. It has at times caused Senators who have reputations for dignity and courtesy to use language towards their colleagues which they must have bitterly regretted in calmer moments, but it will at last be ended when the House of Representatives passes the Voorhees bill for the unconditional repeal of that clause of the silver law which directs the monthly purchase of silver bullion by the Secretary of the Treasury, which it will do at once. It now behooves all good citizens, whatever their personal opinions may have been while the legislation is pending, to acquiesce in the result and to add their help towards bringing about the return of that prosperity which President Cleveland and those who favored the bill now about to become a law are so positive in believing will follow the cessation of the purchase of silver bullion by the government; and I take pleasure in chronicling the wishes of several of the Senators who were foremost in opposing the measure "that it may be followed by all of the good results predicted by its friends. The country is to be congratulated that a measure upon which there was such a wide divergence of honest opinion was not adopted by a partisan vote. Few votes have been taken in Congress in which conscience was so largely the deciding factor as it was in this case.

There are reasons for the fear that the United States is in danger of being drawn into serious diplomatic complications with one or more European governments by reason of the intrigues connected with the revolution now going on in Brazil. Commercial greed is at the bottom of the trouble, as it is in so many international disputes. The Department of State has information which is believed to be trustworthy, that agents of several European governments are aiding the Brazilian insurgents, in order to overthrow the republic, under which commercial relations with the United States have grown to large proportions, and replace it with a monarchy, which will aid in restoring European commercial supremacy in Brazil. This places this government in a position where it is almost compelled to take some action, both for the protection of American commercial interests and in vindication of the "Monroe doctrine," which forbids interference by European nations with the affairs of nations upon this continent. The matter was discussed at a Cabinet meeting yesterday. What action this government will take cannot at this time be positively stated, but there is good authority for saying that nothing will be done hastily.

Two opinions were given yesterday concerning the new liquor-license law, which went into effect to-day, by the Attorney for the District of Columbia, that have caused great rejoicing among the temperance folk. The first was that saloon-keepers cannot sell liquor without making themselves liable to arrest and punishment while their applications for license are unacted upon. Unless some way can be found to upset the opinion, a thing that the highest officials of the District have publicly expressed their willingness to do, if possible, every saloon in Washington, with the exception of about twenty-five, the proprietors of which secured licenses under the new law some months ago, when it was thought that it was to go into immediate effect, will have to close their doors until their new licenses are granted. True, the closing of these saloons would be only temporary, but even if they were only closed for a few days the city would necessarily be benefited. If the commissioners attempt to put a different construction upon this law, in order, as one of them expressed it, not "to work a hardship on the old reliable places,"—just think for a moment of a prominent official talking of "working a hardship" upon the men who are hourly depriving women and helpless children of the very necessaries of life. Surely this official consideration for the interests of the liquor-men is one of the greatest curses of our time—the temperance people will endeavor to carry the matter into the courts by having every saloon-keeper who sells liquor before he gets his license arrested. The Anti-saloon League will hold a public mass-meeting to-night to discuss the matter.

The other opinion will be a permanent benefit, if it holds good. It is that no liquor license can be issued under this law to a drug store, and that no druggist can sell liquor, except when ordered by a regular physician's prescription, without making himself liable to the penalties provided by the law. If this construction of the new law be correct, and it be rigidly enforced, some of the most dangerous tippling places in Washington will be driven out of business, for it has been stated by the chief of police that a large percentage of the smaller drug stores are kept open only to sell liquor. *

One of the rules of the Canadian military service is that of "crying down credit." In Toronto recently this rule was carried out in front of the postoffice. It consisted in a little ceremony performed by a sergeant-major, a trooper and a trumpeter of the Canadian dragoons. The trumpeter blew his trumpet, and then the sergeant-major in a stentorian voice declared that the officer commanding the Canadian dragoons would not be responsible for any debts contracted by the members of the regiment beyond a day's pay, and that even a day's pay would not be guaranteed if the debt was contracted for liquor.

REFORM NEWS.

MARCHING ON TOWARD UTICA.

THE NEW YORK STATE CONVENTION—GOD AND GOOD MEN TO BE THERE.

4 CHATHAM ST., UTICA, Nov. 2, 1893.

The preparations for the State Convention are in a hopeful way, and as we look toward Christ there is abundant promise of a good meeting November 14 and 15 in the Coke Memorial (Welsh M. E.) church. Utica needs a great meeting, not after man's reckoning, but God's: and the promise, "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory through Christ Jesus," is under us.

As acquaintance widens in the city, I find more sympathy with the effort we are making. Pastors generally, so far as they have any thought on the subject, look on the lodge as a hindrance and a danger which they would rejoice to see put away. Last night one of these, who finds the church to which he lately came full of secretism, is thankful for the convention, and will invite his people in. An hour later a brother who confessed that he had been a 32-degree Knight Templar Mason and Odd-fellow, said that he had now no time or heart for such things since Christ had come to bless his soul.

The faithful and noble women of the Christian Alliance are helping mightily by prayer and in finding entertainment for delegates. We expect to accommodate all who come.

Rev. Stephen Merritt, of New York City, a leader in the Alliance movement, gives us leave to expect his presence. His testimony was a power in the last New York meeting, and God will bless his word if permitted to give it here. Rev. Peter Scott, missionary to India, is to visit the Alliance here on the 15th. An arrangement is nearly complete to give him a good share of the last evening of the convention, thus uniting missions at home and abroad.

Saturday last I stopped at Rome and Chittenango, on the way to Syracuse, for the Sabbath.

At Rome, Rev. Nathan Wardner, the "Fighting Chaplain" of the 96th N. Y. Volunteers in the rebellion, and for years editor of the Wesleyan Methodist, is pastor of a flourishing Wesleyan church. He was away from home, but Mrs. Wardner heartily welcomed me and my errand. The pastors of the Welsh Presbyterian and Congregational churches are much interested and hope to arrange to have their people addressed on the relation of the lodge to Christianity next Sabbath. Bro. Clark, of the Free Methodist church, has lately come to this work, and finding a depressed condition, is not able to co-operate as he would be glad to do. Bro. Curry, of Chittenango, is full of enthusiasm in reform. He has a good congregation in the Free Methodist church, and wishes a Sabbath discourse given them.

At Syracuse our State President, Rev. S. R. Wallace, made me most welcome, as did also Bro. J. B. Knappenberger, of the Wesleyan, Bro. Z. Osborne, of the Free Methodist, and Elder D. P. Rathbun of the Pilgrim Mission Congregational church. To find the latter in Syracuse was a surprise and pleasure. He is meeting success in his work—good congregations and frequent conversions cheering him. But his health has been for some time impaired, and at times seriously, which is attributed to the attack at Kellerton, Iowa, some ten years ago. Mrs. Rathbun is also laboring in the Gospel, and supplies a Baptist church at Blodgett's Mills. We look for both at the convention.

It was my privilege to speak morning and evening in the Wesleyan church, where Bro. Knappenberger is doing a good work for Christ. The congregation is large, debts have been paid, an addition made to the building, and the number of members constantly increases. Revival services are in progress in Bro. Osborne's church. With the Covenanter church special services for communion were appointed, and I did not therefore visit them. An opportunity was given for a testimony on Sabbath afternoon in the Christian Alliance meeting, and on Monday in the gathering of the Syracuse ministers.

Returning Tuesday, the Oneida pastors were visited, and some help given them to understand the nature and importance of our reform work, which was thankfully received.

So we join hands in pushing on the cause. Let none of the New York readers of the Cynosure fail to do their part. Remember how much your presence and prayers are needed in Utica; how much, too, the State Association needs your gfts. Be sure to send before convention to your treasurer, or to myself at No. 4 Chatham St., Utica. HENRY L. KELLOGG.

OUR WORK IN NEW YORK.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 4, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. Henry L. Kellogg spent Sabbath, Oct. 29, with the Wesleyan Methodist church of Syracuse, N. Y., preaching morning and evening with acceptability and the manifest presence of the Divine Master. In the evening, he showed, especially, the true and false worship, and that the lodge Christ-rejecting worship was an abomination in the sight of God, and is the devil's masterpiece in leading a world to ruin. Our hearts say, Come again, Bro. Kellogg.

J. B. KNAPPENBERGER, Pastor.

FROM THE EASTERN SECRETARY--A WILL CASE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my return home I have been called as a witness in what is known as the Ford will case.

Our late brother, Milton Ford, left the most of his property to the Orphan Asylum, where the orphan children of his son were cared for. After providing for his wife, he gave most of the balance to a perpetual fund, the interest to go to the Orphan Asylum, unless his children (two daughters who are now supposed to be well off) should ever come to want. In that event they would be paid thirty dollars per month, each, from said fund.

This arrangement was very displeasing to them, and suit has been brought to break the will, on the ground that the father was mentally incompetent to execute a contract.

Some very grievious stories are told by them. Cynosure readers will be especially interested in one of the arguments brought forward to prove that he was not of sound mind. In prosecuting the case, District Attorney Birney spoke as follows (doubtless, especially, to the Masons and Knights of Pythias whom he knew to be on the jury): "Somewhere, at sometime, and by some means, this man got it into his insane mind that such noble organizations as the Masons and Knights of Pythias, composed as they are of many of the best men in every community, having among their number the best of the clergy" —et ad nauseum—"that these honored and everywhere recognized organizations were an evil."..... "He even got a fellow by the name of Blanchard to preach the funeral sermon of his deceased son and assault the Knights of Pythias order, to which he belonged, in the face of his mourning relatives."

The best of evidence was brought to show the deceased not only mentally competent, but a shrewd business man. Judge Bradley, in charging the jury, was clear and explicit. He told them that the views of the deceased regarding secret societies, Christmas, the Catholic church, etc., should not be considered by them as an evidence of insanity.

The jury were out all night. In the morning they agreed that the deceased was mentally incompetent. The judge, after sharply reproving them, set the verdict to one side. The lodge appeal evidently had great weight with the jury, but did not take with the judge. If any reader has a skeleton that he or she does not wish to have aired after they are gone, don't make a will that will displease any of your natural heirs.

Brother and Sister Powers, who have been so helpful in our work in New England and elsewhere, are at present with us. We are glad to have their aid in the home missionary work here.

W. B. STODDARD.

—A rare sight is the annual Chrysanthemum show, now in progress at the Art Palace in this city, where not less than 200,000 blossoms of this beautiful flower are on exhibition.

—It is astonishing how the spirit of greed is pervading every department of life; even Christian church-members often manifest it, and church and reform work surely suffers from its influence.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HOME RULE IN IRELAND—AN EXPLANATION.

BALLYMONEY, Ireland, Oct. 16, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On this side of the Atlantic I read your paper with the deepest interest, and rejoice most heartily in your good work on behalf of national Christianity; although, as a Covenanter, I should rejoice still more in seeing you make even stronger claims for Christ's universal headship.

There is, however, one subject relating to our country on which your views are disappointing to me. I write this with a view to your interest and credit, and should like to see your paper thoroughly reliable in matters relating to reforms here, as well as on such subjects as the Sabbath and Secret Societies. The Home Rule question is one on which there seems to be almost but one opinion in the American press, and along with most other papers on your side, you seem to favor Mr. Gladstone's views. I feel sure that if you lived in Ireland and knew more of the movement of which you speak, with your views on the Sabbath and national Christianity, you would alter your opinion regarding Home Rule. In the matter of legislation and legislative representation, Ireland is better circumstanced than England, and Roman Catholic Ireland is better than Protestant Ireland. But there are a few matters, bearing on your views of work, to which I would ask your careful attention.

First.—The Home Rule agitation lives by Sabbath desecration. Nearly all the political meetings in the south and west are held on the Lord's day. Everything indicates that were Home Rule granted we should be under a more grossly Sabbath-desecrating government than even that under which we now live.

Second.—Almost, if not all, the Protestant religious societies and workers have spoken out against it. Religious publications, such as the Christian Irishman and the Converted Catholic (the latter edited by the world-famed Father Connellan), which are purely non-denominational, look upon the movement as one which would certainly give greater power to the papacy and the priests. And you know something of what that means, educationally and otherwise.

Third.—This elevation of the papacy would be accomplished by a nation which at one time solemnly swore, king, parliament, people, church, against popery. Would it not be an act of national perjury?

Fourth.—This movement also contemplates the release of men who for outrage and murder, some of them members of secret murderous associations, and not for any political cause, are suffering merited imprisonment. You would not wish the anarchists and members of the Mafia society in Chicago to be treated thus.

Your issue of Oct. 5th is just at hand, and on page 1 there is a paragraph on this question which shows that you have been misled. You speak of Mr. Gladstone's Midlothian speech, in which he charged the House of Lords with "nothing less than high treason." Of course Mr. Gladstone did not mean that seriously. He was speaking, as he can do, hyperbolically. For refusing to pass a measure, even at the bidding of Mr. Gladstone, the House of Lords would no more be tried for high treason than would your Senate for a similar proceeding. The House of Lords could be abolished only by a revolution, either bloody or bloodless, at the wish of the people. But just now there is not the slightest sign that the people would take any such step. Nor is the House of Lords the collection of hereditary aristocrats it is often thought to be. The majority of its members have been elevated to their position in the upper House on account of distinguished political and legal power. Mr. Gladstone, as Prime Minister, has created more than any other living statesman. Yet the vast majority, even those who were raised by him, voted against his measure.

English statesmen speak too much as selfish, party politicians; and I would respectfully warn you against accepting the statements of any of them as giving a perfectly fair view of a case. Also there are intricacies in your politics which make it hard for us to know which party is best. The same is true of ours, no doubt, as viewed by you. Let me then also warn you against taking sides with any of our political parties unless where the question is thoroughly understood by you in all its bearings. Wishing you God-speed in your work, I am, etc., JOHN RAMSEY.

ECHOES OF THE N. C. A. FAIR EXHIBIT.

EAST LYNN, Ill., Oct. 30, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We think the National Christian Association did just the right thing in keeping an exhibit at the World's Fair, and, also, that Mr. Stoddard was the right man at the right place.

It was amusing to see the advocates of the lodge pass by the booth and read the various mottoes on the wall that reflected on their institutions. Whenever they opened their mouths in defence of the lodge, in every instance they went away defeated.

The writer, on three occasions, was left by Bro. Stoddard in charge of the exhibit. On one of these occasions some lodge members rather impugned the truthfulness of the exposures that were exhibited. To make short work of these objectors the writer said, in substance: "Look here, my friends; we can establish these exposures as correct in courts of justice. We can sell Ronayen's, or Doesburg's expositions on express warrantee that they are substantially the kind of Masonry that you peddle out at your homes for, perhaps, $30 for the Blue Lodge degrees; but we can sell the same stuff for fifty cents, which will be a clean saving to the buyer of $29.50. In your sale you will swear the victim to not expose the swindle, at the risk of having his throat cut across; besides, in our sale for fifty cents he keeps on his clothing and is not led around like a mule; and, besides, my friends, we can prove its truthfulness by you fellows, if you will only tell the truth and not perjure yourselves."

It was interesting to see them twist about and ook around, as it were, "several ways for Sunday." It was also refreshing and encouraging to hear the many praises of our work left by the friends of light. We have every incentive to go on. Let us keep at work, never turning from our course, and in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Let us be instant in season and out of season. Let us send out tracts by the millions—pamphlets and books, all that we can dispose of—and, particularly, place them in the hands of young men and women in the colleges and seminaries; and after awhile it will surely tell. It is our duty to sow the seed, and the good Lord, at the proper time, will give the increase. Let us not weary in well-doing, for the reaping time will certainly come, if we faint not.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life. By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition. 16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition. 12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects. By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings. By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers. Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical—valuable because time saving—the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

IN BRIEF.

Lord Randolph Churchill has a choice private collection of teeth of noted criminals and murderers, to which he is constantly adding.

The Archbishops of York and London each receive as high a salary as that paid to the President of the United States, while the Archbishop of Canterbury gets half as much again—$75,000 a year.

The following "personal" recently appeared in a Boston paper: "To philanthropists—I am a working woman; will some one buy and hold for me two shares of sugar common, and allow me to pay in monthly installments? Address V. E. M."

Standing on the threshold of the twentieth century it seems a trifle strange to read that a man is lecturing in New England against the theory that this planet revolves. He contends that the earth is flat and stands still. Maybe he has got it mixed up with the Senate.

A Minneapolis clergyman recently recovered $417 from a Chicago local express company for the loss of his valise. The valise contained 40 type-written sermons of his own composition and some note books. The jury thought the sermons were worth $10 apiece, and threw in the $17 for the notes.

Charles Hodge, of New York City, was born with twelve fingers and fourteen toes. Now, in his thirteenth year, he has had the extra members amputated. His mother and his grandmother were afflicted in the same way in their infancy, as were also his maternal grandparents for the last five or six generations.

The Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria, whom his Czech subjects want crowned at Prague, as King of Bohemia, has been twice crowned already as Emperior of Austria and as King of Hungary. On the other hand the kings of Italy, Spain, Belgium, Bavaria and Saxony have never taken the trouble to be crowned at all.

The government of Saxony has adopted a method to secure the payment of taxes which should prove beneficial. The names of persons who did not pay their taxes last year are printed and hung up in all the restaurants and saloons. The proprietors dare not serve those mentioned on the list with food or drink, under penalty of losing their licenses.

Austin Atchison, who died at Spenceport, N. Y., the other day, bore a unique relation to Syracuse University. When over 70 years old he deeded all his property, estimated at $30,000, to that college, on condition that the institution should pay him seven per cent upon the amount annually as long as he should live. On account of his advanced years the peculiar condition was accepted. Mr. Atchison lived to be 103 years old, and before he died the principal had been paid back twice over, though the rate of interest had been reduced.

The testimonials published in behalf of Hood's Sarsaparilla? They are reliable and as worthy of confidence as if they came from your most trusted neighbor. Says Mr. T. W. Haus, of Pittsburg, Pa.: "We have a high opinion of Hood's Sarsaparilla at our house, and with good reason. For eight years I was troubled with rheumatism and all remedies failed to help me except Hood's Sarsaparilla. Like many others I have not taken it steadily; only when the pains come on; but it has always given me relief. For many years past I was troubled with quinsy. Since taking Hood's I have not had an attack."

AS A SUPPORT for exhausted, nervous, overworked women, nothing can do as much as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates and assists all the natural functions, never conflicts with them, and it strengthens and builds up the female system in a way of its own.

Nursing mothers and women approaching confinement, will find it exactly fitted to their needs. It lessens the pains and burdens of child-bearing, ensures healthy, vigorous offspring and promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment on the part of the mother.

It's an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nervine, and the only guaranteed remedy for woman's chronic ills and ailments. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in the case of every tired or afflicted woman, she'll have her money back.

On these terms, can anything else be "just as good" for you to buy?

You're offered $500, or a cure of Catarrh, by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Remedy.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1893.

POLITICS IN UTAH.

The two principal political parties at Salt Lake City, Utah, this fall, according to the Deseret News, are the "Amorines" and the "Liberals," both of which divide the partisan field with the "Gentiles" and "Mormons." The platforms and principles of the first-named two are analyzed as follows by the News:

The Amorines, or American Protective Association, are a secret society, and therefore no more is known of their tenets than has come to us through spies or recreants. This kind of information we are instructed by authorities to receive with caution and are quite inclined so to do; but it has become so cumulative and direct regarding the Amorines, and is so generally admitted by them to be correct, that the prevailing feature at least of the organization is pretty well understood. This is hostility to the Catholic church and opposition to individual Catholics. In Utah the society presumably adds to its code an unwritten provision for the support or assistance of the Liberal party, though it has been hinted that there are some members distinctly anti-Liberal in their predilections.

The Liberal party, as is well known, survives at present for the one reason that it is hostile to the Mormon church and is opposed to individual Mormons.

The difference between the two organizations would therefore seem to be chiefly that nearly all Amorines are Liberals, though all Liberals are not Amorines, since there are many Catholics in the Liberal party. Or, to answer our correspondent accurately, there isn't much difference politically between the two; and in the particulars in which both are unworthy, one is about as bad as the other.

Due allowance must be made for this description by the News, which is a Mormon organ; but in the main we deem it a correct portraiture.

THE ASSASSINATION OF CARTER HARRISON.

This terrible crime that has spread sadness and gloom over the last days of the Fair, and brought distrust and alarm to all of our great cities, is the third of a series of assassinations perhaps unparalleled in the history of modern society. That within the period of a little more than twenty-eight years two chief magistrates of the nation and the mayor of its second city should have been cut off by the bullets of conspirators, is a sad commentary on a government of law and of the will of the people. Of the three great crimes, that of Booth was the last expiring spasm of the pro-slavery rebellion; that of Guiteau was in revenge for disappointed expectations of an appointment to high office—revenge, not towards Pres. Garfield, against whom he had no personal grievance, but against the ruling influences in the party in power. The last great crime, that of Prendergast, was not unlike, in its motives, to the murder of Garfield, but was more personal in its character, and more directly in consequence of causes for which Mr. Harrison was responsible.

Mr. Harrison was a man of marked ability, of lofty ambition, and a born leader of men. He had such social qualities as endeared him to certain classes in society. As a politician, he was eminently successful. Having served one term in the National House of Representatives, he was five times elected mayor of this city, usually by large majorities. His last election was but just before the opening of the great Fair, which he was ambitious to supervise.

It is a remarkable fact that his last two elections to the mayorality were against the almost unanimous protest of the better class of society. The entire religious and most of the secular papers opposed his election. No one supposes that he was a friend to anarchy, or that he did not desire the peace and good name of the city; yet the classes that hate the restraints of law were quite unanimous in his support. They thought they had his sympathy, and that he would condone much that was illegal. This was especially true of gamblers and saloon-keepers.

This catering to the vicious element brought his ruin. The hopes he had inspired could not be carried out. He had, without intending it, sown to the wind, and he reaped the whirlwind.

The plea made by his assassin, that Mr. Harrison had made promises that he did not keep, and therefore deserved to die, is truly Masonic. Masonry binds men, under a death penalty, to keep their promises, even though they find it repugnant to all ideas of justice and self-respect. This wretch was probably not a Mason, but he had evidently been educated in lodge morality.

An analysis of the character of Mr. Harrison reveals what was equally apparent in Stephen A. Douglas, to whom he bore considerable resemblance. There was a want of appreciation of the moral forces in society. Mr. Douglas, though patriotic, saw no wrong in slavery. He was indifferent whether it was voted up or down. Mr. Harrison was not impressed with the evils of the liquor traffic. Each failed to recognize the great fact that these two mighty evils are doomed to fall before the power of divine truth, and that he who stands across the pathway of eternal justice, will, sooner or later, perish as the result.

LABOR NOTES.

On pages 3 and 4 of last week's issue we printed a scheme for an early consolidation of labor unions and confederacies, and note, in that article, the significent sentence: "There are indications of internal upheavals in all the labor orders."

In support of this assertion, the Milwaukee, Wis., Sentinel informs us that Bricklayers' Union No. 1 of that city has issued a protest against the efforts of the International union to prevent the employment on the government building of union men whose unions do not belong to the International. The Bricklayers' Union No. 1 does not belong to the International; its members do not see any reason why they should join the International and pay dues and assessments, holding that they have the right to exercise their own discretion about joining and a right to work whether they belong to the International or not.

The Sentinel sees in this movement the suggestion of some "inconsistency on the part of the members of the local bricklayers' union. They insist that a bricklayer who does not belong to a local union shall not work if they can help it; and they deny his right to do as he pleases about joining their union. They are ready to boycott any contractor who employs a man who does not belong to a local union. It seems as though the International union has the same right to demand that the local union shall join the International that the local union has to demand that an individual bricklayer shall become one of its members. It is not a question of right, but of power. Naturally, and also under the statutes, it rests with the individual himself whether he shall join a union and contribute to its support. But if he does not become a union man voluntarily, every effort is made to deprive him of work and sometimes he is subjected to personal violence. If the International can deprive the local union men of work, or compel them by threats of personal violence to join the International, it is only carrying out the general union policy."

This seems to be a very fair statement of the situation in Milwaukee and suggestive of a similar state of affairs in other sections of the country.

One of the objects of the proposed consolidation, it is stated, is "to do away with the internal dissensions of labor organizations," like that at Milwaukee; but we are told that the only thing in the way of the proposed harmonious consolidation is "the personal disagreement among rival leaders." Mr. Powderly appears to favor a political union with the secret Farmers' Alliance, which would tend to complicate affairs. The result of the discussion, sometime this month, will be looked for with interest.

CLOSE OF MR. MOODY'S CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Moody preached the last of a series of sermons in the Haymarket Theater on Sunday morning. When Jesus preached, "the common people heard him gladly." Sabbath morning the Haymarket Theater was filled one hour before the appointed time. Mr. Moody spoke of the good order that had prevailed in the city during the last six months. He said that he had seen but one drunken man during that time; that five theaters had been occupied by Gospel preachers, and, that if they had engaged five more they would all have been filled; that 110 meetings were held in the city that day; that the whisky-men were disappointed; and while he prayed that God would save the whisky-dealers, he also prayed that God would smash up their business; that he expected the good work of the evangelistic meetings would go on; and that he had brighter hopes for the world now than he had six months ago. His theme was the Saviour's parable of the "Rich Fool," in which he showed that the man's folly consisted in neglecting his opportunities for the salvation of his soul; that while heaven was a prepared place for a prepared people, the fool, having made no preparation for it, lost his soul.

While Mr. Moody tenderly alluded to the late awful tragedy of the Mayor's assassination, he was careful not to extinguish the lights in the lighthouse—God's Word—by allowing that a man could be suddenly destroyed in his sins and go to heaven with God's people; but, on the contrary, he improved the awful event by tenderly admonishing his audience to prepare for heaven.

On Sunday evening the doors of Central Music Hall were opened one hour before the time appointed for the meeting; but before the doors were opened a great crowd filled the vestibule and extended across the sidewalk reaching as far as the street-car tracks. The time was occupied by the crowd in singing hymns until the doors were opened. Rev. John McNeill preached his farewell discourse, giving an exposition of the Twenty-third Psalm, in his own inimitable and witty style. He sailed for Scotland last Saturday on the steamship Devonia, of the Anchor line.

—The notice on our first page—"Attention, Iowa!"—is addressed to all our reform friends in that State, and appeals to their liberality.

—The proposition to disqualify saloon-keepers for membership in the Odd-fellows' lodges is "hung up" in the Sovereign Grand Lodge. Would its discussion and adoption "throw a coolness" over the order?

—Rev. P. B. Williams, as we learn from the Christian Conservator, is this month engaged in reform work for the N. C. A. in the Walla Walla Conference of the U. B. church, in the State of Washington. We are expecting good reports of his labors for publication in the Cynosure.

—The Western Catholic News classes the A. P. A. with "the Waldenses, the Wickliffians, the Hussians, the Lutherans, the Knoxites, the Calvinists," and other religious bodies of sacred memory. The editor does the A. P. A. too much honor by placing it in such excellent company.

—A committee of the National Grange has addressed a memorial to Congress, asking that the protective duties on wool and other farm-products may be retained in the revision of the tariff law. As a secret, oath-bound society, the Grange is accustomed to "pulling the wool" over the eyes of its novices.

—No association, secret or otherwise, whatever its published claims to consideration by the people, is any better than its practices, especially when its operations are governed by blood-curdling obligations that bind its members to each other and forbid them to exercise their private judgment. Such a fraternity is Freemasonry.

—Propositions to amend the Constitution of the Odd-fellows' order by changing the eligibility to membership from 21 years to 18 years, are pending in the Sovereign Grand Lodge. Will the next movement admit children into the lodge at half price? Seriously, it is shameful to delude innocent lads into this Christless, worthless society on any terms.

—A summary of the World's Fair Congresses held in connection with the Columbian Exposition, is published as follows: 210 congresses, covering 1,245 sessions, at which 5,794 speakers were heard by over 700,000 people, and more than 1,000,000 documents were distributed. It would be difficult to enumerate the results that will flow from these unique and varied gatherings.

—Last week, Dan. Coughlin, who was tried and convicted of participation in the murder of Dr. Patrick H. Cronin, and who, after serving a partial term of imprisonment for his crime, was remanded to Chicago for a new trial, became an object of interest in the criminal court presided over by Judge Tuthill. Great difficulty was experienced in finding unprejudiced jurors; and the result of the new trial is still (as we go to press) in doubt.

—The United Presbyterian has "heard of a church that contains not a single laboring-man, and where it has been said, "none are wanted." Could it possibly have been a Christian church? And would not such a church, by its exclusiveness, have a tendency to drive laboring men into the secret labor unions or the saloons? Fortunately such churches are an exception and not the rule.

—It may be that the Lord can save a man in the lodge, but if the man is thoroughly converted he will be sure to come out of the lodge. Those who remain in the lodge, whatever their religious profession, can never be more than half-Christians, having a divided heart, which the Lord abhors.

—"To the profane who are not of our brotherhood we have no explanations to make, no justification to offer."—Masonic Orator. No, the fraternity goes on, in silence and secrecy, falsifying when cornered—"denying the allegation and defying the allegator" in the face of testimony that would consign a gang of thieves to terms in the penitentiary. No explanation of its relations to the "profane," or any justification of its acts, need be expected from such a source.

—Our sterling co-worker, the Midland, representing the United Presbyterians in the Northwest, and now published at Omaha, Neb., announces that during the coming year it is to be issued from both Omaha and Chicago—not simply with a Chicago department, but having two places of publication. The change is entirely in the interest of the paper, which is worthy of a liberal support. It stands shoulder to shoulder with us in its opposition to secret societies.

—"The whole doctrine, as well as practice, of secrecy," wrote Dr. Samuel Johnson, "is so perplexing and dangerous, that next to him who is compelled to trust, I think him unhappy who is chosen to be trusted; for he is often involved in scruples without the liberty of calling in the help of any other understanding; he is frequently drawn into guilt under appearance of friendship and honesty, and sometimes subjected to suspicion by the treachery of others." The danger of uniting with secret combinations has seldom been more graphically described.

—There is reason to believe that more or less of the many disastrous railroad wrecks of the past few weeks were due, in a measure, to the rush to the World's Fair, causing the overworking of trainmen, switchmen and other employes, and that overwork made them sleepy and careless. Another reason is also advanced, that these trainmen, etc., belonged to labor unions which, in their anxiety to increase their membership, enrolled many incompetent and untrustworthy men. Whatever the cause, the suffering and loss of life by these disasters is appalling in the extreme.

—The United Presbyterian recently encountered "a man of the world," who confidentially stated that "many were kept from uniting with the church by their fear of the ordeal of 'meeting with the session.'" As the editor knew that this same "man of the world" had already undergone the ordeal of initiation into a secret society, "with all its requirements of personal degradation," it seemed inconsistent in him to fear a little thing like "meeting with the session" of his fellow-churchmen. The editor thinks that "the jewel of consistency might be worn quite as appropriately outside as inside the church of Christ.

—Those of our readers who are interested in Home Rule for Ireland, will find Mr. Ramsay's letter, on page 5 of this issue, an interesting document. It confirms very strongly the following statement, which we copy from an intelligent exchange: "Opposition to Home Rule in North Ireland has assumed the form of an Ulster Parliament. This assemblage is composed of 600 delegates, representing 170,000 Ulster loyalists. It is called a defense union, and meets for the purpose of organization and to rejoice over the rejection of the Home Rule bill by the House of Lords. No secret is made of an intention to resist the measure even unto death."

—The last day of the Columbian Exposition, October 30, which it was proposed to celebrate with festivities on a grand scale, in honor of Christopher Columbus, was shrouded with a general gloom caused by the assassination of Mayor Harrison. The attendance was light and the occasion spiritless. A fair estimate places the number of persons who visited the Exposition between its opening and closing at 11,000,000. The total attendance was 21,477,212. Thus in point of numbers and receipts, the Exposition was the most successful of all the "world's fairs." It was, in the main, ably conducted, and has left a remarkably favorable impress upon our age.

—The American Tyler (Masonic), of Detroit, Michigan, in a recent issue says that the late Jonathan Blanchard was a Freemason in his early manhood. This will be news to his numerous friends, who will be as loth to believe it as they will the story promulgated Oct. 21, 1893, by the Catholic Review, that Abraham Lincoln was a Roman Catholic in his youth, then a Mason, an apostate and an infidel! These things make one feel like echoing Falstaff's remark: "Lord, how this world is given to lying!"

—At Rockford, Ill., last Thursday, by agreement of the attorneys, the case of the heirs of Daniel Bull against the Moodern Woodmen of America was taken from the jury and submitted to the court. Judge Crabtree rendered a decision in favor of the heirs for the full amount of their claim, holding that according to the construction of the by-laws of this order a man who had been a member could not be regarded as a new member in asking for an increase of benefits, and, therefore, that Mr. Bull's age alone at the time that he applied for an increase could not bar him from securing it. The defense moved for a new trial, but the motion was overruled. The case has been appealed.

—"Indelibility," in the language of Freemasonry, applies to the murderous oaths administered to the embryo Mason, at his initiation, passing and raising in the Blue Lodge. In the words of Mackey's "Encyclopædia of Freemasonry" (p. 363), "no voluntary or even forced withdrawal from the order can cancel certain obligations which have been contracted;" referring to his oaths to "conceal and never reveal" what he has learned of the secrets of the fraternity. The truth is, as has been frequently demonstrated, that oaths and obligations entered into in Masonic lodges are extrajudicial and unlawful, and may be annulled and made void by a withdrawing brother without dishonor, as he would renounce any unlawful or fraudulent contract into which he has been drawn.

—The Cynosure is promulgating a process of Masonic persecution in which there is no truth. If its patrons will believe such falsehood they must be astonishingly gullible. —The Voice of Masonry for November.

This probably has reference (among other testimonies) to the article entitled "The Process of Masonic Persecution," printed on pages 1 and 2 of this paper in the issue of October 12, 1893. Only last week we had a visit from another gentleman who claims (and we have reason to believe) that he has been thus "hounded" and driven from places and reputable employments by the stealthy and dishonorable methods of secret societies because he had become offensive to them. There is plenty of evidence to confirm this characteristic meanness of the Masonic fraternity, and the Cynosure needs no other vindication of its statements.

—Industry and the prosperity attending it, among the farmers in the Western States, has had the effect of demoralizing the Populist party. In Nebraska nearly half of the Farmers' Alliances have surrendered their charters. In the towns their membership has increased, while in the country the lodges have lost heavily. Another cause of this diminution of the party is the impetus that the Populist movement gave to education. The farmers began to study and think for themselves upon the subjects advanced by the party leaders, and discovered that their affairs and prospects were not nearly as deplorable as they had been taught to believe. Perserverance and industry soon placed them in a comfortable condition, and they had no more use for lodge methods. The lesson is a salutary one, and the farmers in other States may profit by their example.

—"Masonry is pre-eminently unselfish." So said Masonic Grand Orator Kuhn before the Grand Lodge of Freemasons of Missouri, Oct. 11, 1893. Then he added in support of his preposterous statement—"The spirit that pervades its innermost recesses is to contribute to the relief 'of worthy distressed Master Masons, their widows and orphans.'" This is the fraternity that utterly refuses to admit to its fellowship or benefaction a woman, an old man in dotage, a young man in his nonage, or a cripple—the very individuals most in need of encouragement and charitable consideration—the very persons upon whom the Lord Jesus most commonly bestowed his divine blessing. No one who is not "a distressed Master Mason," or his widow or orphan, has any claims for charity upon the fraternity, if this its orator and apostle is to be believed. What is this but solid selfishness?

—Both houses of Congress adjourned on Friday last, and thus closed the special session called by President Cleveland to legislate upon national finance, to revise the Chinese Exclusion law, and to take preliminary action for a modification of the existing tariff on foreign productions. The most important work performed was the repeal of the purchasing clause in the noted Sherman silver law; and purchases of silver bullion at all assay offices and the mints have been stopped. The provisions of the amended Chinese Exclusion law are explained in another article, in this issue. A lively discussion occurred over the proposition to amend the tariff, for which purpose a bill will be ready for introduction at the approaching regular session of Congress. The delays in legislating upon these measures have been vexatious and unnecessary, and the country experiences a feeling of relief that the session has ended.

—The bill amending the original Geary Chinese Exclusion bill was passed in the United States Senate as it came from the House of Representatives. It extends for six months the time under which Chinese can register under the Geary law, and for the deportation after this time of any Chinese laborers found in the United States without a certificate of registration. It provides that the word laborer shall be construed to mean skilled and unskilled laborers, while a Chinese merchant shall be a Chinaman devoted exclusively to mercantile pursuits and not engaged as a laborer at all. It changes the provisions of the Geary law concerning witnesses in that instead of requiring a white witness it requires that the witness shall be other than a Chinaman. Pending the order of deportation the Chinamen to be deported cannot be bailed. Certificates of registration are to contain the photograph of the applicant. The misstatement of a contemporary led us to say in a previous paragraph that the provision requiring photographs had been omitted. Altogether the modification of the law (which should have been repealed in toto) is as satisfactory as could be expected from the Congress that considered it.

PERSONAL IMPRESSIONS.

Three months and five days spent in the "White City" passed so quickly that it is hard to realize that the end has come. My daily task was a busy though not an irksome one, and the opportunity of giving to hundreds of people their first intelligence of an organized movement to expose and remove secret societies, was a wholesome stimulant to faithful effort. Every day's experience showed more clearly the imperative need of our work, and deepened my interest and conviction in its vigorous prosecution and ultimate triumph. The city itself, and the marvels it contained, were to me like New York or any other great center, and the impression left in my mind is not unlike to that of a successful convention, in which multitudes have been reached and the truth has had free course.

During my stay I entered but ten of the many buildings of the grounds, and spent no time studying the wonders which others had crossed continents and oceans to examine. In taking a retrospect, I do not regret the course I pursued, for never again shall I have another opportunity to reach so many and strike so heavy a blow against the enemy of our blessed Lord, of his church and all that elevates and ennobles mankind.

To the many friends who called to speak encouraging words and to meet the enemy in the gates, I wish to express my thanks, and for those who sometimes spoke hard and bitter words I have no feeling of unkindness.

The Lord willing, I shall, with my companion, return to the New England field in a few days, there to resume the work, with increased experience, if not with more wisdom and zeal than in the former times. Address me at 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, Mass., where your communications will always be welcome, and you will find a resting-place should you visit that city. Very sincerely your brother in Christ,

JAMES P. STODDARD.

THE POTTER'S HAND.

To the potter's house I went down one day,
And watched him while moulding the vessel of clay;
And many a wonderful lesson I drew,
As I noted the process the clay went through.

Trampled and broken, downtrodden and rolled,
To render it plastic and fit for the mold;
How like the clay that is human, I thought,
When in heavenly hands to perfection 'tis brought.

For self must be cast, as the dust at his feet,
Before it is ready, for service made meet:
And pride must be broken, self-will must be lost,
All laid on the altar, whatever the cost.

But lo, by and by a delicate vase,
Of wonderful beauty and exquisite grace;
Was it once the vile clay? Ah yes, yet how strange!
The potter has wrought such a marvelous change.

Not a trace of the earth, not a mark of the clay;
The fires of the furnace have burned it away.
Wondrous skill of the potter—the praise is his due,
In whose hands to perfection and beauty it grew.

Thus souls lying still, content in God's hand,
That do not his power of working withstand;
Are molded and fitted, a treasure to hold:
Vile clay—now transformed into purest of gold.

DEACON LEE'S OPINION.

We know not where "Deacon Lee" lived, says the Golden Rule, nor whether he ever lived at all; but his "opinion" as expressed in the subjoined sketch, sent to us by mail, ought to be read and pondered in every parish in the land:

Deacon Lee, who was a kindly, silent, faithful, gracious man, was one day waited upon by a restless, ambitious, worldly church member, who was laboring to create uneasiness in the church, and especially to drive away the preacher.

The deacon came in to meet his visitor, who, after the usual greetings, began to lament the low state of religion, and to inquire as to the reason why there had been no revival for two or three years past.

"Now what do you think is the cause of things being dull here? Do you know?" he persisted in asking.

The deacon was not ready to give his opinion; and, after a thought, frankly answered: "No, I don't."

"Do you think the church is alive to the work before it?"

"No, I don't."

"Do you think the minister fully realizes the solemnity of his work?"

"No, "I don't."

A twinkle was seen in the eye of this troubler in Zion, and, taking courage, he asked: "Do you think his sermon on 'Their eyes were holden' anything wonderfully great?"

"No, I don't."

Making bold, after all this encouragement in monosyllables, he asked:

"Then don't you think we had better dismiss this man and hire another?"

The old deacon started as if shot with an arrow, and in a tone louder than his wont, shouted: "No, I don't."

"Why," cried the amazed visitor, "you agree with me in all I have said, don't you?"

"No, I don't."

"You talk so little, sir," replied the guest, not a little abashed, "that no one can find out what you do mean."

"I talked enough once," replied the old man, rising to his feet, "for six praying Christians. Thirty years ago I got my heart humbled and my tongue bridled, and ever since that I've walked softly before God. I then made vows solemn as eternity, and don't you tempt me to break them!"

The troubler was startled at the earnestness of the hitherto silent, immovable man, and asked: "What happened to you thirty years ago?"

"Well, sir, I'll tell you. I was drawn into a scheme just like this of yours, to uproot one of God's servants from the field in which he had been planted. In my blindness I fancied it a little thing to remove one of the 'stars' which Jesus holds in his right hand, if thereby my ear could be tickled by more flowery words, and the pews filled with those turned away from the simplicity of the Gospel. I and the men that led me—for I admit that I was a dupe and a tool—flattered ourselves that we were conscientious. We thought we were doing God's service when we drove that holy man from his pulpit and his work, and said we considered his work ended in B———, where I then lived. We groaned because there was no revival, while we were gossiping about and criticising and crushing, instead of upholding, by our efforts and our prayers, the instrument at whose hand we harshly demanded the blessings. Well, sir, he could not drag on the chariot of salvation with half a dozen of us taunting him for his weakness, while we hung as a dead-weight to the wheel; he had not the power of the Spirit, and could not convert men; so we hunted him like a deer, till, worn and bleeding, he fled into a covert to die. Scarcely had he gone when God came among us by his Spirit to show that he had blessed the labors of his dear rejected servant. Our own hearts were broken and our wayward children converted, and I resolved at a convenient season to visit my former pastor and confess my sin, and thank him for his faithfulness to my wayward sons, which, like long-buried seed, had now sprung up. But God denied me that relief, that he might teach me a lesson: every child of his ought to learn that he who touches one of his servants touches the apple of his eye. I heard my pastor was ill, and taking my oldest son with me, set out on a twenty-five miles' ride to see him. It was evening when I arrived, and his wife, with the spirit which any woman ought to exhibit toward one who had so wronged her husband, denied me admittance to his chamber. She said, and her words were arrows to my soul: 'He may be dying, and the sight of your face might add to his anguish!'

"Had it come to this, I said to myself, that the man whose labors had, through Christ, brought me into his fold, who had consoled my spirit in a terrible bereavement, and who had, until designing men had alienated us, been to me as a brother—that the man could not die in peace with my face before him? 'God pity me,' I cried, 'what have I done?' I confessed my sins to that meek woman, and I implored her, for Christ's sake, to let me kneel before his dying servant and receive his forgiveness. What did I care then whether the pews by the door were rented or not? I would gladly have taken his whole family to my home forever, as my own flesh and blood; but no such happiness was in store for me.

"As I entered the room of the blessed warrior, whose armor was falling from his limbs, he opened his languid eyes, and said, 'Brother Lee! Brother Lee!' I bent over him and sobbed out, 'My pastor! my pastor! Then raising his white hand, he said in a deep, impressive voice, 'Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm!' I spoke tenderly to him, and told him I had come to confess my sin, and bring some of his fruit to him, calling my son to tell him how he had found Christ. But he was unconscious of all around; the sight of my face had brought the last pang of earth to his troubled spirit.

"I kissed his brow, and told him how dear he had been to me; I craved his pardon for my unfaithfulness, and promised to care for his widow and fatherless little ones; but his only reply, murmured, as if in a troubled dream, was, 'Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.'

"I stayed by him all night, and at day-break I closed his eyes. I offered his widow a house to live in the remainder of her days, but like a heroine she said, 'I freely forgive you; but my children, who entered deeply into their father's anguish, shall never see me so regardless of his memory as to take anything from those who caused it. He has left us with his covenant God, and he will care for us.'

"Well, sir, those dying words sounded in my ears from that coffin and from that grave. When I slept, Christ stood before me in my dream, saying, 'Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.' These words followed me till I fully realized the esteem in which Christ holds those men who had given up all for his sake, and I vowed to love them evermore for his sake, even if they are not perfect. And since that day, sir, I have talked less than before, and have supported my pastor, even if he is not 'a very extraordinary man.' My tongue shall cleave to the roof of my mouth, and my right hand forget her cunning, before I dare to put asunder what God has joined together. When a minister's work is done in a place, I believe God will show it to him. I will not join you, sir, in the scheme that brought you here; and, moreover, if I hear another word of this from your lips, I shall ask my brethren to deal with you as with those who cause divisions. I would give all I own to recall what I did thirty years ago. Stop where you are, and pray God, if perchance the thought of your heart may be forgiven you."

This decided reply put an end to the newcomer's effort to get a new minister who could make more stir, and left him free to lay out roads and build hotels.

There is often great power in the little word "No," but sometimes it requires not a little courage to speak it so resolutely as did the silent deacon.

OBEYING ORDERS.

Mr. Chittenden tells an anecdote in his "Recollections of President Lincoln," which illustrates how ready the President was to obey orders. Mr. Chittenden had gone out to Fort Stevens, anticipating an attack on Washington from the Confederate forces under General Early. As he entered the fort he was surprised to find there President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton.

A young colonel of artillery, the officer of the day, was in great distress because the President would expose himself. He had warned Mr. Lincoln that the Confederate sharpshooters had recognized him and were firing at him, and a soldier near him had just fallen with a broken thigh. The officer asked Mr. Chittenden's advice, saying that the President was in great danger.

"What would you do with me under similar circumstances?" asked Mr. Chittenden.

"I would civilly ask you to take a position where you were not exposed."

"And if I refused to obey?"

"I would send a sergeant and a file of men, and make you obey."

"Then treat the President just as you would me or any civilian."

"I dare not. He is my superior officer; I have taken an oath to obey his orders."

"He has given you no orders. Follow my advice and you will not regret it."

"I will," said the officer. "I may as well die for one thing as another. If he were shot I should hold myself responsible."

He walked to where the President stood. "Mr. President," he said, "you are standing within range of five hundred rifles. Please come down to a safer place. If you do not it will be my duty to call a file of men and make you."

"And you would do right, my boy," said the President, coming down at once. "You are in command of this fort. I should be the last man to set an example of disobedience."

The President was conducted to a place where the view was less extended, but there was almost no exposure.

A LESSON IN ART.

There is a legend of a artist who sought for a piece of sandal-wood out of which to carve a Madonna. At last he was about to give up in despair, leaving the vision of his life unrealized, when in a dream he was bidden to shape the figure from a block of oak wood, which was destined for the fire. Obeying the command, he produced from the log of common firewood a masterpiece. In like manner people wait for great and brilliant opportunities for doing the good things, the beautiful things, of which they dream, while through all the plain, common days the very opportunities they require for such deeds lie close to them, in the simplest and most familiar passing events, and in the homeliest circumstances.—Rev. Dr. Miller.

A WRECK AND A RESCUE.

[The interesting sketch of Grace Darling's rescue of shipwrecked sailors, printed in our issue of October 26, recalls to the mind of an esteemed correspondent the following similar experience on the coast of England.—Editor Cynosure.]

Thirteen years before the adventure which made Grace Darling famous, there was a fearful storm near the east neuk of Fife. At the time such a storm of heavy snow and fierce and howling winds was raging as is only realized on such a shore, with its rocks jutting out into the North Sea, between the firths of Tay and Forth. It was Sunday morning, December 25, 1825. My father controlled a crew of brave men, some of whom, in the dark and early morning, came in with the sad news that a vessel was on the rocks near the harbor of Crail, an ancient royal borough, whose castle was on a high rock washed by every tide, and on the land side had the old ditch to entrap its assailants.

My father was ever ready on such occasions. Mother was alarmed, but was assured that no boat could live in such a storm as then raged, so that she need not fear that father would venture. So off he went. A boat was launched into the waves, with my father at the helm. Into it volunteered Captain Ross of a Greenland whaleship, and his son, a mate in same trade. Another son was prevented by his father, as he said: "No, no, my son, two of one family are enough." Enough to risk their lives in such a dangerous venture! I am sorry that I cannot remember the exact names of the men who made up the crew. But there were, I think, eight or nine in all; and soon they sped out of the harbor of Crail.

When they reached the wreck they found that she had split in two, from stem to stern. In falling, a mast had broken some of the captain's ribs, and his son and the crew had sheltered him, with themselves, near the bow of the half of the vessel that rested upon the rocks. The wounded officer was the first put into the boat, and all were safely landed in the harbor, to the great joy of the auld town of Crail.

As I was going to church that morning I saw the whole shore strewed with timber, and it was evident that the crew of the vessel would have been lost but for their timely rescue.

I remember that the wrecked men had a meal at our house, and that one of them had (on the vessel) secured a keg of liquor to drink and make his death easy, and had it at his mouth, when a big wave struck it from his grasp.

To my deep regret I learned, also, that the wrecked captain's kitten, which had remained by him during his hours of anxiety and peril, had not been rescued; for the boy would have liked very much to have had her saved.

I may add that my dear father, nine years older than this republic, had his share in rescuing other crews and persons. He was a good swimmer, and as courageous as he was tender-hearted. He was one of the first Sunday-school teachers in that part of the country.

I have a letter of April 19, 1796, from Archibald McLean, of Edinburgh, to Dr. John Goodsir, of Largo, introducing my father to him as pastor, and as having been baptized by Mr. McLean that day. He was ever consistent with that confession of faith in his buried and risen Saviour. The Bible was daily read, and family worship maintained to the close of his life.

The Dr. Goodsir above named was grandfather of Dr. Goodsir who went with Sir John Franklin on his ill-fated expedition to the North Pole, and was never heard from. An excellent young man he was—once a senior in the same school as GOOD FOR EVIL.

A prominent lawyer relates to a correspondent of the New York Sun that many years ago, while he was attorney general of Missouri, he happened to be in Governor Steward's office when a convict was brought in from the penitentiary to receive a pardon at the governor's hand. The convict was a "steamboat man," a large, powerful fellow, with the rough manners of his class.

The governor looked at the man, and seemed strangely affected, scrutinizing him long and closely. Then he signed the document which restored him to liberty; but before handing it to him, he said:

"You will commit some other crime, I fear, and soon be back in the penitentiary."

The man protested solemnly that such a thing should never occur. The governor looked doubtful, and after a few minutes said:

You will go back on the river and be mate again, I suppose?"

The man said yes, that was his intention.

"Well, I want you to promise me one thing," continued the governor. "I want you to pledge me your word that when you are a mate again you will never take a billet of wood and drive a poor sick boy out of his bunk to help you load your boat on a stormy night."

The man answered that he never would, and seemed surprised, and inquired why the governor requested such a pledge.

"Because," answered Governor Steward, "some day that boy may become governor, and you may want him to pardon you for some crime. One black, stormy night, many years ago, you stopped your boat on the Mississippi river to take on a load of wood. There was a boy on board, working his passage from New Orleans to St. Louis, but he was very sick of a fever, and was lying in his bunk. You had enough men to do the work, but you went to that boy with a stick of wood in your hand, drove him on deck with blows and curses, and kept him toiling like a slave till the load was completed.

"I was that boy. Here is your pardon. Never again be guilty of so brutal an act."

The prisoner took his pardon, covered his face, and went out.

TEMPERANCE.

WILL IT PAY?

Out from ths hearthstone the children go,
Fair as the sunshine, pure as the snow;
A licensed wrong on the crowded street
Waits the coming of guileless feet;
Child of the rich and child of the poor
Pass to their wreck through the dramshop's door;
Oh, say, will they ever come back as they go,
Fair as the sunshine, pure as snow?

Out from the hearthstone the children fair
Pass from the breath of a mother's prayer;
Shall a father's vote on the crowded street
Consent to the snare for the thoughtless feet?

Ah, fathers, your finest gold grows dim,
Black from the rust of such nameless sin;
You may pave the streets with your children slain,
And light your ways with the price of shame;
But say, will your dearest come back as they go,
Fair as the sunshine, pure as snow?

PROHIBITIONISTS IN IOWA.

[From the Northwestern Christian Advocate, Oct. 18.]

Prohibitionists have not strongly sought to found a third party in Iowa, for the reason that Republicans as a party have proposed to realize for the people all that which the former party promises. This new backsliding point as to local option has given deep offense to many Iowan voters who do not propose to see their State deposed from its proud position as a prohibition commonwealth. Inasmuch as it is correctly claimed that some counties have been and are now rebels against State prohibition laws, it is now sought to remove the reproach of rebellion by allowing some counties to determine by vote whether or not they will permit men to sell liquor.

Prohibitionists earnestly argue that it is one thing to grant local option in a State where men are free to sell rum, and quite another to permit that option in a State where valid statutes already outlaw the traffic. In the former case local option ministers to possible prohibition, while in the latter local option is intended to prohibit prohibition. The present plank in the Republican platform is a macrh toward the rear, and the success of that platform means a marked victory for the rum power. It is not enough to say that some counties in Iowa, where the present law should govern, are now violating that law, and that it is better to so modify the law that rebellion shall disappear from the State in the interests of all law. If wicked and selfish men are now willing to defy State law, much more readily and fearlessly will they defy mere county law, where local option outlaws their desperado "business." Let the present law stand. It is unworthy for people or party or parties in any State to seek some theoretical plan whereby evil men may be coaxed to obey law. Rather let the commonwealth lift its standards and educate its people, and compel its parties to seek the maximum of obedience to healthful legislation, and declare war on rebels of all degree.

* * * * * * *

The Republican party in that State has indeed ordained prohibition in the past, but it has not honestly aimed to execute and enforce that policy. That party has not been harmed by its temperance legislation, but it has been damaged almost fatally and unpardonably by its weak consent to the failure of the law in some rebellious counties of the State.

* * * * * * *

The party that does the most for prohibition in Iowa may confidently expect the most from sober people. If the State now has a speck of promised revolt wise men should be warned in good time. It is not yet too late to "save the party" on prohibition conditions of salvation.

ALCOHOL AND DISEASE.

The influence of alcohol on the nerves, and especially on the motor nerves, is seen in the acute stage of intoxication, and in its chronic form is exhibited in delirium tremens, andvarious forms of neurotic disease. But, fearful as are these diseases, they are of comparatively rare occurrence, while diseases springing from the action of alcohol on the physical organs are of such far more frequent occurrence as to render their consideration of greater practical importance. Alcohol exerts its essential and most significant influence on the vital organs by being taken up in the circulation, and thus brought into direct contact with the cellular tissues of the vital organs. Cirrhose liver, diseases of the heart, of the arteries, of the kidneys, and of the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal, along with gout, diabetes, and fatty degeneration, are all ascribable to it. This is a formidable list when we take into consideration their frequent occurence, and I can only ascribe the indifference of the profession to a want of realization of the injurious consequences flowing from the pernicious nabit. Alcohol is frequently prescribed under the mistaken impression that it possesses wholesome and even healing properties. The physician, as family friend and adviser, should be careful not to err in this direction; especially should alcohol never be administered to children. The prevention of the evils of alcoholism, when once realized, should appeal to us as physicians to enlist all our forces in an earnest effort to grapple with them. Prevention is, in principle, so easy. Nothing is needed but insight and good will! Shall we not, then, gladly embrace the opportunity to avert such endless misery? The ridicule with which the opponents of alcohol are assailed will lose all its force, when one is supported by the firm conviction that he is toiling for a good cause in the service of humanity.—Dr. Adolf Strumpell.

NUGGETS.

There are fifty-one thousand breweries in the world.

The supreme council of the United Commercial Travelers has decided to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors at its banquets.

The amount of temperance drinks consumed annually reaches the enormous total of 259,000,000 dozen bottles.

Fifty per cent of the young men in Switzerland are ineligible for military service on account of physical deterioration produced by excessive drinking.

The W. C. T. U. coffee-house in Menomonee, Wis., is now the only public eating-place in the city without a "bar" attachment. It is gaining favor and doing a good business.

Hon. Carroll D. Wright, the well-known statistician, recently stated that facts show that "for every dollar the people receive from the saloon they pay out twenty-one."

Senator Peffer has lately introduced a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquors in the District of Columbia, excepting for use in the arts and sciences and sacramental usages.

In India, certain regiments with 5,510 men were placed under observation. They were divided into free drinkers, moderate drinkers and abstainers. It was found that the deaths of the former were 44 per 1,000; of the moderate drinkers, 23 per 1,000; and of the abstainers only 11 per 1,000.

Until recently, all marriages in England were celebrated before noon, the reason for which law was that the parties might be sober. It used to be the custom to dine at noon, and, as it was the proper thing to drink the health of bride and groom, frequently all parties would appear at the altar intoxicated.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The true knowledge.—vs. 20–24. "But ye have not so learned Christ." Paul had been speaking of the ignorant Gentiles; their alienation from God, and uncleanness of life. But these to whom he wrote, though they themselves had been once in this darkened, benighted situation, should bear witness by their changed lives that "the true light now shineth;" that they had been taught by the great Teacher "the truth as it is in Jesus." This is the test of all genuine Christian knowledge,—not that we can say a church creed without tripping; not that we understand the prime doctrines of the Christian faith, and are sound on all the many points of orthodox belief, but what effect have they had on our hearts and lives? "Lay off the old man," as a beggar would put off his rags when adopted by a king and made one of the royal family. "Which is corrupt"—ready to fall to pieces like a worn-out, filthy garment that is constantly waxing worse, just as the Gentile world, left to itself, instead of growing better, kept sinking lower and lower to incredible depths of vileness. "And be renewed," or new created. "And put on the new man." In other words, put on that eternal youth of the Spirit which can never change or decay, "which after God"—that is, according to his likeness—"is created in righteousness and true holiness," or, as in the revised version, "holiness of truth."

2. Things which belong to the old man.—vs. 25–32. Lying is a world-wide sin, but especially common among heathen nations, who often seem to have no idea of truth. It is therefore mentioned by Paul as the first thing they must put away, as a sign that they had left their old heathen practices and become pupils in the school of Christ. "Be ye angry"—righteously angry at sin, but do not let your anger become sin. "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath." Let it not continue to burn till it becomes hate against the sinner and urges us on to deeds of resentment and revenge. "Neither give place to the devil." The idea is, do not allow him the smallest vantage-ground. He can put up with a very little room in the heart; but as the proverb says, "Give him an inch and he will take an ell." "Let him that stole steal no more." Stealing is another common vice of the heathen world, but this exhortation is just as pertinent to our own land and age. The heathen of Paul's day may have had looser ideas about property, but there is probably far more business dishonesty now, and on a greater scale, than was known then. "Let him labor, working with his hands." Idleness has no part in Christian character, nor that false pride which makes so many young men and women ashamed of manual labor. "The thing that is good." It must be an honest industry honestly plied. The work must be done with all the skill we have; not slurred over, not slighted, not made to appear what it is not, like so much of the work that is done at the present time. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth." This was a sin fostered by heathenism. Its gods, its worship—all that pertained to it savored of licentiousness and impurity. The goddesses of ancient Greece were abandoned women who had been deified; and even their supreme divinity, Jupiter, their poets represented as not only having human passions, but giving free rein to them. It is a vice, however, which is fearfully prevalent under Christian civilization, demanding the united efforts of all good men and women to stop the tide of corruption through the printed sheet and the indecent theatrical poster. "But that which is good." Christian character must be a positive thing. That we never speak or write what is harmful is by no means enough. Our words must "minister grace"—that is, improve and help to build up the Christian virtues in those who hear us. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God." How tender this exhortation. As we would not do anything to pain a loving parent, or a dear friend, so we must put far from us all bitterness and wrath; all anger; all clamoring for real or imaginary rights; and all evil speaking. But it is not enough to simply put these things away. We must fill up the empty place with their opposite, or evil in a more exaggerated form will rush in, and our last state be worse than our first. Kindness, sympathy, forgiveness of injuries, and all these gracious fruits of the Spirit, must be cultivated at the same time that we are trying to keep down the rank and poisonous weeds. "Even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us." Here we have at once the highest example and the most inspiring motive. If we would be God's children we must begin to develop his likeness, by practicing every God-like virtue, chief among which is the love that freely pardons our enemies, and is kind even to the unthankful and the evil.

LITERATURE.

CURRENT PERIODICALS.

The Preacher's Magazine for November, which is intended for the pastor, teacher, and Bible student, is edited by the Revs. Mark Guy Pearse and Arthur E. Gregory. It is no exception to the previous issues, and contains a rich variety of fresh and vigorous matter, and by its suggestions and help will be found of service. The leading sermon in this number is by John Hall, D. D., LL. D., and is entitled A Lamb as It Had Been Slain. The senior editor continues his able articles on Moses: His Life and its Lessons, and also contributes A Christmas Sermon. Dr. Robert A. Watson continues his papers on The Apostolic Churches: Their Doctrine and Fellowship. The Homiletical Department is most complete. Outline Sermons and Sketches are given by the Revs. G. Talalun Newton, John Wright, Alfred G. Bate, Henry H. Adams, Joseph Parker and others. Rev. T. D. Hyde furnishes an Outline Children's Sermon, which he entitles Temptation. The other departments, such as Notes and Illustrations, Notes on the International Lessons, Outline Addresses on the Golden Texts, and About Books, will command attention. Among numerous others we notice a scholarly article by the Rev John McNeill on Preaching. The magazine is published monthly at $1.50 per year; single copies 15 cents. William B. Ketcham, publisher, 2 Cooper Union, New York.

The Century for November begins a new volume with many claims to public favor, both in art and literature. A full-page portrait of Edwin Booth, as he was in 1853; a hitherto-unpublished poetical address to James R. Lowell on his fortieth birthday, by Ralph Waldo Emerson; a beautifully illustrated paper on Fifth Avenue, New York, by Mrs. Van Renssalaer; Hunting Fierce Game in Africa, by H. W. Seton-Carr; Artists' Adventures—The Rush to Death, by Walter Shirlaw; John Henderson, Artist, by George Kennan; Taking Napoleon to St. Helena (concluded); Bismarck at Friedrichruh; Tramping with Tramps; Escape of the Confederate Secretary of War, by John T. Wood; Humor, Wit, Fun and Satire, by James Russell Lowell; Memories and Letters of Edwin Booth, and several other papers of more or less interest, make up a list of acceptable contributions; while the usual departments provide an attractive melange for desultory readers. Published by the Century Company, New York City; price, 35 cents.

The Arena for November has a striking full-page portrait of Richard A. Proctor, the astronomer, and the following list of contents: Thoughts in an Orphan Asylum, by Rabbi Solomon Schindler; Shakespeare's Plays, by the late Richard A. Proctor; Medical Slavery Through Legislation, by Henry Wood; The Slave Power and the Money Power, by Dr. C. W. Cram; Knowledge the Preserver of Purity, by Laura E. Scammon; Is Liquor Selling a Sin? by Helen M. Gougar, A. M.; Study of Thomas Payne, by E. P. Powell; The Bacon-Shakespeare Case—Verdict No. 4, by Hon. Wm. E. Russell, A. B. Brown, A. H. H. Dawson and Henry Irving; La Corrivean, by Louis Frechette; An Omen (poem), by E. E. E McJimsey; Three Gentlewomen and a Lady, by Mary J. Judah; Gerald Massey—the Man and the Poet, by B. O. Flower, and Books of the Day. Boston: The Arena Publishing Co. Price, 50 cents.

McClure's Magazine for November is a capital number, both in material and variety. A literary conversation between Frank R. Stockton and Miss Edith M. Thomas, recorded by the lady, and nicely illustrated, is the opening paper. Four Hundred Degrees Below Zero (produced by oxygen), as explained by Prof. Dewar; Patti at Her Home in Wales—The Story of a Visit, by Arthur Warren; The Surgeon's Miracle, a story, by Joseph Kirkland; The Personal Force of Cleveland, with a portrait, by E. Jay Edwards; Portraits of "Human Documents;" Once Aboard the Lugger; Reminiscences of the Bronte Family, by Dr. Willam Wright; The Hypnotic Experiment of Dr. Luys, by R. H. Sherard, with other interesting contributions, form an entertaining collection for fireside reading. New York: Published by S. S. McClure (Ltd.) 743 Broadway.

Historia for November maintains all the interest that has hitherto distinguished its former issues. The story of the Sepoy Mutiny in India; Gunboat Life on the Mississippi; From Ulm to Austerlitz; A Tale of the French Revolution; Captain Nathan Hale, and Andrew Poe and the Indian Bigfoot, with several illustrations, will find delighted readers among its patrons, both old and young. It is an excellent magazine to introduce into a family of manly boys. Published by the Historia Company, 20 Times Building, Chicago. Price, 15 cents.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

CONGREGATIONAL.

—Chicago Seminary has triumphed, and the magnificent sum of $575,000 is added to her endowment. On the last day, when $60,000 remained to be raised, thousands of subscriptions poured in, and in the evening a wonderful meeting was held in the Union League Club, of which Dr. Pearsons himself was the inspiration. He made a grand speech, concluding by adding $25,000 to his previous offer of $150,000, on condition of other gifts from those present, and under this impulse the balance was pledged. Of this $575,000, Dr. Pearsons gave $175,000, and churches and individuals $400,000.

—At the recent meeting, at Elgin, of the American Missionary Association, it was shown that contributions from the churches during the year were nearly seven thousand dollars more than last year; the legacies, however, were $95,000 less. The missions to the Chinese, the colored people of the South and the Western Indians were discussed with a view to increased work among all. The remarkable reports of spiritual work among the Indian schools of the A. M. A. were very encouraging. They commend the stand of the Association in cutting loose from government aid.

ENGLISH LUTHERANS.

—The Synodical Conference, with a membership of fifteen hundred ministers and nearly half a million communicant members, is entirely German. Recently, however, this body, not officially, but through its leading members, has begun to take great interest in the English work. As a result a small English Synod has been organized, and in quite a number of the larger cities English missions have been begun, the chief object of which is to provide a church home for those who have become too English for the German churches. This same body has already established an Engiish college in Kansas, for which it received $50,000 from a liberal member.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL.

—Fifteen of the eighteen bishops of the church met at St. Paul, Minn., last week, to discuss church extension, missions, etc. The work of church extension is one of the most important in Methodism, and the board has this year the apportionment of $500,000 for the building of new churches on the frontier and in the less settled parts of the country. The report of the College of Church Extension at Philadelphia to the general committee was read by Dr. Spencer of Chicago, the corresponding secretary. The growth of Methodism in the last year, he said, had been most remarkable. The whole family is reported as having 51,419 organizations, with 43,138 church buildings with a seating capacity of 12,863,178, and worth in the aggregate sum over $132,000,000. This society has furnished aid to individual churches during its history to the aggregate amount of $50,000,000. The treasurer's report showed that the receipts from Nov. 1, 1892, to Oct. 30, 1893, were $256,152.31. The disbursements were $230,508.81, leaving a balance of $25,643.50. The finance report of the M. E. Women's Foreign Missionary Society showed the apportionment of money to be raised amongthe eleven branches as follows: New England, $32,000; New York, $50,000; Philadelphia, $30,000; Baltimore, $13,000; Cincinnati, $43,000; Northwestern (Chicago), $90,000; Minneapolis, $10,000; Des Moines, $30,000; Topeka, $9,000; Pacific, $50,000; Colorado river, $9,000, making a total of $310,000, distributed among the foreign fields as follows: India and Malaysia, $122,000; China, $55,000: Japan, $60,000; Bulgaria, $4,000; Italy, $10,000; Korea, $8,000; Mexico, $25,000; South America, $18,000; contingent, $9,000. This is an increase of $50,000 over the last year. Bishops Thoburn, Taylor, Ninde, Newman and Fitzgerald were given foreign assignments.

—It is reported that some white and colored ministers in the South contemplate organizing a new church—the American Methodist church.

MISSIONARY ALLIANCE.

—The fourteenth annual convention of the American Inter-Seminary Missionary Alliance was opened in the rooms of the Yale Theological School, New Haven, Conn., on Oct. 26. Delegates from all parts of the United States were present, making a large attendance. They represented sixty American theological schools, colleges and universities.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

—The report of the Executive Committee shows that Pennsylvania is the banner Sabbath-school State in the union in the number of scholars and teachers. She has 139,356 teachers and 1,247,320 scholars. The treasurer's report stated that the total receipts for the year had been $1,700.85 and the expenses $1,689.08, leaving a balance in the treasury of $11.17.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington (to Gov. Trumbull): "Masonry is a benevolent institution, which may be employed for the best or worst purposes."

Edward Everett: "A secret society so widely diffused and connected as this puts a vast power, capable of the most dangerous abuse, into hands irresponsible to the public."

Richard Rush: Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest is not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection." Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation.

Wendell Phillips: "History shows them perverting justice, stopping at no crime to protect and conceal their mummeries; controlling politics for selfish and personal ends, and interfering with great danger in national emergencies. Every good citizen should make war on all secret societies, and give himself no rest until they are forbidden by law and rooted out of existence."

John Hancock: "I am opposed to all secret associations."

James Madison: "From the number and character of those who now support the charges against Masonry, I cannot doubt that it is at least susceptible of abuse, outweighing any advantages promised by its patrons."

General U. S. Grant:—All secret, oath-bound political parties are dangerous to any nation, no matter how pure or how patriotic the motives and principles which first bring them together.

Myron Holley of New York: —"Such a rebellion Freemasonry has raised. It has violated the dearest rights of nature, and the most sacred enactments of our laws, and this in a spirit manifestly treasonable, for it has done this in pursuance of solemn, deliberate and voluntary obligations to a foreign government,—I mean its own—a government far more alien to that which claims our allegiance than any which has ever afflicted mankind."

William H. Seward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellowmen."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.:—It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

William Wirt: "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down.

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Colden (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814:—"Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829:— "I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

George Washington, to friends in 1794, quoted by Myron Holley:—"The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general dis-esteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason:—Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed.

General J. W. Phelps:—All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions.

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

Home and Health.

(From the Vanguard, St. Louis.)

It is not so much what we eat, as the appetite and digestion that makes a meal enjoyable.

Hominy is an excellent and nutritious food if well cooked. It needs from eight to ten hours' steady cooking. Be very careful not to let it scorch.

The passions, like the elements, make good servants but bad masters. Those who desire sound health and long life will do as the Apostle Paul, and keep their bodies under.

Do not wait too long before putting on warm flannel underwear. Many an attack of la grippe or pneumonia has been caused by wearing light summer clothing through the changeable fall weather of our Eastern and Middle States. Prevention is better than cure always.

Soul and body, spiritual and physical, are so intimately connected in man that one must be greatly influenced by the other, and it is hardly possible for any person to be sound mentally and spiritually if much diseased. Hence the right care of the body, and healing faith, are of vital importance.

If you want a nice dessert, or supper dish, take ripe pears, core them and cut in half. Lay them in an earthen dish, adding a sprinkle of sugar and a small cup of water. Cover them and bake three hours or more in a rather hot oven. Let them get very cold and serve in saucers with cream. They are delicious.

Dr. Mary Wood Allen very wisely said in a recent lecture on "Heredity:" "All manner of jesting about love, marriage, and flirtation does children and young people incalculable harm. If we only speak of marriage in the dignified and sacred manner which truly belongs to it, we should find our young people would have high respect for it, and this would influence them in all their conversation and thought regarding it."

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer has restored gray hair to its original color and prevented baldness in thousands of cases. It will do so to you.

SEVEN YEARS AMONG THE FREEDMEN.
Revised and Enlarged.
BY MARIA WATERBURY.
Finely Illustrated 196 Pages.....75cts.

The first edition of this book has "gone like hot cakes," and a second edition with more of the same sort has been loudly called for and is now ready for delivery. The press, the pulpit, the educator, the reformer, the masses, have bidden it welcome and Godspeed. We quote a few good words from sundry sources: Earnest Christian: "Publish the book for the good it will do."

Dr. Talmage, in the Christian Herald and Signs of our Times, for February 11th, says: "A helpful little volume, just out, for the workers is, 'Seven Years among the Freedmen,' by Miss M. Waterbury, Polo, Ill.,—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—'truth stranger,' oftimes, 'than fiction. One day the chore-man came to Miss M. Waterbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and he wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. 'Thy kingdom come' was all right. 'Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' 'What dat mean?' said he. 'That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you.' 'Stop, teacher, can't do dat,' and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: 'Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Old massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t' row me out fur dead, and I met him down de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him an' aid 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer'!"

Inter Ocean: "A Splendid Book. Seven Years Among Freedman is a volume of 494 pages by Miss M. Waterbury, of Polo, Ills., who has spent seven years as a teacher among the freedmen in Mississippi and Alabama. It is a series of sketches telling very simply and graphically the life led by Northern teachers in the South. It bears all the evidences of truthfulness and if it fails to impress the reader with the manhood and dignity of the old ruling class of the South, it is perhaps because the whole truth is told. One reading the book will stop to ask, Why not send missionaries to the white people of the South? They seem to need it more than the blacks."

Journal, Freeport, Ills.: "We are indebted to Mrs. Lila L. Buckley, of this city, for a copy of this interesting volume. The efforts made to elevate the freedmen of the South is one of the most important and deserving charities of the present time, far excelling any effort to elevate the heathen of foreign lands and it should have the aid of all charitable people in this country. ....The proceeds of sales is devoted to the work of elevating the freedmen of the South, and we trust that every one to whom Miss Waterbury applies will purchase a copy of the book, which is in itself fully worth the price.. Miss Waterbury's grandfather, Rev. Calvin Waterbury, was the first Presbyterian minister in Freeport, and it was by his efforts that the First Presbyterian church in Freeport was established.

Polo, (Ills.,) Press: "Seven Years Among the Freedmen. Our townswoman Miss Maria Waterbury, the past winter, prepared for publication an account of some of her singular experiences in the "sixties" among the freedmen of Mississippi. Miss Waterbury and Miss Ford, both of this place, did grand work in those years and deserve no small mead of praise for their heroic sacrifices.

Drury; "Thirteen Reasons Why a Christian cannot be a Freemason," "Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion," and "Are Masonic Oaths Binding on the Initiate?" 287 pages; cloth $1.00.

FARM NOTES.

ABOUT STOCK.

A rough hide is a sign that something is wrong.

The money expended for pure-bred male animals is one of the best investments that can be made and gains compound interest in a short time.

Professor Henry shows by experiment that it costs $2.61 to produce 100 pounds of gain with lambs, and $3.03 to produce the same gain with pigs of about the same age.

Fast-walking horses should be classed as a breed and records made in order to encourage the breeding of them from pedigree stock. Such a breed would be in demand everywhere.

A little linseed oil is healthful as nutritious food for any domestic animal during fall. For horses it is used to advantage to tone up and keep up a healthy digestion and consequent appetite.

The fall is an excellent time for purchasing pure-bred stock, as the prices are then lower than at any other season, for the reason that the breeders are reducing stock before the winter sets in and are willing to make a reduction in price.

Breeding from young stock continually will, sooner or later, result in degeneracy. To procure the larger and most vigorous animals the parents should be fully matured. It is true that young animals may be used for breeding purposes, but it should not be made a practice.

Great large hogs are not as numerous as they were a decade ago. The demand at present is more for hogs of medium size, and farmers have become disposed to give greater attention to early maturing breeds rather than to those that attain great size. By varying the food, instead of using corn altogether, cheapness of the pork is also secured.

Farmers in Douglas county, Illinois, early this month lost several head of stock, including hogs, cattle and a horse. The animals were found dead and badly mutilated. The mischief was supposed to be done by a panther that had escaped from a circus sometime before. At last accounts the farmers were banding together and had determined upon a thorough hunt with rifles for the marauder.—Farm, Field and Fireside, Oct. 28.

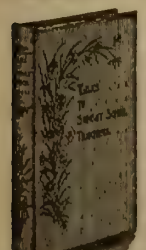
Talks to Sunday-School Teachers.

By Rev. J. G. Terrill. 12mo, 200 pages, bound in fine cloth.....75



This book is the result of twenty-five years of experience in Sunday-school and treats of: 1. The Sunday-school organization and management. 2. Methods of work. 3. Studies in human nature. 4. Rules of Interpretation as applied to the Bible. 5. Illustrative exercises for primary classes and children's meetings. In the style of presentation, subject matter and price of the book, the wants of the officers and teachers of the ordinary Sunday-school are kept in view.

S. S. Times:—A very comprehensive book. N. Y. Independent:—A sensible manual for the average Sunday-school teacher. Evan. Mess.:—We have been very favorably impressed with the book, because it is so intensely practical. The subject is systematically treated, and leaders of teacher's meetings can not do better than adopt it as a text-book and devote half an hour of each session to teaching the theory and practice of teaching as here systematized. Christian at Work:—Any school that will adopt this book generally and carry forward its work or doctrines here laid down will not be long in developing into a model school and reaping the harvest of a rich fruitage. Herald and Presbyter:—These Talks are well attested in their profitableness and excellence. Buffalo Advocate:—A plain, practical, common sense book on a very important subject. The author has had wide experience in this field of work. He knows thoroughly the ground over which he would lead others, and possesses the happy faculty of packing a great deal of valuable information as to matter and manner of teaching into this little hand-book. We commend it to the attention of all Sunday-school workers. Religious Telescope:—We are pleased with the plan and treatment of the subjects throughout, and are sure that the diligent Sunday-school teacher who longs for more thorough equipment will find in this book a helper of great value. Illustrated Christian Weekly:—The author talks from observation and experience, and talks well.

THE TWO-FOLD GIFT of the Holy Ghost,

BY REV. THOS. K. DOTY,
Author of Lessons in Holiness.

240 pp. Price postpaid.....65cts.

The design of this book is, in plain language, to designate the place of the Holy Ghost in both the Godhead and the work of Salvation. Especially to show that Entire Santification is wrought in the heart by the Baptism of Holy Ghost; and that the Epoch of the Baptism is identical with that of his Advent in his Indwelling Personalty. The agency of the Holy Ghost in the Life, and in carrying on the work of the Gospel, is given particular attention.

TITLES TO THE CHAPTERS:

1. A Summary. 2. The Holy Ghost a Person. 3. The New Testament Designating Terms. 4. The Scriptural View. 5. The Holy Ghost is God. 6. Blasphemy Against the Holy Ghost. 7. The Triunity of God. 8. The Apostolic Benediction. 9. The Worship of the Holy Ghost. 10. The Dispensations. 11. The First Dispensation. 12. The Second Dispensation. 13. Holiness—Sinning. 14. "The Sin of the World." 15. Final Deliverance from Sin. 16. The Day of the Holy Ghost. 17. Jesus and the Holy Ghost. 18 and 19. The Epoch of the Holy Ghost. 20. The Anointing. 21. The Baptism of the Holy Ghost. 22. The Baptism of Fire. 23. The Two-Fold Experiences of the Holy Ghost. 24. Fellowship of the Holy Ghost. 25. "In the Spirit." 26. Several Scriptural Terms Considered. 27. Pentecost. 28. Inspiration—Prophecy. 29. Spiritual Leading and Teaching. 30. The Gifts of the Spirit. 31. "Praying in the Holy Ghost." 31 and 32. Power.

This book is creating quite a stir in religious circles. The original, bold and convincing manner of presenting the subject, has forced the press to comment upon the book, either adversely or favorably, generally the latter. We give a few OPINIONS:

Bible Standard and Gospel Record: "This book is very compact, scarcely a superfluous sentence in the whole book. The manner of treating the questions involved is both clear and scriptural. .....The effect of the book will be to deepen thought and increase knowledge and, in the end, deepen piety."

Evangelical Messenger: "Brother Thomas K. Doty has written a book which we take pleasure in commending to all devout readers who enjoy all spiritual things. The subject is so important, and the treatment of it so timely, that we may be pardoned for calling attention to it thus prominently. We, at least have been greatly interested, and gratefully acknowledge that we have also been decidedly profited by perusing it .....Brother Doty writes with an incisive pen, in a clear, lucid style, often epigrammatical and with great force. He is evidently deeply impressed with the truth of what he writes and demands the respect even where he does not gain the intellectual assent of his readers." Withal the book is written in a kindly, candid spirit, rather didactic than polemical, and is calculated to help the reader and not to rouse his opposition, as is the case with so many books which have been written upon this and kindred subjects. The theological views expressed are orthodox, and in some cases the argument is fresh in matter, and certainly fresh in form throughout."

Christian Cynosure: "His book is one of the most excellent, instructive and practical of any that have come to our knowledge. The exposition of the Scriptures concerning the personality and work of the Spirit is very clear, able and comforting. There is much dogmatizing on these topics by Christians who never fully felt the power of the Spirit's work, or are not living in gracious fellowship with him. To all such and to those who have not yet learned what gifts the Lord is waiting to bestow on his people we heartily commend the careful reading of this volume."

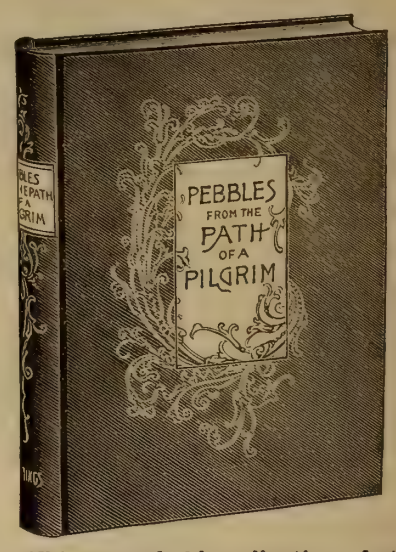
Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim.

—BY—

MRS. H. L. HASTINGS.



This remarkable collection of stories from the eventful life of a Green Mountain girl has been pronounced "more fascinating than any romance." A member of Congress writes: "'Pebbles' has been read by me with great interest. The introductory chapter has followed me into dreams. My copy is read to pieces by the family, and borrowed to death by the neighbors." An editor says: "Surely the faith that 'obtained promises, wrought righteousness, and stopped the mouth of lions,' must have been given in large measure to the writer of this truly remarkable book.... No family library should be without it." "'Pebbles,'" says the Christian Cynosure, "is such a book as Christian parents are always glad to put on their center-tables."

"Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim" is a large and beautiful book of over 300 pages, printed on heavy book paper, from clear open type, and is profusely illustrated. It is artistically bound in handsome cloth, with fancy panels, and specially attractive side and back cover designs. Price, $1.50.

The Anarchists, on Sunday last, celebrated the execution of four of their leaders several years ago for the Haymarket riots. It was a tame affair.

As we go to press on Tuesday morning the New York State Anti-secrecy Convention and that of the Iowa State Christian Association are gathering at their respective places—Utica and Hopkinton. We look for satisfactory reports of the proceedings of each in time for next week's issue.

At the election in Colorado, last week, it was decided that women may vote in that State. The progress of female suffrage may be slow, yet it seems to be making headway against whatever popular prejudice exists in opposition to it. If the right of women to vote will tend to the improvement of both sexes in social, religious and political positions it would be wrong to withhold it from them.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard and Mrs. Anna E Stoddard left Chicago last week, leaving behind them a record of arduous and fruitful anti-secrecy work at the World's Fair. After a course of lectures in Canada and a visit to the New York State Anti-secrecy Convention at Utica, they may be addressed at 218 Columbus avenue, Boston, where they propose to resume their efficient labors in New England.

Mr. W. T. Stead, editor of the Review of Reviews, a born Englishman, is at this time visiting Chicago, and giving publicity to two ideas that are attracting attention. One is the amalgamation of the Christian churches, of all names, into one organization, and its co-operation with whoever will seek to unite with it, with a view "to providing cleaner, safer, happier conditions of life for all people, but more especially for those classes on whom the hard burdens of life are heaviest." In this manner he expects to effect important civic reform. The idea is worth a little thought; but the scheme might prove impracticable. His other notion is to save the best World's Fair buildings, and keep them standing where they are. This is more reasonable.

Rev. W. F. Oldham, D. D., pastor of a Methodist Episcopal church at Pittsburgh, Pa., last Sunday, stated in his pulpit that 16,000 members of the A. P. A were enrolled in Buffalo, N. Y., within two recent weeks, and that they "have done better in Pittsburgh than in any other city in the United States." He gave, as the incentive to this rapid growth, the hostile position of Rome towards American institutions. His statements are significant.

While there was no open, organized movement of the A. P. A. announced in the recent election in Chicago, still its hand was visible, inasmuch as two of the city daily papers, taking the tickets of the Republican and Democratic parties for judges and county commissioners, suggested a new list of candidates, from which Roman Catholics were carefully excluded. The returns showed that out of the twenty candidates thus selected all but four were successful in the canvass.

Rev. P. B. Williams, in a private letter dated the 6th inst., notes the fact that he has spoken six times in public in the interest of our reform, since leaving home, to fine congregations, who manifested good attention. He has also added nearly 75 signers to the constitution of the Pacific Coast Anti-secrecy Association. This is encouraging. Mr. Williams will continue his lectures in our behalf for some time longer in the Walla Walla conference of the U. B. church in Washington.

The philanthropists and the legal fraternity have a unique problem to solve in the case of a railroad robber who was shot and killed. But it appears that the robber was not killed because he was a robber, but that he was murdered by the one who shot him with the intent to commit murder. So far as the robber is concerned, the case is settled, but the fate of his destroyer is in the balance. At present he is confined on a charge of murder. The question arises, ought he not to be treated as a public benefactor?

In a recent editorial—"Some Criticisms Answered"—we accused the Christian Conservator of saying, in reference to the N. C. A. Christian Congress of October 5, in this city:

> That every other congress at this time should attract national, and many of them international, attention, and this one disappoint even its best friends, shows mismanagement or misplaced confidence. In either case it is unfortunate for the cause.

The Christian Conservator repels this accusation, although it did criticise some of the details of the congress referred to, and thinks that the Cynosure "had made use of what some other paper said, to give the Conservator a gentle slap." Regretting that we should have even inadvertently misjudged our good friends of the Conservator, we beg their pardon, and hope the guilty critic will be manly enough to declare himself in an equally penitential mood.

Those who read, recently, in the Cynosure, the action of the American Board in sending Wm. H. Noyes to Japan as a missionary, will find the following report of an address by Rev. Joseph Cook on that occasion, a characteristic commentary: "In missionary work motive was more than men or money. Noyes is the figure-head of an idea. The eager attention of this audience shows it is not an exceptional case. We have seen the thin edge of the wedge. Let me show you the thick edge." He gave twelve reasons for not appointing Mr. Noyes. "It would put Congregationalists out of line with the evangelical regiments." He emphasized his position that "it is never safe for any man to die in his sins; that men must come out of their graves to answer for what they did before they went into their graves, is doctrine twice ten centuries old, and should not be abandoned to-day."

The re-election of Judge Gary to the bench of the Superior Court of Chicago is a rebuke to anarchism and its chief abettor in Illinois, Governor Altgeld. In extending his executive clemency to three anarchists who had been imprisoned for life for their participation in the murderous Haymarket riots, the Governor insulted a majority of the people of the State, and aggravated the situation by publicly venting his spleen on Judge Gary, before whom the anarchists, living and dead, were tried. For his able and fearless course during those trials, the Judge had gained the respect of the entire nation; and his re-election by a majority of about 8,000 is a vindication of which he may well be proud.

Thirteen States voted at the general election of last week, and in several of them the Republicans scored marked victories. Notable results were: McKinley was re-elected Governor of Ohio, by a very large majority. In Massachusetts ex-Congressman Greenhalge (Rep.) was elected Governor by about 30,000 majority. New York also went Republican by a good majority. Pennsylvania elected a Republican State treasurer and Supreme Court judge. South Dakota elected Republican Supreme Court judges. Republicans in Iowa elected their State ticket, and secured a majority in the Legislature. By many the results of this campaign are looked upon as only the outcome of an "off-year," and not indicative of any permanent partisan revolution in our national politics. By others it is feared that the moral, religious and social interests of the people will not be improved by the change. We shall see.

CHRIST THE ONLY TRUE BASIS.

[A paper by Mrs. N. Arlonine C. Brightman, read at the World's Congress of Christians, opposed to Secret Societies, Chicago, Oct. 5, 1893.]

The immortal Goethe has said: "Manhood is worth everything else. Sell all to buy it."

The notion that prevails to-day, and not only to-day, but which has prevailed for many days, that to belong to organizations, and to take oaths, and to make pledges to things seen or unseen—the latter quite preferable, as it involves one so deeply and mysteriously—that there must be presumably something brave and manly about it, is a false notion. Is not manhood upright, instead of mysterious? free, instead of in bondage to numbers? free to meet all the changes on the kaleidescope of events and possibilities with its own best thoughts, its own best discernment of means to ends, its best plannings how to meet results which must inevitably flow from legitimate causes, instead of in bondage to masters—how often ignorant, selfish, scheming and intriguing?

Could manhood follow out such dictation? Must it not ever stand upright? free in its own well-sought enlightenment, drawn from the best lessons of all ages, decided between himself and God alone?

Numbers, doing thus, would make a strong band of harmony, and helpfulness to the world and one another, but they would need no secret vows, no pagan ceremonies, no titles nor degrees to deceive, as though of great authority—only the ear turned upward, and the eye inward, instead of both turned outward and around, listening to popularity, servility or compromise.

Manhood, thus in swaddling clothes, must eventuate in weakness and infancy. Quite different from the sturdy manhood of our Puritan fathers is this following of dictation, and consequent weakening of will and of purpose, until not one man in a thousand dares to stand alone, but is weak-kneed and lost to his bearings, unless there is an organization at his back.

Did our nation, when it came up out of peril and oppression, iron-gray and earnest, with bleeding feet from frozen battlefields, and with homes to make for loved ones and for nations—did it dawdle around in this way, with lodges and clubs and "grand masters," or, did it come on with straight, manly, responsible, individual, hand-to-hand work?

Confederacies cannot stand; they are so many ropes of sand, because they have not the true Master, Christ, as their basis! Of what avail is it if men do combine together; if they leave out the Creator of the world?—he who, it is presumaable, has the most interest in the success, perfection and victory of mankind.

The only God of all the gods, who can send down his electric thrill to vivify his creation, even in its old age and woroutness, until some quickened and God-like ones shall be gathered out, bearing his image and superscription, to be planted once again in a new era—to see what can be perfected and accomplished by the man grown up from the childhood of the first Adam "into the stature and fullness" and inthrill of the second Adam—Christ the Lord, the only true, or in any way, enduring basis. The base is above the foundation. The base is the visible, underlying structure of all monuments, pyramids, or of whatever is thus made to stand upright, strong, individual and alone, aspiring heavenward, instead of spreading along as a wall earthward. The welfare of mankind cannot rest securely on any other base or underlying, but the most broad and sufficient, even Jesus the Example—Christ the Lord! Then Huxley's "fittest" cannot crowd out the "best," but the two will become one!

Grand stones in this foundation of character are the lessons of Noah and of Sinai; of Confucius and Buddha; of Mohammed and Nervani; of David and the prophets; of Socrates and Plato; of John the Baptist and the twelve; of Paul and Apollos; of Luther and Wesley; of Queen Elizabeth; of George Washington and Abraham Lincoln; of John Brown; of Spurge on, Swedenborg, Beecher and Talmage; of Joseph Cook and Bishop Dudley; of Benedict Arnold and Jefferson Davis; of Gen. Booth and Henry Varley and D. L. Moody; of Joan of Arc; of Ellen White, Mrs. Livermore, Frances Willard and Susan B. Anthony. All and each of these, and thousands more, have given lessons of inspiration or warning, which, woven into the fibre and foundation of our life, may aid us heavenward, resting upon the true Basis, who designed all before the foundation of the world—even Christ the Lord. He designed to perfect all strength, not only by exercise of obedience to the best things we know, but to the best things we can possibly know of, both past and future, of both heaven and hell. Taking this Christ, the latest, most advanced and progressive manifestation—hence, surely beyond Confucius or Buddha—"man may come" into His fullness and stature (and when I use the word man, I mean as it was written at the "beginning," indivisible male and female); into His fine discernment between good and evil; want of which caused man's downfall in his infancy in Eden, but the obtaining of which, in all delicate shadings of spiritual perception, will be the fullness of the lessons of the man just to graduate out of the telling events of the near future. He himself will be that "man of gold,"—not by crying out the strength of his "confederacy," but the strength of his God; not by permit of Leo. XIII, but each man in direct communication, as kings and priests unto him who needs no "medium" of communication in arrangements of pacification or indulgences, but who dwells in his own—the outward man being only the expression of the inward man.

Up here with Him, how trivial seems all the outlook of confederacy, of whatever name or kind, and of all secrecy, which shall, ere long, be blazoned across the sky in letters of shame.

But if free from the conflict of life, there comes a man, perfected, even a man "more precious than the gold of Ophir," who shall question God's manner of bringing about such a character, even though it be as by the refining of fire when he has lent his Son to be a sure, an indisputably complete and final basis, upon which man may stand, until he himself may tower far beyond Christ's earthly accomplishments in victories, in the earth-life, because, being in the fullness of the day, rather than in the beginning; in the harvest, instead of in the seed sowing; and the recipient, if he will, of the full power, which Christ has now received, back again, from the Father.

Austin, Ill.

CHRIST OR THE LODGE—WHICH?

BY REV. A. A. HOYT, BOSTON, MASS., EDITOR OF THE "INDEPENDENT CHRISTIAN."

"No man can serve two masters." Matt. 6: 24.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." 2 Cor. 6: 14.

Ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." John 15:19; 17: 14.

"Ephraim hath mixed himself among the people. Ephraim is a cake not turned." Hosea 7: 8.

What I have to say is not designed as a denunciation of men, but of the false systems that pervert men's judgments, and lead them astray from the only Name and way "whereby we must be saved."

Christianity and the true church is heaven-born. Her commission and work is God-appointed. Her existence is an imperative necessity. She is God's appointed agency to lead men into the way of life. Without her agency all nations of men are barbarous. With her agency, men and nations are civilized. Anything like amalgamation with worldly rites neutralizes her recuperating and invigorating forces. God's positive injunction has ever been to be separated unto him; to "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." "Ye are not of the world." "Ye cannot serve two masters."

Typical Israel, or the ten revolting tribes, was denominated Ephraim. They early became apostate—mixed among the people, their idolatrous neighbors. God said of Ephraim that he was "a cake not turned;" half-baked professors. With this amalgamated worship, partly of God, and partly of Baal—the idol god of Assyria and Babylon—came decrease of civilization and power, until the kingdom fell, in disgrace, a victim of the nations with whom it had joined in this unholy alliance of amalgamated worship.

Later on, Judah followed in alliance with the Egyptian and Babylonian worship, and fell by the bloody hands of those idolatrous nations.

We read of Solomon, in his day, that he married wives of the idolatrous nations, and that his wives turned his heart away from God. He was turned into the channels of mixed worship, and his former light went out in darkness.

We are informed that Masonry claims to have had its origin in the slimy frog-waters of compound abomination of Egyptian mythological Apis and Assyrian Baal worship, as propagated by the unholy alliance of Solomon with his three hundred idolatrous wives; but we have no faith to accredit their institution with so remote antiquity. As said the Chinaman: "He too muchee credulitee."

The imperative thought that forces itself upon us to-day is, Shall we anti-type the fallacious apostacy of these men and nations of past ages, whose former light went out, by their apostacy, in the darkness of barbarism and ruin? Shall we join hands with a mixed worship, which must in time retrograde our civilization and result in the damnation of millions of souls for whom Christ died? History repeats itself; and such results will surely come if we do not warn men of this treacherous undermining of vital Christian life. What an Ephraimitish mixture of half-baked professors we have in too many of our so-called churches of to-day—Jew and Ashdod, church and lodge; and many of them don't know just to which they really belong, but are much like the Dutchman who prayed "good Lord and good devil," because he didnt just know whose hands he might fall into.

Freemasonry, as the fatherhood of all secret, oath-bound lodge systems, boldly lays claim to a progeny of Babylonian and Egyptian religious rites. We quote from their words as follows:

"Freemasonry is a philosophical development of the ancient system of sun-worship."—Mackey's Manual, p. 100. Many quotations on this line might be given.

Its secret oaths are barbarous, bloody, cruel. In some of the degrees the oaths are very numerous, men who have attained to the degree of Royal Arch having taken over 60 of these awful oaths, which have grown more and more terriable and blasphemous in the higher or more advanced degrees. Men are gradually and craftily led on in these barbarous rites, step by step, hoodwinked and cable-towed. Otherwise, Christians would revolt against such impositions upon the pure doctrines of Christianity.

We object to this system of pagan ritualism, which claims to fit men for God's kingdom, as being a delusion that shuts out the true light of Christianity, and thus deceives men, and damns their souls in perdition. It brings all kinds of men and religion on a common level in its rites—Christians, rumsellers, libertines, gamblers, Mohammedans, Jews and infidels; and by its abominable rites claims to usher all its patrons into "the grand lodge above," which is the heaven of Masonry. I once saw a most blasphemous infidel at the head of a Masonic funeral procession, with Bible in hand, enter the sacred desk and conduct the services, as chaplain of the lodge.

Shall we not lift the voice of warning against a system of such gross impositions? Can we be silent while it comes into our churches, as it is doing by stealth, as the serpent came into the Garden of Eden, and draws away our young men from the true worship of God, to the lodge-room and to the shrine of idolatrous rites; and through its membership proposes to run and rule our churches? If any one doubts this, go to the more popular churches of this city and ask to speak publicly against Masonry there, and with few exceptions, you will soon see, and possibly feel, the horns of the pagan dragon.

What a fraudulent claim is theirs, that such a system can be a substitute for the pure Gospel of Christ! A system that expunges the name of Christ from its prayers and from all of its basis rites; and makes no provision for the salvation of the wives and daughters of even its own members. If Masonry can save the men, who or what do they claim can save the women? Are there two systems of salvation: one for the men and another for the women? If only the men can enter the grand lodge above, where, oh where, do Masons think our women are to go? And yet, how vastly many Masons are making this system a subterfuge for salvation; and they tell us that it is as equally efficacious as the blood of Calvary to atone for sin; and many, by word and deed, claim it to be the only system of salvation. We generally hear it remarked, by the members of the lodge, "The religion of Masonry is good enough for me."

Their own standard works admit that their institutions of secrecy, which have stood for centuries, could not have existed so many years with open doors. They virtually admit that theirs are the chambers of darkness. We quote their own words:

"In the ancient mysteries the aspirant was always kept for a certain period in a condition of darkness. Hence darkness became the symbol of initiation. Applied to Masonic symbols it is intended to remind the candidate of his ignorance, which Masonry is to enlighten; of his evil nature, which Masonry is to purify; of the world, in whose obscurity he has been wandering, and from which Masonry is to rescue him."—Mackey's Ritual, Art. Preparation, p 44.

How can the lodge elevate our young men where they are bound together by oaths of secret brotherhood with rumsellers, rum-drinkers, tobacco gormandizers, libertines, etc., and where balls, champagne banquets and revelries of exceptionable character are the order of the day? Judge Whitney, once Worshipful Master of the Belvidere, Ill., Lodge, says: "A Masonic lodge is the strangest conglomeration of ministers and gamblers, deacons and adulterers, professed Christians and rumsellers that the Almighty ever looked down upon." Aye! Is such akin to Christianity? Can we imagine our meek and lowly Saviour entering the lodge rites of Masonry, half clad and half naked, hoodwinked and cable-towed around the room and over the rough road to Jericho, perhaps by a loathsome rumseller, or a blasphemous atheist? Does any person imagine our Saviour such an one as that? Nay, verily! Then let us know, as Christians, that as he is so are we in this world, "holy, undefiled, and separate from sinners;" separate from the unholy alliances of the lodge, and from the despotic, secret, idolatrous rites that their blood-curdling oaths bind men to honor, obey and revere.

Josephus says: "The Jewish religion made known to all the people the mysteries of their religion, while the pagans concealed from all, but an initiated few, the mysteries of theirs." Does not the same difference exist to-day between Christianity and Masonry? One is an open revelation of the mystery of God, "which is Christ in you the hope of glory;" while the other sets the seal of its horrid oaths and penalties of secrecy on man in even the most trivial things, never to divulge, even to the wife of his bosom.

Again, we object to the lodge in that it consumes valuable time and money which belongs to the work of Christ in saving souls. Many professors belong to so many lodges that their evenings are nearly if not quite all spent in lodge meetings, and thus they rarely if ever attend the prayer circle. Some are reported as belonging to from twelve to twenty-four lodges. The church and home are both neglected, in time and money. Think of the costly temples, halls and regalia. Millions of dollars are paid in annually, and not more than one-third of this is spent for benevolent purposes. Frequently, time and money are spent in marches and other display on the Sabbath, while its evenings are desecrated with lodge revelries. Is this the remedy for sin, the civilizing power?

Again, lodge oaths pervert justice and undermine government. The courts and juries are oath-bound to support a lodge brother, whether rum-seller or black-leg. Think of the awful fruitage of the lodge. Masons, Fenians, Jesuits, Clanna-Gael, Mafias, Labor Unions, with their murders, strikes, street mobs, etc, "filling the land with violence."

Do we not need a reviving of the former law of Massachusetts and of such sentiments as were uttered by "great and noble men" of church and state? Daniel Webster said:

"All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to others and especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under public institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and justice. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approve the law lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

The State of Vermont has upon her statutes this law:

"A person who administers to another an oath or affirmation or obligation in the nature of an oath, which is not required or authorized by law, or a person who voluntarily suffers such oath or obligation to be administered to him, or voluntarily takes the same, shall be fined not more than $200 and not less than $50; but this section shall not prohibit an oath or affidavit for the purpose of establishing a claim, petition or application by an individual or corporation, administered without intentional secrecy [this shows that where secrecy is intentional the oath is illegal] by a person authorized to administer oaths, or an oath or affidavit for the verification of commercial papers or documents relating to property, or which may be required by a public officer or tribunal of the United States, or of any State or any other country, nor abridge the authority of a magistrate."

Charles Sumner said: "Freemasonry is steadily usurping the reins of government, and must with slavery be destroyed in our country."

John Quincy Adams wrote: "I believe that the order of Freemasonry is one of the greatest moral and political evils under which this Union is laboring. Its oaths are in violation of the precepts of Jesus Christ, and of the laws of the land."

Charles G. Finney, president of Oberlin College, once a Master Mason, said: "It is a most intolerant and intolerable despotism; the most anomalous, absurd and abominable institution that can exist in a free country."

Which shall we have? Christ or the lodge? Christ excludes the lodge, and the lodge excludes Christ. Which will we have? Echo answers, "Which?"

ROMANISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

One of the most singular delusions that has ever been propagated in Europe is the notion that Roman Catholicism is making immense headway in the United States. Its position there is entirely due to emigration from poverty stricken and miserable Roman Catholic countries in Europe. The Protestants of Europe are, on the whole, so well off, so free, and so prosperous, that they are not tempted in the same way to cross the Atlantic. Rome has made scarcely any converts under the Stars and Stripes; but millions of unhappy Irish and Italian Roman Catholics from Europe have, of course, clung to their ancestral faith even in the land of the free.

But with all these recruits Rome has suffered fearful and irreparable losses in the United States. The census of 1890 was the first that approximated toward accuracy so far as religious statistics are concerned, because the commissioner appointed to secure these returns had the wisdom to insist that ministers of religion should in every case make their religious returns on oath with all the perils of a prosecution for perjury if the number were scandalously exaggerated. The result was that out of sixty-three millions of inhabitants, only seven millions were returned as Roman Catholics. This is five millions less than was popularly claimed. Further, if the Roman Catholics in the United States had retained their children and their grandchildren, they would now have numbered twenty-six millions. But in the free and Protestant atmosphere of the great commonwealth founded by the Pilgrim fathers, Rome has actually lost within the present century nineteen million adherents. Moreover, the Protestantism of the United Statesis of a very decided type. It is not a form of Anglicanism scarcely distinguishable from Romanism.

It is startling to the English mind to be informed that in the United States the Episcopal church, which represents the Established church of England, number, all told, including communicants, adherents, and school children, only half a million. Half a million out of sixty-three million, while there are at least ten million Baptists, ten million Congregationalists, ten million Presbyterians and twelve million Methodists.

It is quite true that the Roman Catholics have the wisdom to act together politically for their own religious objects, and that so long as the Protestants of America are divided and careless, the Roman hierarchy is able to gain certain advantages of publicity and of civic patronage. But the moment the over-whelming Protestant sentiment of the United States is evoked the power of Romanism is simply effaced. In America, as in England and everywhere else, the one great lesson for those who love what Mr. Chauncey Depew has so simply and finely called "the open Bible of the family fireside" is —cease to wrangle with one another, close your ranks, be vigilant and active on behalf of civil and religious freedom, and the future of the race is in your hands.

All this need not and must not imply any injustice or any unkindness to our Roman Catholic fellow citizens. On the contrary, let us invariably treat them with the justice and the courtesy which their fathers invariably refused us. Let us conquer them by kindness. Let us wean them from all that is sectarian and cruel by teaching with word and deed the supremacy of love.—Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, in the London Methodist Times.

FREEMASONRY IN POLITICS.

In the approaching contest for municipal place in our good city of Detroit we find that a majority of the contestants are members of the Masonic institution. All things between each being equal, the influence of all should be strictly in equipoise. All are good men and true, and separated from the association of each with the Masonic fraternity—which, of course, pre-supposes each to be a man above reproach and under the tongue of good report. The several political parties in these men represented have certainly made selections of men who in any station would do honor to the office. The fact that these men are respected and appreciated Masons should give perfect freedom from the charge that Masonic pressure will be brought to bear in the coming election. One hundred per cent matched with 100 per cent in Masonry leaves a perfect balance; hence it cannot be charged that one shall have (Masonically) the preference over the other. In short, we write in the interests of the "profane" more than in that of the "craft" when we say that Masonry knows no religion or politics, and the Mason outside of his lodge is as free as full freedom in these aims, opinions and ambitions can make him. This is why we are called Freemasons, and we rejoice in such limitless freedom. Still, human nature is much the same either in or out of the lodge, and the passion or propensity which, for the time being, holds the reins of reason generally drives over all intervening obstacles totally regardless of all restrictions, so that the deserved goal may be reached. Hence the Freemason of Toronto, Canada, rightfully condemns the action of certain brethren in that jurisdiction in their endeavors to gain office. All scheming for office in Masonry is out of place and should be stopped. That the coming contest will prove a warm one is fully conceded, and party spirit and even prejudice will run riot for a time. But Masonry should have no more to do with the final result than Methodism, nor obligatory bonds be bowed and bent to fit the sinuosities and curves of candidacy, because forsooth the candidate sports a Knight Templar or Consistory charm. Let the best man win and permit the people to say who shall lead and govern. We have no use for the man or men who would seek to make of Masonry a stepping-stone to reach the prize of political preferment. There is no place or sanction for such action in the institution of Masonry. Men do not honor the craft by their attachment to it, but, on the contrary, it crowns their brows with the laurels of honor, provided they are worthy. That worthiness rests largely in that perfect unity in which brethren should dwell and on which no extraneous element should have effect.—American Tyler, Detroit.

"COLLEGE ETHICS."

In an address to the Medical College of Indiana, President J. P. D. John uttered the following timely words:

"There is a sentiment too largely prevalent that the school boy or the college man is a law unto himself, and that he can do with impunity what would be disgraceful, or even criminal, if done by a man who is not so fortunate as to have his name on the school register.

"Put in plain English, the sentiment which prevails in many colleges whether professional or literary, is this: To tell a lie is wrong on the street, but right in college. To cheat is wrong in market, but right in college. To use personal violence is wrong in a saloon, but right in a college. To boycott is wrong in Ireland; wrong even in the business circles of the United States, but right in a college. To destroy property is wrong in a cowboy, but to deface walls or carry off gates and signboards is right in a college student. To howl and screech on the street is wrong in a drunken man, and should consign him to a diet of bread and water, but to make night hideous with unearthly yells is a sign of culture, provided the yells proceed from the throats of the college boys. A street-corner loafer who guys the passer-by is rude and insolent, but a crowd of college boys, hooting at the pedestrian who comes their way, is only giving vent to an excess of youthful spirit. To take a howling dog up a man's stairway, through his attic, and leave it on his roof half frightened to death, and half frightening to death the immediate neighbors, is wrong in a town boy, but right, even manly and honorable, in a college boy. To violate the Golden Rule is wrong in a heathen, but right in a Christian, provided the Christian happens to have his name on the college roll. The Golden Rule, so beautifully exemplified by the Divine Teacher, is binding upon the conscience of the pirate on the high seas; of the liquor seller, as the young man appears at the bar for his first drink; of the Indian with his tomahawk uplifted; of the gambler in his den of infamy—but, forsooth, this same Golden Rule was not made to measure the conscience of a Christian who has matriculated in a Christian college! * * *

"Once more; to restrain a man of his liberty without cause, and to add personal violence to this restraint, is wrong, even among savages; but to tie a young man to a bedpost, to shave his head, to hang him until he chokes, to put him in a perspiration and then give him a shower-bath of ice water, to put him in his bed which has been saturated with water, and after all these outrages to seal his lips with the threat of worse personal violence, or even death—this is only a huge joke! Such contemptible and criminal proceedings, it seems, are right or wrong according to the way we spell the word describing it. If we spell it as they do on the street, m-u-r-d-e-r, it is wrong; but it is all right and a great joke if we spell it as they do in some colleges, h-a-z-e.

"I do not claim that all of these evils exist in all of our colleges. In some of them these and other evils prevail, even in a more marked degree than I have described. In others they have been reduced to a minimum, and perhaps to some extent have been exterminated. The object of this address has been to point out the false standards of conduct which so generally prevail among college youth, and to insist that there is but one standard for student and non-student alike.

"What is right in college is right anywhere and everywhere. What is wrong anywhere else is wrong in college. The Golden Rule does not bend around a crooked college act. A foot is twelve inches in college and out of it. A pound is sixteen ounces in the store and in the class-room. A dollar is a hundred cents on Christmas day, it is a hundred cents on examination day, it will be a hundred cents on the judgment day."

GEO. W. CLARK'S REMINISCENCES.

Many will recognize an old friend and staunch reformer in the following notice, which was clipped from the Hampshire County Journal, of Northampton, Mass. Mr. Clark's reminiscences embrace more than half a century of our country's most eventful history, and cannot fail to interest a large circle of readers:

"SOME INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

"In the city of Detroit, Mich., there lives to-day an old man who was almost as famous in the old abolition days as William Lloyd Garrison and Wendell Phillips. His name is George W. Clark. He is now eighty-three years of age; and he it was who set to music and sang the stirring words of Whittier, Longfellow, and other poets who strengthened anti-slavery sentiment by their inspired words. Mr. Clark visited New England in those 'days that tried men's souls' (Northampton among other places), and became acquainted with the late Dea. J. P. Williston, the Burleighs, Sylvester Graham and others who then led the anti-slavery sentiment here. Through a friend of the Journal, who is acquainted with Mr. Clark, we are able to announce that the old anti slavery singer will contribute his reminiscences of experiences in New England to the columns of this paper, in two or three articles, beginning next week. We believe our readers, young and old, will find it an instructive story. The incidents of the abolition days are still of thrilling interest to every lover of his country, and the men who dared and suffered, without other hope of reward than an approving conscience, are fast passing away. The story of every one of them ought to be told before they leave this earth, for the encouragement of truth and justice, and for this reason we shall be glad to publish Mr. Clark's reminiscences, as proposed."

THE N. C. A. AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The National Christian Association has been represented at the World's Fair by an exhibit of its publications in charge of Rev. J. P. Stoddard and wife of Boston. This included an exposition of all the leading secret organizations, with the opinions of Joseph Cook, D. L. Moody, A. J. Gordon, Charles Sumner, William H. Seward, and other eminent ministers and statesmen, as to their evil and dangerous character, conspicuously displayed. Mr. Stoddard and his capable wife explained the exhibit and preached the Gospel separation from all the works of darkness. The influence of this work was very wide and cannot fail to result in much good.—The Christian Witness.

CATHOLICISM AND MASONRY RULE IN ITALY.

The Rev. A. O'Loughlin, Rome, in the Irish Ecclesiastical Record of the current month, draws a lurid picture of the state of Italy and especially of Rome. Everything is going to the bad; poverty has increased to an alarming extent; bankruptcies are the order of the day; crimes of every kind are committed unchecked in the open day. Last year twenty-six thousand beggars were expelled from Rome, and still "from gutter and protecting doorway a hundred arms will be stretched out towards you; no bread, no work, will be the cries you hear on all sides." Deposits in banks have decreased in two years to the amount of £8,000,000, and the increase in mortgaged property has been £60,000,000 in the same period. Taxes have been raised to a degree that is unbearable; everything is taxed: food, wearing apparel, and income, however small; a man must pay five shillings in the pound income tax. In consequence of this taxation, food has increased in price. As in Ireland in the famine times, so it is in Italy to-day; there is a stampede to get out of the country, and the emigrant ships are crowded with passengers. There is an accumulation of evidence taken from even Masonic papers that proves the woeful state of public morals.—New York Catholic Review.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An October day.—The Republican victory.—Cremation.—"Bent on the best."—The cinnamon cigarette.—A "liberal" creed.

"What is so rare as a day in June?" sings Lowell; but what is so rare as a day in late October, when with every breath we seem to be drinking in the very nectar of the gods? when the sun is just pleasantly warm without the enervating heat of summer, and the trees stand out with scant foliage or bare limbs against the clear background of the sky, like some wonderful etching. It is a beauty rarer and more subtle than that of the most perfect June day that ever trod warm and glowing over our New England hills; and why should not the October of our lives be every whit as beautiful? The roses may hang dead on their stalks, but is not the garnered grain better? How strikingly appropriate, by the way, is every fruit to its particular season as well as its particular habitat. The strawberry is as much a child of early summer as the cranberry is of the fall. The delicate, crimson, cone-shaped balls, studded with yellow seeds, which gave me in childhood the impression that this was the reason it was called strawberry, seem made to blush under June skies, to keep company with her roses, and be an epitome in itself of all that is sweet and luscious, rich and tender in that month of months. But the cranberry of the Cape Cod marches—coming to its maturity after the beating rains and fierce gales of the September equinox have swept the sky to crystalline clearness—could there be a greater contrast? I can never see the bright, red berry without feeling the salt tang of the east wind, hearing the cry of some solitary white-winged sea-bird, and, pervading it all, the deep, mysterious monotone of old ocean, which, like the living creatures John saw in his vision, is never silent, night nor day. Ah! it is a brave berry, with much about it that is typical of what is best and noblest in a genuine New England character. It craves no cultivated Eden to grow in; it hides as shyly as did ever "modest merit" under its green leaves, and when "the stormy tempests blow," careering on from the fierce Atlantic, it holds on by its delicate, thread-like stem, that hardly looks strong enough to withstand a summer zephyr, with a glorious persistency, a grand stick-and-hand-to-a-tive-ness—the real Yankee grit.

Massachusetts has gone back once more to her first Republican love, and the agony of election is over for another year. The Prohibition vote of nearly 8,000 was not a bad showing. It would probably have mounted higher, had it not been claimed for Greenhalge that he was strongly prohibitory in sentiment and would do his best to carry out anti-saloon measures in the Legislature. This remains to be seen. Such claims have been made before, and proved as deceitful as the desert mirage. The idea of Knowlton as Attorney General is not pleasant to those who remember the malignancy,—no other word will describe it, though satanic would hardly be too strong—of his closing speech in the Borden case. A man who will override all justice, truth and common-sense in his efforts to find evidence of guilt where none exists, is not the right one to hold such a position. The financial situation has doubtless contributed much to Republican gains all over New England. The part played by the reform element is not always easy to see. In Massachusetts, however, the A. P. A. are numerous enough to be quite a factor in the political situation. Naturally enough, they did what they could to defeat the Democratic candidate, Russel, who, it is said, has given large gifts to Roman Catholic churches, as well as the Jesuit Collins.

The remains of Lucy Stone are to be cremated as soon as the crematory now building at Mt. Hope is ready for use. So that even in death she was still the pioneer of advanced ideas. This new method of disposing of the dead will take many years to become popular; yet when one stops to think of it, the old familiar ideas of the worm and the shroud, and the slow process of going back to earth, which our modern system of burial makes as slow and unnatural as possible, are really much more calculated to shock a sensitive mind. But the prejudices of custom and education die hard.

"We saw her in the world and in her home, Bent on the best in every little deed."

These two lines, from Mrs. Kate Tannatt Woods' poem, read at the memorial services held for Lucy Stone, seem to me the very ideal of a beautiful womanly life, holding every duty, small and great, in even balance, and everywhere and always "bent on the best." That was the secret of it:—never to be content with the inferior, either in attainment, in action, or in knowledge.

Cinnamon cigarettes are the last fad with Connecticut school-boys, now that the sale of the tobacco cigarette is forbidden. Parents and teachers need to be Argus eyed; for while cinnamon cigarettes may be comparatively innocent as an agent for physical harm, it will learn the boys the vile habit of smoking as effectually as the forbidden sort.

At the late conference in the Claerndon Street Baptist church, Dr. Gordon spoke of the general drift towards secularization, saying that the churches with dance-halls and smoking and billiard rooms are fast becoming the most popular. A powerful commentary on his words is Rev. C. A. Dinsmoe's plan of campaign, as formulated in the Willimantic Chronicle. About thirty young men of his congregation were invited to meet him in the church parlors, and there listen to a plan for making the Sunday evening service more attractive, by forming a Young Men's Sunday Evening Club, which should have charge of that service, after about fifteen minutes of the time had been given up to preaching. So novel a plan could only be made successful by such a happy combination of gifts and graces, spiritually and intellectually, as we do not always find in our young laymen. But how about the young laywomen? Mr. Dinsmoe's plan seems to leave them out altogether, and this is, in the beginning, a mistake. But as one of the things that he hopes for in the future, as "a power for good and a magnet for attraction of young men," is a large and well-equipped gymnasium building, the whole conception will be found, when it comes to practice, a grand mistake. The church which tries to make its services "attractive" in any other way than by holding up Christ as the Saviour of sinners and the only hope of a lost world, will find to her shame and sorrow that she cannot compete with the world. She must play a losing game in the end. Mr. Dinsmore is pastor of a Congregational church, whose creed, he states, "is the simplest and most liberal on the continent.... a recognition of the example of Jesus Christ, and an effort to exemplify that life," being all that is required in one seeking membership. Alas for the pastor and the church to whom Christ is nothing more than this! No wonder that men are weary of such an emasculated Christianity.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, 1893.

Miss Clara Barton told the sad story of the sufferings of the colored people in the recent storm-swept Port Royal islands off the coast of South Carolina, to an appreciative audience at the Washington headquarters of the Red Cross Society, on Monday evening. Six thousand houses were destroyed and thirty thousand of the inhabitants of the eighty islands are without even the barest necessities. At the request of the governor of South Carolina the Red Cross Society has undertaken to care for and aid these poor people until next year's crops can be grown. Miss Barton sent a petition to Congress, just before adjournment, asking that $50,000 be appropriated to aid in this work, but the joint resolution authorizing the appropriation was unacted upon. Although disappointed, Miss Barton was not surprised at the failure to get the appropriation from Congress, and she will go right ahead in personally directing the work of relieving the sufferers and trusting that private contributions will, as they have often done before, supply the money and other things needed. The Red Cross Society has purchased 500,000 feet of lumber, to be used in rebuilding houses, and contributions of either money or useful articles will be thankfully received.

The impression made upon the good people of Washington by the International Christian Workers' Association, which held its sixth annual convention here, was such a pleasant one that it was determined to waylay a number of the eastern members of the association when they passed through on the way to Atlanta, Georgia, where their eighth annual convention will be held, and give them a brotherly greeting and God-speed. The greeting took the form of two meetings, one presided over by Rev. John C. Collins, of New Haven, Conn., secretary of the association, and the other held under the auspices of the Central Union Mission. Among the speakers was Rev. E. P. Hammond, who recalled to some of the older people present the remarkable series of revival meetings he held upon the steps of the Capitol building in 1876. These meetings were perhaps the most memorable ever held in Washington; they continued daily for ten weeks, and audiences of from 15,000 to 20,000 were the rule during the greater portion of that time. Much good work has been done by those who were converted at those meetings and several of the converts were on hand to greet Mr. Hammond. The delegates to the convention were yesterday sent on their way rejoicing.

A very interesting entertainment is that furnished by the "Story of the Reformation," which was presented here this week for the benefit of St. John's English Lutheran church. The story consists of a lecture upon Luther and his times, delivered by Mrs. H. E. Monroe, of Philadelphia, and brought all the more vividly before the audience by a series of stereopticon views and of living tableaux, the characters in costumes of the Luther period.

Dedicatory services were held Sunday in the Gunton-Temple Memorial church, built and presented to the congregation of what was once known as the Unity Presbyterian church, by Mrs. Mary Gunton Temple as a memorial to her father and husband. The material used in the new building is Pennsylvania serpentine stone with Indiana limestone trimmings. It is a combination of the Gothic and Romanesque in style, and is decidedly handsome and artistic, both outside and inside.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia ignored the construction put upon the law by their own attorney, and ordered that no saloonkeeper who had applied for a liquor license should be arrested for selling liquor without a license, pending action upon his application. To have accepted the construction put upon the law by the attorney for the district would have been distasteful to the powerful liquor interests, and would also have been an innovation that people have ceased to expect from our public officials.

The coincidence of three Washington ministers having made the assassination of Mayor Harrison the basis of their sermons last Sunday, has been widely commented upon. In the first place it was unsual for our ministers to take such a theme; and in the next place some of the language and sentiments used by them was still more unusual here. There are many things which should never be said in a pulpit.

If enthusiastic work thoroughly systemized will accomplish it, the local Christian Endeavorers will succeed in bringing the 1896 National convention of that popular organization to Washington. Although the time is nearly three years off, they recognize that no time is to be lost, as the conventions for 1894–5 have already been located in other cities.

Edward Atkinson, said to be the leading fiscal statistician of our times, says that it costs five dollars a head to run our government, but the annual cost of spirits, beer and wine is fifteen dollars ahead.

The thirty-fifth report of the Reformatory and Refuge Union states that in Great Britain and Ireland 145,000 persons are every year committed to prison as drunkards, of whom 12,000 are men and the rest women.

The medical department of the general post-office, London, in a health document for preventing disease, prints for the benefit of postal employes, in large type, the following: "It can not be too distinctly understood that dangerous qualities of water are not obviated by the addition of wines or spirits."

REFORM NEWS.

THE COLLEGE AGENT IN KANSAS.

LAWRENCE, Kan., Nov. 4, 1893.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Leaving Chicago on the 30th ult., I had a prosperous journey to Kansas City. This place has extended over the Missouri river into Kansas, and has enlarged wonderfully since the war. After I got on the cars to go to Lawrence they stood still for nearly two hours, waiting for a delayed train. It was difficult to keep cool with the car windows wide open, the sun was so hot; but the next day it was cold enough. This morning we had ice half an inch thick.

On my arrival in Lawrence I was kindly received by Rev. and Mrs. E. S. Bunce, and made very much at home. There is an Indian school here called the Haskill Institute. It is supported by the United States government, and is under the superintendence of Charles F. Meserve. There are between four and five hundred students of both sexes, and quite a number are not more than half-grown. It is an industrial training school. Lessons are given to the young men in farming, at the carpenter's bench, in the blacksmith shop, and in the use of the mason's trowel. Also housekeeping in all its various forms, and millinery and mantua-making are taught the young women. And joined to this is a good common school education in English for all. The necessary means to carry on this good work, and to pay the teachers, is furnished by the government. The superintendent reports directly to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington. Upon consultation there did not appear to be any call for our reform books at this institution.

THE UNIVERSITY OF KANSAS.

In 1861 Congress donated seventy-two sections of land for the use and support of a university in Kansas. It was accepted; and now there are five departments, with large and commodious buildings for them, here in Lawrence: the school of arts, of engineering, of pharmacy, of law, and of music and paintings; in all, there are 1,038 students of both sexes registered. And those who have their residence in the State pay no tuition.

On Friday, the 3d inst., I visited the university and called on Chancellor F. H. Snow, LL. D., who introduced me to the library. Miss Carrie M. Watson is the librarian. There are 18,241 volumes, besides unbound pamphlets and circulars. There is one book favoring the lodge among them: "Morris on Masonry in the Holy Land." After making arrangements to place some reform literature in the library, I heard a recitation in part in the Greek of Homer's Iliad.

Yours, S. F. PORTER.

A DAY IN ROME.

UTICA, N. Y., Nov. 10, 1893.

That is, in Rome, New York, preparing for the State Convention in Utica. This is an old city, centrally located in Oneida county near the headwaters of the Mohawk river. Its history runs back into the last century, but the most interesting chapter to the Cynosure readers may be found in President Finney's Autobiography. This is an account of one of the most wonderful revivals of religion ever perhaps experienced in an American city. The Spirit of God came down in mighty power, smiting sinners with conviction, and prostrating them even in their homes. Business was practically suspended, the houses of prayer crowded, the very atmosphere seemed to be pervaded with the mighty influence. For once conscience had its ruling place, and the chief business of the people was to get right with God. People driving into town felt they were in a peculiar atmosphere, as if the very air was charged with heavenly batteries. This mighty work is still remembered, but alas! the abnormal condition of the world on top has been resumed, the lodges outnumber the churches, and there is a dram-bar for about every 100 people. There are evidences of solid wealth in the well-laid walks, the strong-walled homes refitted from one generation to another, and the ample houses of worship. Italian and papal Rome is vigorous, too, with one great brick building, and another, even larger, of stone just rising above the foundation.

I found a most cordial welcome waiting from Rev. Nathan Wardner, which Mrs. Wardner as warmly seconded. The arrangements which the pastors of the Welsh Congregational and Presbyterian churches wished to make were stopped by lodge members; but the Wesleyan Methodist pulpit was ready, morning and evening, and it was my privilege to speak to an excellent and attentive congregation at both services, discussing in the evening the demon-worship of the lodge. Bro. Wardner ably seconded the argument. One friend, who attends the church but cannot join because he prefers to hold to Odd-fellowship, went home a serious and troubled man.

In the afternoon Bro. Wardner ably addressed a well-attended meeting of the W. C. T. U. in the Universalist church, otherwise, I am happy to say, unoccupied. The ladies called for a few words from one who had seen their beautiful Temple in Chicago and knew something of the work of the Union since that early day when Miss F. E. Willard climbed the long stairways to the Cynosure office to frame, with Mrs. E. A. Cook, the early constitution of the greatest of women's organizations.

During the hour following, Rev. Mr. Taylor of the Presbyterian church addressed a large number of young men and women in the Y. M. C. A. hall on choosing Christ, in so clear, forcible and persuasive a manner that it seemed impossible to resist it. Secretary Huie is an example to many Y. M. C. A. managers in his fervency in religion and the friendliness of his manner. He wants the Cynosure among the papers of the reading-room. I look for a good delegation from Rome to the convention.

At Oriskany I found of the ministers only the Episcopal at home. He is not a lodge man, as are so many of that persuasion. Notices in the stores led to inquiry and argument with a good opportunity for seed-sowing.

Here, in Utica, matters improve on acquaintance. More pastors are interested, and promise to attend the convention. In one church, the Evangelical, I hope for an arrangement with Pastor Miller to speak Sabbath evening. He is a Naperville graduate (Northwestern College) and reveres, as we all do, the memory of Dr. A. A. Smith. The editor of the Star asks for an article reporting the convention and its arguments against the lodge. Some of the pastors will take part in conducting devotional exercises at the different sittings of the meeting. God is with us and hears the prayers of many who have been pleading for a blessing on the convention.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NOTE FROM REV. W. F. DAVIS.

MT. WASHINGTON, CHELSEA, Mass., November 6, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Wilt thou kindly permit me to say through the columns of thy paper, in reply to many inquiries, that I am now at liberty to conduct All-day Gospel meetings, in places where Christians desire to use my service in a united effort to win souls to Christ, to build up believers on their most holy faith, and are willing to sink all other considerations in earnest cooperation to this end. Applications will be filled in order of acceptance. Sincerely thy servant in Christ,

WM. F. DAVIS.

VICTIMS OF MASONIC PERSECUTION.

GWENN DALE, Ind. Ter., Oct. 20, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I received your good paper of the 19th, and of course read it nearly through at one sitting. I am becoming more and more interested in the work of saving our Christian brethren from the power of the lodge. I seem to have an enlarged view of the evil of the whole secret empire; and while I want to always write and preach the truth in love, I pray God he may ever keep me from descending to the sickening effeminacy of dealing with such abominations with six-button kid-gloves on. In other words, I want my testimony to be red-hot against this evil that is leading the church of Jesus Christ off into apostacy.

The editor of the Indian Chieftain, M. E. Milford, has become so enraged over the position taken by us that he has begun an expose of our humble orphanage and institution, descending to the meanest kind of scurrility and abuse, but never stating in his sheet why he has adopted this course. Prior to our attack on Masonry, he was the best of friends—for the sake of the money there was in printing John-Three-Sixteen. But as quick as we came out on Masonry he, and the lodge here backing him, began a series of persecutions and boycottings, the principal part of which consisted in personal abuse.

If ever we needed the prayers of God's people to keep sweet amid all this, we need them now. And if ever we needed help in the shape of a good power-press, we need it now. Many of our subscribers "walk no more with us." They do not like our method of fighting Masonry, they say. And yet they claim to be Christians. If we had a press we could print our large edition and save considerable expense, for, as I wrote to Brother Phillips, we have to send the paper away up into Kansas in order to get it printed. Every time we put it on the cars we dread lest the forms be ruined by emissaries of the lodge. We have been made to suffer for our temerity in many other ways. But God is caring for us. Bless his name forever!

Our orphanage is some five miles west of Vinita, and we do not have all the facilities we need in order to getting out the kind of a paper we would like to. All this work that we are doing is done without a cent of remuneration. The paper is not yet established on a paying basis, and so we have to economize and reach down into our pockets in order to keep the printer paid up. By the way, when the publisher of the Chieftain so abruptly stopped the publication of our paper, it left us about $30 in debt to him, and we are looking to our Master daily for enough money to pay this gentleman of the lodge what is due him. Times are very hard down in this Indian country, and money is very scarce. But Phil. 4: 19 is still true. Hallelujah!

Will you ask the readers of the Cynosure to pray for us. We are but a little handful and the enemy is strong.

Yours, against the devil, J. E. WOLFE.

LET US STAND TOGETHER.

NEWMARKET, N. H., November, 1893.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—One advantage of the National Christian Association and the Christian Cynosure is to enable Christians to stand together for the truth, and to be ready to lend a hand to a brother who may be suddenly and violently attacked by Satan. In my first conflict with the Baalism and barbarism of the lodge empire, no words can describe the value of the sympathy and aid I received from the National Christian Association. Let us magnify this opportunity of service.

I am led to these suggestions by the sharp conflict through which John-Three-Sixteen is passing. The Cynosure has already given the facts, which are that this heroic little paper bore true and emphatic testimony against the folly and wickedness of the Masonic lodge, and the result was that the Masonic printer refused to print the paper, and its publisher, Rev. J. E. Wolfe, was compelled to go to a neighboring State to get his paper printed. Shall we allow Satan to crush Mr. Wolfe?

John-Three-Sixteen is published at Gwenn Dale, Indian Territory, by J. E. Wolfe and his wife, Kate T. Wolfe, who are also missionaries and maintain an industrial school for Indian youth. As I understand it Bro. Wolfe would like to print his own paper, the Indian youth already setting the type. My suggestion is that the N. C. A. investigate the matter so far as is necessary, find out how much help Bro. Wolfe needs to fit up a humble printing office, and allow the supporters of the N. C. A. to donate the money, the Cynosure manager acting as agent.

Some may think such an effort would lessen financial support now given to other reform enterprises to which we are already pledged. I think not. Churches and societies die of doing nothing. Christian activity gives strength and growth. The W. C. T. U. strikes rum harder blows because at the same time it is pounding the life out of forty other social evils. In order to a healthy national life the N. C. A. should attempt and do more and not less. There is that giveth and yet increaseth. There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.

The New Volume of Pen and Pencil Series.

WELSH PICTURES Drawn with Pen and Pencil.

By D. Lewis Jones, Morris Jones, Edward Ffoulkes, H. Elvet Lewis, D. Tyssil Evans, D. Davies and O. M. Edwards. Edited by Richard Lovett, M. A. With many Illustrations. Imperial 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, boxed..... 3.20

"'Welsh pictures' is the work of ten Welshmen, among whom illustrating the beauties of Wales has been parcelled out according to the special familiarity of each. The result is a pleasing volume."—London Times.

THE EARTHLY FOOTPRINTS OF OUR RISEN LORD, Illumined.

A continuous narrative of the Four Gospels according to The Revised Version, with introduction by Rev. John Hall, D. D. Illustrated by 113 full-page half tone re-productions. Small 4to, cloth.....net 1.50
Gilt edge, with silk book mark, boxed.....net 2.00
Full morocco, flexible, gilt edges, round corners, boxed.....net 3.75

Pictures reflecting the best in sacred art from Raphael to the present day are scattered profusely through the book.

"To many the life of the Christ will be a new book in this form. Though beyond the introduction it contains no word except what is found in the four Gospels, yet when read continuously, without the breaks necessarily made by the different stories of the four evangelists, the narrative takes on new force and lifelikeness. The very fact that this is not our usual method of reading the Word will give it a new reality."—Golden Rule.

A GIFT OF LOVE, and Loving Greetings for 365 Days.

By Rose Porter. Long 18mo. Paper cloth..... 1.00
White cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.25
Decorated silk, silver top, in box..... 1.75

"'A Gift of Love' is the work of a loving heart. It contains a text of Scripture for every day of the year with the addition of an appropriate thought in poetry of prose all bearing on the theme of love. The work must have called for a great amount of patient toil. But it has not been spent in vain, for the volume will prove a blessing to many a soul. To use it day by day for a year thoughtfully and prayerfully, must result in a rich growth in love on the part of the user. The author is well known and esteemed for her previous works' sake."—The N. Y. Observer.

THE CHRISTIAN LIFE SERIES.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, containing CHRISTIAN LIVING, THE PRESENT TENSES OF THE BLESSED LIFE, AND THE SHEPHERD PSALM. 3 vols. in box. 18mo, cloth..... 1.50
White vellum cloth, silver top, in box..... 1.75

D. L. Moody says: "Few books of recent years are better adapted to instruct and help Christians than those of this author. He is a man mighty in the scriptures, saturated with Bible facts and truths."

PRAYERS FROM THE POETS.

By Martha Harger. 16mo, two colored cloth, gilt top..... 1.00
Leatherette, boxed..... 1.50

"This volume is admirable. The Prayer are better suited to some of our moods than formal Litanies and are selected from excellent sources. The book will be a dear treasure to many hearts."—The Churchman.

KIN-DA-SHON'S WIFE.

An Alaskan Story. By Mrs. Eugene S. Willard, Home Missionary of the Presbyterian Board of America to Alaska. With illustrations. 8vo, cloth..... 1.50

"Being a close observer and in deep sympathy with the native population in their struggles towards a Christian Civilization, Mrs. Willard has gained a more intelligent knowledge of their character, of their needs and hindrances, than perhaps any other person."—Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

HEROES OF THE GOODWIN SANDS.

By Rev. Thomas Stanley Treanor. With many illustrations. 8vo, Cloth..... 1.50

"It is a book of most engrossing interest, and as stimulating as it is readable."—The Record.

THE GREAT LONDON DAILIES.

By H. W. Massingham. Profusely illustrated. 12mo, cloth..... 1.00

Very welcome to all who like to look behind the scenes and see how the great London dailies are worked.

New Editions.

The Prayer Meeting and Its Improvement.

By Rev. LEWIS O. THOMPSON. Eighth edition, cloth, $1.25.

"Most heartily do we wish this work a wide circulation, both among pastors and people, and we hope it may do much toward the lifting of the prayer-meeting into that higher place which it ought to hold among the grand instrumentalities in the kingdom of the Master."—Congregationalist.

"We do not remember to have met with a work so suggestive, and we heartily commend it to both pastors and private members."—Baptist Weekly.

The Crisis of Missions. By Rev. ARTHUR T. PIERSON, D. D. Cloth, $1.25; paper, 35c.

"We do not hesitate to say that this book is the most purposeful, earnest, and intelligent review of the mission work and field which has ever been given to the church."—Christian Statesman.

The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life.

By HANNAH WHITALL SMITH. One hundredth thousand. Issued in fourteen styles, from 50c. to $2.50. Send for circular.

"To commend this work would seem almost superfluous; and yet to young Christians who may not know it, we cannot refrain from saying, Buy this book, and keep it with your Bible for constant study, until you have thoroughly mastered, in your own experience, the 'secret' of which it tells. It will transform the dark days of your life, as it has transformed those of thousands before you, into days of heavenly light."—New York Evangelist.

The Topical Text Book. Fourth edition.

16 mo., cloth, 60c.

This little volume is a worker's most useful tool. It collates all Scripture passages under their topical headings, and for this reason proves far more helpful in studying a subject than the best concordance.

"I find one of the very best ways to study the Scripture is to study topically."—D. L. Moody.

Stalker's Life of Christ. Twelfth edition.

Stalker's Life of St. Paul. Fourth edition.

12 mo., cloth, each, 60c.

These works by Professor James Stalker, M. A., are unique in their compact putting of these lives into such condensed form without injurious brevity. They are being taken up as text books by Biblical classes in all parts of the country, thus proving their practical value.

Grace and Truth under Twelve Different Aspects.

By W. P. MACKAY, M. A. Paper, 35c.; cloth, 75c. Two hundred and fiftieth thousand.

This remarkable sale can only be attributed to the very practical character of this work as a guide to the inquirer and a work of helpful instruction for the immature Christian. It is of this volume Mr. D. L. Moody said: "I know of no work in print better adapted to place in the hands of the inquirer."

Notes and Suggestions for Bible Readings.

By S. R. BRIGGS. Sixtieth thousand. 8 vo, cloth. $1.00; flexible, 75c.

Edition after edition of this work has been called for until it would seem the demand must be supplied. The sales however, increase rather than otherwise.

Feathers for Arrows. By Rev. C. H. SPURGEON. 16 mo., cloth, $1.00.

Few preachers have made such effective use of pointed illustrations as the well known pastor of the great Metropolitan Tabernacle. Here he has given us a large cluster of his best with liberty to enjoy and employ.

Revell's Record for Church Treasurers.

Size No. 1, $1.50; Size No. 2, $2.00.

Popular because practical—valuable because time saving—the only record for weekly envelope system that reduces the treasurer's work to the minimum.

OBITUARY.

REV. SAMUEL SMITH

died at the residence of I. W. DeLap, Williamstown, Iowa, October 18, 1893, after a brief illness (although he had long been a great sufferer from Bright's disease), aged 78 years.

Bro. Smith was born in Clonmel, Tipperary Co., Ireland. At the age of ten he was converted, and soon after began to preach the Gospel, working faithfully in the Wesleyan Methodist church for the advancement of the cause of Christ. He afterward united with the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1838 he was married to Miss Mary Lamphere, who was also an active member of the same church.

In 1839, having embraced the cause of slavery, and feeling the oppressive power of the M. E. church government, they felt it a duty to leave it, although with sadness on the part of both.

Then, for a short time, they were identified with another professedly Christian church, but finding it cursed with principles of rum and slavery, they decided that it was not a suitable home for active Christians. So, in 1842, looking eastward, he joined Orange Scott, who had then raised the banner of reform in support of the Gospel of Christ. As members of this little band they became active in the work of reform, striving always to be and do right in the sight of the Lord. "Holiness to the Lord," at whatever cost, was their motto, and the glorious Gospel that he preached to others was always precious to himself.

He now sleeps in peace, to waken in the presence of the redeemed on high. After funeral services he was laid to rest beside the remains of his wife, who preceded him to the better land.

A FRIEND.

IN BRIEF.

It has been estimated that the captivity in Babylon, seventy years, was just equal to the Sabbaths of the four hundred and twenty years, which had been swallowed up in the national greed for business and pleasure. We do not vouch for the calculation, but it coincides perfectly with our estimate of the fatuity of attempting to cheat the Almighty. And it may be worth our while to inquire whether our great national "prosperity," of which it has been our habit to boast, has not been partially an overdraft on the divine bank, and for which we must settle sooner or later. When we appropriate that which is the Lord's, whether money or time, or talent of any kind, it is fallacy to expect that the day of reckoning will be forgotten.

One-fifth of the world's population, of 1,480,000,000, is found by Gen. A. W. Greeley to live in the 500 cities in which the population exceeds 50,000. Of these cities, the United States has 85; India, 76; Great Britain, 72; Germany, 47; Russia, 34; France, 33; Japan, 17; Spain, 16; Austria-Hungary, 15; Italy, 14. One-sixth of these cities belong to the United States, which also contains three of the ten cities having 1,000,000 inhabitants. Of the largest 100 cities, 52 are under the control of English-speaking races. Populous cities are a modern product, as is shown by the fact that the United States had no city of 100,000 inhabitants at the beginning of the century, and England had but one, while these countries now have 28 and 24 respectively.

Popular Everywhere.

Beginning with a small local sale in a retail drug store, the business of Hood's Sarsaparilla has steadily increased until there is scarcely a village or hamlet in the United States where it is unknown.

To-day Hood's Sarsaparilla stands at the head in the medicine world, admired in prosperity and envied in merit by thousands of would-be competitors. It has a larger sale than any other medicine before the American public, and probably greater than all other sarsaparillas and blood-purifiers combined.

THERE'S DISCOMFORT, pain and griping, with the usual pills. Take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and there's nothing of the kind. You regulate the dose according to your needs—one little Pellet for a gentle laxative or corrective, three for a cathartic—but it's all perfectly easy and natural. And the help that comes in this way, lasts.

These tiny, sugar-coated granules are the smallest in size and the easiest to take. They absolutely and permanently cure Constipation, Indigestion, Sick Headache, Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels.

For the worst cases of chronic Catarrh, for Catarrhal Headache, impaired taste, smell, or hearing, and all the troubles that follow Catarrh, there's nothing so prompt to relieve and so certain to cure, as Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. Its proprietors offer $500 reward for any case of Catarrh which they cannot cure.

The Christian Cynosure.

HENRY M. HUGUNIN - - Editor.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1893.

SECTARIANISM AND PARTISANSHIP.

Sectarianism, like partisanship, is one of the hindrances to the progress of our reform. A church or a party that derives money or influence, or both, from secret lodges, is not likely to oppose the evils of the secret system. Hence, we look for but little support from such sources.

A man, or a number of men, in a church may (for instance) know and deprecate the evil effects of Freemasonry upon the best interests of society; yet in the church there may be many members of the fraternity whose fellowship and social influence are indispensable to the man who is not a Mason, and whose peace and patronage would be jeopardized by his opposition to, or separation from, them. So in politics, aid and comfort from members of secret societies is not to be despised, but rather coveted, in order to prevent loss to private interests. In either case toleration of lodge evils becomes to the non-Mason a necessity.

We know of one active Anti-mason who claims to have expended more money in the conflict against the lodge system than he now posseses; yet he says that his religion keeps him from reading the Cynosure. As we interpret him, the opposition of the N. C. A. to all secret societies offends his devotion to the papacy, which this Association looks upon as the greatest, if not the most subtle, of secret societies. These are some of the difficulties we have to contend with; yet the Cynosure is not designed to be sectarian. It opposes the lodge system, whether fostered in churches or saloons, and advises liberty of conscience, where that liberty is not in opposition to the law of God. As to the various secret societies, it is evident that they are not in harmony with the teachings of Christ, but in their practices and theology are his enemies; and if any church fosters the lodge (knowing its true character), its claims as a church of Christ are not well-founded.

Christianity is an element extremely foreign to modern politics, which is a fruitful field for secret societies to cultivate. Indeed, it is difficult to find a community in which the influence of the lodge is not in power, corrupting legislation and the judiciary; and it matters but little which we analyze, we shall find the lodge pervading all the dominant parties.

LAY AND CLERICAL.

One of the most serious mistakes made by the Christian world, and one that has tended greatly to retard the work of evangelization, is that there is a distinction in rights and a corresponding distinction in the duties of the clergy and the laity. The notion is doubtless heathen in its origin, and grew out of the idea of a sacerdotal class, to whom was committed the worship of the gods.

It is quite generally held that the right to preach the Gospel, to administer the ordinances, and even to pronounce the apostolic benediction, belongs alone to the clergy, and that it is a sort of sacrilege for a layman to do these things.

That this conception of the ministry and of the laity has no warrant in the sacred Scriptures, is evident when we consider the teachings of the apostles and the example of the apostolic churches.

Luke tells us that "they that were scattered abroad upon the persecution that arose about Stephen, traveled as far as Phenice and Cyprus and Antioch, preaching the Word....And some of them were men of Cyprus and Cyrene, which, when they came to Antioch, spake unto the Grecians, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them, and great multitudes believed and turned unto the Lord." Luke 11: 19–21.

Now these faithful preachers, whose labors God had so wonderfully blessed, were all laymen and women. There is no evidence that there was a single ordained minister among them. The apostles, we are expressly told (Acts 8: 1, 14), remained at Jerusalem. These disciples preached the Gospel because they believed it. They were called, as we all are, to execute the Great Commission: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." They simply did what Philip had done when he found the Lord. He went and told Nathaniel the glad tidings of great joy. Their commission was from on high.

Such is the work of our Bro. Moody, who is simply a lay-preacher, whose labors for more than a quarter of a century God has most wonderfully blessed.

Doubtless some are called of God to devote their lives to the ministry of the Word, and there is an orderly way of recognizing that fact. Such setting apart has apostolic example, but to hold that such only have the right to preach and administer ordinances is without any warrant in the Scriptures.

We talk about "administering the communion." No man can do that. To break and eat bread is one thing; but to have communion with God and his people is quite another and a different thing. Doubtless, all things should be done "decently and in order;" but when a false sense of the sacredness of the Christian ministry is made the reason for inactivity on the part of those who have no official standing as ministers, or, worse still, for the repression of honest efforts to declare the glad tidings, because of the lack of ordination, then such sense of sacredness becomes a snare and a stumbling-block.

IOWA.

Republicans claim that in the State election, last week, "prohibition received its death-blow in Iowa;" because Jackson, the Republican candidate for governor, "running on a local-option platform, was elected by a handsome majority, and the Prohibitionists forever sent to the rear." The same Republican paper from which the above is copied, advises its party in Iowa to "pass a local-option law in place of the useless prohibitory one which now encumbers the statutes."

Looking for the causes of this Republican triumph, they may be summed up in a few brief sentences. Stung by the opposition and defeat which they have suffered for four years past, the Republicans, regardless of everything but their success at the sacrifice of morality, shame and money, drew into their ranks every voter and influence that favored the liquor-traffic; and while they call it a Republican victory, its dishonor is shared by the worst elements of all cliques and factions that uphold the saloon.

We can hardly believe that the Prohibitionists of Iowa are ready to yield their power peacefully to the dominant party, which is only a part of the saloon-interest with which they are at war. We believe they are in a better temper than to sit down and whine over their defeat, but, trusting in God and the justice of their cause, we believe they will rally with renewed energy and increased numbers and yet achieve triumph in the name and strength of the Lord of hosts.

THE HIDDEN FORCES OF SECRECY.

The writer of the following private letter to the editor of the Cynosure is the pastor of the Congregational church at Dwight, North Dakota, and his words have such a hearty, health-giving tone that we are sure we need not apologize for giving them to our readers:

"The National Christian Association seems to be established on the right basis—on the Rock Christ Jesus, and is doing a very wise and fruitful work. Such representatives as Bro. Porter, so genial, well-informed and earnest, do much to give the people a pleasant impression of the cause in which he labors. You are right, in my judgment, to oppose all kinds of oath-bound secret societies, the oldest and the youngest, whatever their objects or obligations; for the dangerous element of secrecy, combined with an oath, is enough to condemn them. They are then liable to cover evil practices and further the dark designs of scheming leaders. I know of no contrivance more potent for putting good men, and bad ones, into the power of a few skilled managers than such an organization. That it is not always used for such purposes is not decisive. Giant powder does not always explode if stored in a city; but the risk is too great of storing it there, even for a single night. So when I think of our great republic, honeycombed with all manner of secret societies, I wonder how long our liberties will stand. Knowing that they are mining, and counter-mining, I look for explosion after explosion. Yet God is merciful. He loves our country, and is using such agencies as your noble Association to save it. In each place where I have been pastor, these (my) views have been known.....G. S. BASCOM."

Our readers will be interested to learn that Mr. Bascom is to become an occasional and welcome contributor to the Cynosure.

"THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST."

Admirers of Darwin and Herbert Spencer once thought that their philosophy would eventually destroy the Mosaic account of the creation (or at least throw a new light upon it), by demonstrating that the original forms of life were uncouth and barbaric; that the most inferior and weakest were obliged to succumb to the more perfect of their own and other species; that in the progression of nature toward perfection only the worthiest, or fittest to live, survived, and that each succeeding generation would become stronger and better than that which preceded it.

We all know what improvement care in breeding, wise training and proper treatment may effect in domestic animals. Every county and State fair furnishes abundant evidence in this direction. So the same care, wisdom and humanity will produce similar results in our own race, lifting up the fallen, educating the ignorant, and shaping the character of the young for future usefulness. The elevation of the moral sentiments, the health of the body, and the culture of the mental faculties, are among the benefits gained by judicious instruction and encouragement; and with knowledge, sobriety, and physical perfection, comes power to plan and accomplish many things to which ignorance, intemperance and bodily imperfection could never dare, or even hope, to aspire. This is what practical philosophy teaches, and endeavors to demonstrate, as the highest good of mankind.

But, after all, notwithstanding the benefits that philosophy is capable of bestowing, there is still something lacking that it cannot supply. As we daily see, the horse remains a horse and the dog is still a dog, whatever improvement human wisdom may devise and accomplish for each; so the cultured man or woman, with all the advantages of social position, wealth and influence, may be but an unconverted sinner living "without hope and without God in the world;" dwelling under the constant displeasure of the Almighty, as a rebellious and ungrateful member of a fallen race. The family may trace its genealogy, unbroken, to ancient royal blood; the individual may possess literary genius or mechanical skill that moves the world to honor him above all his fellows, and his political shrewdness and influence may win for him the highest office in the government of his country; yet in his heart may live the worm that dieth not, and a spark of fire unquenchable. In all that the world admires he may be perfect, and in him may be demonstrated Spencer's theory of "the survival of the fittest" in an eminent degree. Here, however, philosophy has reached its culminating point, and indicates its weakness as a preparation for entering upon the mysteries of future existence. Here it is that divine revelation asserts its superiority to human theories. Life here must end—and what then? Either the eternal justice of God, or his merciful love, intervenes and settles the momentous question. At such a time how vain, seemingly and in reality, are the consolations of mental and physical philosophy! What avail human wisdom, wealth, power, or genealogy, upon a dying bed?

But there comes a still sadder picture. The spirit has departed to its own place, either lost or saved forever, the body has crumbled into dust, the individual is forgotten among men, his name is as a dream to posterity. By-and-bye comes the resurrection morn, when all mankind shall be summoned before the judgment-seat of Christ. We pass over the terrors of the unsaved, the peace of the sanctified, in that fearful trial. The last of Adam's race has received the decision of the Judge. A mighty host whom no man can number enter into the joy of their Lord, with songs of praise and thanksgiving; while a mightier multitude, bowed down with untold misery, are banished from the presence of God forever. "This is the second death"—the fruit of human philosophy—the true "survival of the fittest."

"As in heaven, so in earth." The man who has respect for his own soul—who daily commits his way unto the Lord—who dwells humbly and uprightly among the "strange gods" of the world without being corrupted by them—is preparing for the "survival of the fittest." The church that abides in the Spirit of the Master—that dwells beneath the shadow of the wings of the Almighty, and worships him sincerely and aright—that lives, and moves, and has its being in the atmosphere of perfect love—is also surely preparing for the true "survival of the fittest"—possessing length of days and sweet seasons of peace, certain precursors of the glories of the future life.

TYRANNY OF LABOR UNIONS.

We are indebted to the Daily News (Saturday's issue) of this city for the following story of persecution of its members by the Journeymen Stone-Cutters' Association. The narrative begins in one of the city courts, where three members of the association ask for an injunction against the lodge for their relief.

These men, as it is alleged in their application, were working, in August last, for a firm of stone-cutters, receiving each $4.50 per day. Some persons, they further state, went to the association and preferred charges against them. These charges were to the effect that the three complainants were working for less than the union scale of wages. They say that they were given no chance to defend themselves against these charges but were fined $80 each by the president of the association. This fine he ordered them to pay—$20 down and the balance $10 per week. They could not do this, they say, as they had no money. Then they say the president of the association made their employers discharge them. This movement left them in a condition where they could get no work until they paid their fines, and as their resources were entirely cut off, they could not obtain money.

In this strait these men returned to their recent employers, seeking work, but were notified that if they were re-hired, the firm would be fined $500 and all their other employes would be called off by the association.

In asking the court to grant them the injunction, the plaintiffs state further that they can get no work because the association has warned all stone-cutting firms not to employ them, under the penalty of a fine and a strike of their employes.

Surely this is a case of persecution—a disregard of personal rights—a species of barbaric tyranny—that calls for interference of our national authorities, as being entirely repugnant to the spirit of our Federal Constitution and the rights of man.

HOW TO USE THE "CYNOSURE."

An esteemed friend of the N. C. A. and its work writes to us these encouraging lines from Senecaville, Ohio:

"The Lord bless you all at the office with all needful blessings from his hand, making the Cynosure more and more useful and successful in overturning the dark and un-Christian system of lodgery, against which it is so fully and uncompromisingly committed.

"I frequently distribute my numbers so that others beside myself may be benefited by the reading of the same. Much better to be read by others than lying around uselessly or torn up and used as waste paper. They are too valuable to receive such treatment. E. Thompson."

—A correspondent who asks where in the Bible is the motto of the Cynosure, "In secret have I said nothing," will find it in John's Gospel 18: 20.

—The two excellent books, "The Guiding Hand," by H. L. Hastings, and "Pebbles from the Path of a Pilgrim," by Mrs. H. L. Hastings, advertised on pages 13 and 16 of this issue of the Cynosure, will be sent to each new subscriber to this paper who orders it for one year, for 75 cents each. The regular price is $1.50 each. Better books than these for home reading are very scarce, and we put them at half-price to new yearly patrons, which is very cheap.

—Secret societies are pretty much all alike. A writer in a lodge journal makes this statement: "A companion called in my office recently to pay his assessment. He asked me, 'How long have I been a member of this order?' I told him twelve years. 'And I have always paid my assessments promptly, and never been suspended.' 'That is true,' I said. 'Now I want to ask, if I should be sick, or through failure in business I could not pay my assessment, what would be the result?' 'You would be suspended,' I answered." That is, his twelve years' unbroken payment of dues would count for nothing. Thats' fraternal "benevolence."

—The official report of the World's Fair Congresses Auxiliary shows that there were 210 working committees; a local membership of 1,600 and a non-resident membership of 15,000. In preparation for these congresses there were sent out over a million circulars. There were held 1,245 sessions, with 5,974 speakers, and a total attendance of over 700,000. It will require fifty volumes of six hundred pages each to contain the published proceedings, papers and addresses. The one man who has justly most pride in these congresses is Hon. Charles C. Bonney, their president, to whose untiring energy and executive ability they largely owe their existence and success.

—The first resolution in the series adopted by the twenty-ninth session of the California Annual Conference of the Church of the United Brethren in Christ convened in Oakdale, Stanislaus county, California, Oct. 5, 1893, Bishop Wm. Dillon in the chair, reads as follows: "We rejoice to hear of the success of the Pacific Coast Christian Association, organized under the auspices of the N. C. A., opposed to secret societies, of which our worthy bishop is president, and we recommend the organization to our people for their hearty co-operation." This is very encouraging. There are few sections of our country in which our reform is more greatly needed than along the Pacific Coast, where the work is ripe for the harvest, but the laborers are few.

—A writer in the Lutheran Evangelist thinks "there is need of the A. P. A. and for every association that protects American institutions, and a very earnest need." We can forgive any exuberance of feeling on the part of the disciples of Luther that is directed against their original foe, the Church of Rome; but why, in the name of common sense, is it necessary for a "patriotic" society of good principles to perform its work, like the Church of Rome, in secret cloisters or lodge-rooms? Surely we have had enough of this inquisitorial abomination in and out of the Church of Rome to make it a stench in the nostrils of all fair-minded lovers of religious and political freedom. Let the A. P. A. give up its secret work, come out boldly before the world, declare its objects, and adopt open methods of warfare, and it will receive all the consideration that it deserves from all followers of the Lord Jesus Christ as well as from those who especially honor Luther's great work in the Reformation.

—Mr. Luther D. Wishard, a Christian evangelist, who has traversed the land of the Orient as a missionary, tells the following touching incident in his experience. It was in Japan, in a town where he and his co-workers had been holding an anthusiastic evening meeting. Before its the close audience had joined heartily in singing:

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

When the meeting ended, Mr. Wishard and his friends, about leaving town, started for their conveyance, and when at a distance from the place of meeting, in the dark, heard some one running after and shouting to them. They stopped, and were soon overtaken by a native, who, in great excitement, began to ask: "Who, oh, who is this great, this mighty Personage whom we should crown—who is he?" Mr. Wishard took in the situation instantly. The poor fellow had been to the meeting and heard the closing hymn, without understanding to whom it referred; and the evangelist, in the spirit of Philip when riding with the Eunuch, "opened his mouth....and preached unto him Jesus," as the King of kings.

—Separation from evil is a standard doctrine of Christianity, and is heartily enjoined by the Apostle Paul and all who enjoy the same living and abiding faith in the Gospel. Paul also advises Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 4) that a time shall come when men will not endure sound doctrine, and shall "turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." We are reminded of this by an incident telegraphed last week from Eau Claire, Wis., recorded in these words: "In consequence of the hostility of Rev. J. Preus to the Ancient Order of United Workmen, several families, embracing forty-six persons, have seceded from his church, which is a Scandinavian Lutheran society attached to the Missouri synod. Mr. Preus, who is exceedingly conscientious, claims the tenets of the church are so that no member of it can belong to the United Workmen, whose ritual is not in harmony with Lutheran doctrine." The readers of the Cynosure will not withhold their sympathy and prayers for Mr. Preus, but will honor him for taking this manly stand against the demon of the lodge.

ODD-FELLOWSHIP WEIGHED.

The Lodge.	The Bible.
A question asked of the Sovereign Grand Lodge of the World by the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts. Read its report for Feb. 14, 1889, page 336.	"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.....Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord.' —2 Cor. 6: 14, 17.
"Question.—Is it lawful for a chaplain to commence and finish his prayers in the name of Christ?	"Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 10: 32.
"Answer.—Our Order only requires a belief in the existence of a Supreme Being as a qualification for membership, and has no affinity with any religious sect or system of faith. Hence, everything savoring of sectarianism is not to be tolerated. The words system of faith or sect do not have reference merely to sects within the pale of Christianity, but have a far broader significance, and include all the religions of the world. In this sense Christianity is a sect; hence it is inexpedient and, I think, unlawful to make prominent reference to it in Lodge work. ....We have Jews and may have Mohammedans and other non-Christian sects within our Order, and the rule applies to them equally with members of the Christian faith."	"I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me."—John 14: 6.
	"I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." —John 10: 9.
	"For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he shall come in his own glory."—Luke 9: 26.
"In a word, what regeneration by the Word of Truth is in religion, initiation is in Odd-fellowship." —Rev. A. B. Grosh in his Manual of Odd-fellowship, page 90, edition 1869.	"Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth, that we should be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures."—James 1: 13.
"The order as founded by Brother Wildey, was simply a humane institution. But gradually there were infused into its lectures and charges much moral and (unsectarian) religious instruction; and at each revision these principles were increased, and deepened, and strengthened, until its beneficial and relief measures, from being ends, have become means to a higher and greater end—'to improve and elevate the character of man; to imbue him with conceptions of his capability for good; to enlighten his mind; to enlarge the sphere of his affections, and thus to lead him to the cultivation of the true fraternal relations designed by the Great Author of his being.'"— Grosh's Manual, p. 34.	"Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God: and every one that loveth him that begat loveth him also that is begotten of him."—1 John 5: 1.
	"But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."—John 1: 12, 13.

Can a man be an intelligent, loyal member in such a religious system, and a consistant disciple of Him whose atonement for sin, whose authority as Sovereign over the conscience, and whose very Name is denied in, and legally excluded from, its lodge rooms and worship? Are they not of those who "profess that they know God, but in works they deny him."—Titus 1: 16.

The Home.

WHAT IS MAN?—PSALM VIII.

BY H. L. HASTINGS.

When I regard the heavens thou hast displayed,
The moon and stars thou hast ordained and made,
Those countless hosts which in their glory stand
Unnumbered still as when they left thy hand:

I mark the music of the whirling spheres,
The mighty roll of everlasting years;
Those wondrous orbs, wide swinging to and fro,
Marking the ages in their steady flow;

Oppressed with this magnificence I stand
Watching amazed the workings of thy hand,
As the vast mechanism of heaven I see
Beating the seconds of eternity!

The stars that glow in boundless distance dim,
Where fainting fly the wearied seraphim
Amazed, appalled, when the vast course is run,
To find their mighty journey just begun:

Where fancy faints, unequal to the sight,
Nor dares to scale the distant hills of light;
There faith looks up God's wondrous works to scan,
And cries in solemn awe, "Lord, what is man?"

MRS. WILMOT'S TENTH.

The Wilmot family was in fairly good circumstances. Besides the few luxuries of life, careful Mrs. Wilmot managed to lay aside quite a respectable sum "against a rainy day." There was one thing which troubled her, however. Ever since her conversion years ago the plan of systematic and proportionate giving had regularly presented itself to her, and had as regularly been thrust one side.

But the time came at last when she settled the question once for all. It happened in a peculiar manner.

The youngest Wilmot was ill, the baby and the pet of the entire household. The doctor despaired of its life, and the mother's heart was wrung with anguish. There were nine besides, but the loving mother could not spare even one. Father Wilmot was away on a western trip, and she was alone with the children. About midnight the doctor was called away; and she knelt beside the bed and poured out to her loving Father the story of all her sorrow and anxious fear.

Mrs. Wilmot did not believe, as she afterwards expressed it, "in making bargains with the Lord," but this old vexing question came to her so forcibly while kneeling there that she cried, "O Father, save my child, and I will give thee one-tenth of all I possess."

The hours sped on, and still the little one lay in the quiet sleep into which she had fallen at midnight. The doctor came and, looking at her, exclaimed: "She is much better; I think she will live! It is marvelous! I do not understand it!"

But Mrs. Wilmot understood and knelt once more, this time in thanksgiving. The baby grew better, and in a week or two was as well as ever.

Did Mrs. Wilmot forget her vow? No; from that day to this she has given to the Lord one-tenth of all she had. Even more, for many an extra gift has found its way to the Lord's treasury.

But she was called upon to give a tenth of the possession more dear to her than life. It was the only time in all the years that she wavered and shrank from fulfilling her pledge. It was years later, although to her it seemed but a day.

Yet "the baby" was a young lady of 23, when she came to her mother one day, and placing her arm about her neck said: "I do not wish to give you pain, mother dear, but when you promised the Lord to give him a tenth of all you possessed, did that include me?"

Mrs. Wilmot opened her eyes in astonishment. "Include you? Why, what do you mean?"

"I mean did you give me to God, too? I hope that you did, for I would like very much to go as a missionary soon. Can you spare me for that, mother? May I not go as your 'tenth?'"

The mother's arms clasped the girl tightly for a moment and tears fell softly, then, without a word, she pushed her gently away. When alone with her Master, there was a struggle; but when she called her daughter, there was no sign of it upon the smiling, peaceful countenance.

"Yes, dear, you may go where you will in the Lord's service as my 'tenth,' though dearer than life to me. May God abundantly bless all your efforts. He may have saved your life for this."

After the first sorrow and the pain of separation was over, Mrs. Wilmot rejoiced in her missionary daughter. Could you have seen her happy, sunshiny face, and felt the warm hand-shake which characterized her after-life, you would agree with me that Mrs. Wilmot derived many blessings from proportionate giving. As for Mrs. Wilmot herself, should you ask her about it, she would tell you that it was by far the best way of giving. "Hap-hazard giving cannot be pleasing to the Lord. Why should not his cause be treated as fairly and squarely as our business or family interests? The head of the family who does not know what the income is, does not know how much may be used for this and that purpose, how much for rent, how much for fuel, for food, clothing, and other things, but who thoughtlessly spends all upon one thing and goes without another, would be considered at least a 'poor manager.' Yet many treat our Father's interest in just that manner. Is it not infinitely better to lay aside a small sum and to know that so much belongs to the Lord, to know how much can be given, and to know how and to what it may best be given? One who tries it will be surprised to see how much such systematic giving can accomplish; how much, also, we will have that we may give outside this regular giving. The most delightful time in my life has been when I could give a 'thank offering' unto the Lord. I would not go back to my old way of giving, for I think, though I may be wrong, that I have been blessed spiritually and materially, because I have thus given to the Lord."—Christian Mirror.

AN UNREAL LIFE.

The present is a time of great peril, alike to the bodies and souls of men. The unreal life of the so-called world of society affects all classes in many different ways, and it may be said, with truth, that its influence is always injurious. The world, which Christians are to renounce, is so about us that we unconsciously breathe its atmosphere, and are affected by its spirit. The prince of this world comes, and finding in us so much in sympathy with himself, seeks to enter in and take possession. At first we struggle to be free, but sooner than to be thought singular, many yield to its seductive influence, and are overcome. Our style of living, our modes of dress, our recreations and amusements are more or less fashioned after the course of this world, and not after the teachings of Christ.

That such a life is as unreal as it is un-Christian, everyone who closely observes the current of modern society, must at once be convinced. The extent to which such a life is carried in the fashionable circles of English society, which are so largely aped by the rich in America, is thus forcibly described by an English lady, now on a visit to this country:

"In our home life it is simply rush, rush, rush during 'the season,' from morning to night. In America it would be called 'rush;' we call it 'on the go,' for, although we really do more than a girl could stand over here, we do it more calmly, and it does not seem nearly so tiring as half the amount of exertion in this country. My sister and I take a first breakfast of coffee or chocolate and rolls in our rooms, and are in our habits ready for a ride in the Row at 10; then we return home, change our clothes, and either go out to breakfast at 12 or 1, or have friends at home. In the afternoon we either shop or drive with mamma in the park, and invariably end up with 5 o'clock tea at some one's house, returning home in time to dress for dinner: for during the height of the season we never dine at home unless we have people ourselves. Then we put in a couple of hours at the opera, and afterward go to one or two, or even three balls in the evening.

"If it were not for our riding and morning rest, we would be dead; and even as it is we are a pretty fagged looking lot at the end of a six weeks' season of dissipation."

In reading this description of the hollow and unreal life of the so-called higher classes, one feels as if the whole Litany should be prayed, with an earnest "Good Lord deliver us," from the vain pomp and vanities of this world, and the snares and temptations of the devil. This may be an extreme case, but we have seen its counterpart not only in the large towns and cities of both the East and West, where every conceivable form of worldly amusement and revelry, with progressive euchre and seductive poker parties, are given, but by reputable people in the smaller villages and neighborhoods of the land. The sad part is, that in not a few instances within our own observation the persons thus carried away by the course of this world are professed Christians, and abound in church and even "revival work," in times of special religious excitement! All this is pitiable, indeed, and calls for reformation, immediate and most thorough reformation. Now, that God's judgments are abroad in the land, it is a time when men should learn righteousness. This is not the time for idleness, dissipation, extravagance and show, but for repentance toward God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a time for heart-searching and humiliation, for sympathy with the struggling and the poor, and for mercy to the many who need the compassion of believers.—United Presbyterian.

A SINGULAR DREAM.

In the midst of the revival now in progress in the First Baptist church, Waco, Texas, Dr. B. H. Carroll, the pastor, was taken very ill. He relates that the night he was attacked, he dreamed that Satan was about to shoot him, when the Lord appeared and forbade his shooting him elsewhere than in the foot. He awoke with a pain in that member, and told the singular dream to his wife. Morning disclosed a pimple on the instep. This proved to be erysipelas, that came near costing him his life. He called his leading members to his bedside and exacted a promise that the revival should be kept up. They were true to their promise, and the doctor is again on duty leading the fight on that old serpent, the devil, that shot him in the foot. In his delirium his talk was all about his unconverted sons. Another son jotted this down and mailed it to his brother in Austin, who had left Waco to avoid the meeting. The letter and a sermon the doctor had given the boy led to his and an infidel companion's conversion. He sent the letter and sermon to his brother in another city, and they were the means of his conversion. The two sons and the infidel companion came to Waco, united with the church, and are rejoicing in salvation.

Here, as the lamented Dr. J. S. Grasty was wont to say, is a concatanation of providences. Satan shot Dr. Carroll in the foot, and disabled him in the midst of a great revival, and hoped to break up the meeting. It led to the conversion of the doctor's wayward sons—a result dearest to his heart; he is up again, and with redoubled courage attacking the strongholds of the enemy. Verily, the devil is a poor general when the Lord commands the forces on the opposite side.—Southwestern Presbyterian.

THE VALUE OF MUSIC.

There are few who are not fond of music. Even those who have little or no musical talent take pleasure in "concord of sweet sounds." Some can say with the noted English essayist, Charles Lamb, "Sentimentally I am disposed to music, yet organically I am incapable of a tune." Shakespeare regarded the man who does not love music as an enemy of society. He said:

"The man that hath no music in himself,
And is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils."

Who will say he is not right?

Music has power peculiar to itself. It has power to comfort in many seasons of distress. "It has charms to soothe the savage breast." It has power to drive away evil spirits. Martin Luther is reported to have said: "If you want to drive the devil away betake yourself to music." When the evil spirit came on King Saul, David took a harp and played, and according to Josephus, "recited hymns," and "Saul was refreshed, and was well, and the evil spirit departed from him."

Music is an important factor in enlivening and cheering the home. Some of the most pleasant homes we have ever entered, have been those in which at least one member of the family "has a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument."

Music should be given a prominent place in the social gatherings of the young. How much more elevating and refining are the influences of hours spent in such exercises, than the influences of hours spent in silly plays, and the scarce less silly "small talk" indulged in in many gatherings of the young.

Music may well be given a place in public meetings, assembled for the discussion of the topics of the day, especially in meetings in the interests of reform. The anti-slavery cause was helped forward by anti-slavery songs. Temperance songs have undoubtedly done much for the cause of temperance. Any reform will take speedier and stronger hold on the hearts of the masses when meetings in its behalf are enlivened and enthused by songs appropriate to the theme and the occasion.

It is the will of God that we should worship him in the use of "psalms and hymns and spiritual songs." He says, "Sing praises to God, sing praises; sing praises unto our King, sing praises."

"O enter thee His gates with praise,
Approach with joy His courts unto,
Praise, laud and bless His name always,
For it is seemly so to do."

He bids us "sing with the spirit and with the understanding also." Hs would also have us sing skillfully. This requires the cultivation of the voice so as to sing in time and in tune. The study of grammar is necessary to ths correct use of language; the study of music is no less necessary to the proper rendering of the service of song. The Christian should cultivate his voice as well as prepare his heart for the service of God, and so seek to present not the halt and the lame, but a perfect offering in his "sacrifice of praise."—Christian Nation.

WORK WITH PRAYER.

The work that comes to us in answer to prayer will not return void. An humble Christian was accustomed to ask God about all the places he visited in his mission work. One night he prayed much about a saloon-keeper, and the next day he visited him. He was rudely treated but would not be discouraged, for he felt that God had sent him. At last the rough fellow turned to him and said: "I'll tell you what I'll do. If you can tell me how often the word girl occurs in the Bible, I will go to your meeting tomorrow night." He took out his Bible, and in a moment found the passage. The man was surprised and said:

"How did you know? I have asked that question of hundreds of ministers and no one could tell me." The visitor then told him that the night before, he had asked God to guide him where to go in his mission work, and his mind had been strongly directed to visit this house. Just after resolving to do so, he happened to take down the concordance to look for another word, and as he was doing so noticed this very word, and was struck by the fact that it was found only once in the Bible, and marked the place in his mind.

He did not know why, but God did. He knew that the wicked man was going to make this the very condition on which he would come to church, and He prepared His servant beforehand.

The man was so deeply impressed with the hand of God in it that it led to his conversion. So the work that is planned in prayer will end in power, even as Jotham, who "became mighty, because he prepared all his ways before the Lord."—Selected.

FRESH AIR AND WORSHIP.

At a recent service, where three speakers were down for addresses, the congregation was bright and attentive until the third speaker began, when it was painfully evident that the want of ventilation was having its effect. The speaker gave important and worthy thought, clothed in faultless language, and in a manner consistent with his thought and theme. One half of the result of his excellent speech was lost for want of obedience to the law of the gospel of oxygen. The sextons of our churches have an office of no small responsibility. They ought to understand the needs of a public congregation as to plenty of God's fresh air. When they do not act in harmony with this need, the powers to whom they are responsible should take the matter in hand. We could but admire Mr. Moody's manner of securing this requisite of a good public service. Whenever a change would be introduced in the order of the services, he would ask the congregation to arise during a verse of song while the sexton would throw open the windows for about two minutes, thereby securing a complete change in the atmosphere of the audience room. As a result, everybody was in a good condition, at least so far as the body was concerned, for hearing and heeding the Gospel of the soul's deliverance.—Exchange.

COURAGE.

If the day's brief pain and passing care
Have seemed too much and too hard to bear;
If under its trivial press and smart
Thou hast failed in temper and lost in heart;
If the undiscouraged, journeying sun,
As it sinks to its rest with its travail done,
Leaves thee all spent with trouble and sorrow—
How shalt thou face the harder to-morrow?

If the things familiar daunt thee so,
How shalt thou deal with an unknown woe?
If conquered by every passing dole,
How build the sinews of thy soul?
To stand and shiver on the brink
Of each recurrent task and shrink,
Will never harden thee to abide
The waves of the turbulent Jordan tide.

Never a river but brims and fills
By the aid of numberless little rills;
Never a strength but has grown and fed
With the force of a weakness conquered;
Never a day but is ruled and shaped
By the power of a yesterday escaped;
And never a human soul that grew
By a single resolve to its stature true.

Winter makes ready for the spring
By months of struggle and suffering:
And the victory won from the mortal strife
Strengthens the fibre and pulse of life.
How if the earth, in its chill despair,
Felt that the fight was too hard to bear?
Where were the bloom and the vintage then?
Where were the harvest for hungering men?

So, if the now seems cruel and hard,
Endure it with thoughts of the afterward;
And be sure that each task that is clearly set
Is to brace thee for other tasks harder yet.
Train the stout muscle of thy will
In the daily grapple with daily ill,
Till, strong to wrestle, and firm to abide,
Thou shalt smile at the turbulent Jordan tide,

TEMPERANCE.

A DISGUSTED DRUNKARD.

One woman determined that her husband should know how he looked when he was drunk. She knew how he looked well enough, and needed not that any man should tell her. Her children also knew by sad experience, but the man himself had a very imperfect idea of the state of the case. So once when he came home and fell into a maudlin slumber she sent for the photographer to come forthwith; and on his arrival she set him to work. She ordered the photographer to photograph her husband as he sat in his chair. The photographer did his work and did it well; and when the photograph was finished and laid beside the husband's plate at breakfast it was a revelation, and the sobered gentleman experienced a decidedly new sensation. There was no need of explanation; the thing explained itself. There was no chance for contradiction; the sun tells no lies. There was no room for argument. There was only one thing to do, and that was too quit; and it is very fortunate that the man had courage and sense enough to do it.

SHOW US YOUR SAMPLES.

An humble Christian worker was holding a preaching service in the open air, when a well-dressed man drew near, and at a pause in the service asked permission to address the meeting. Permission being given he denounced religion as a humbug and a sham, and advised men to go to the socialist meetings, which he said would do more good.

While he was speaking, the leader of the meeting learned from one of the men there that he was a drummer for a dry goods house, and a noted infidel. As he closed, the Christian man said to him:

"I hear you are a drummer, and go from town to town with samples of the goods manufactured by your firm. Now you are engaged in another business. I ask you to show your sample. I will show you what we are doing."

Beckoning to two men to stand up beside him, he said:

"Here are two brothers. You see them now. Five years ago they were the biggest scamps and drunkards in the district. They were wife-beaters and even a terror in the saloon. But five years ago they went to a little Gospel meeting, and there they gave their hearts to Jesus. Now they and their wives are well dressed and their homes comfortably furnished, yet they are earning just the same wages as they did before their conversion, and in their homes all is happiness. That is the work of the Gospel. They are samples of what it can do. Now show me the samples of socialism. Show me one drunkard made sober, one dishonest man made honest, one immoral man reclaimed, and then we will listen to you. If socialism is better than Christianity, show your samples."

There was a general laugh at the confusion which sat visibly on the face of the socialist, and amid the roar of derision he slunk away.—Selected.

DRINKERS TURNED AWAY.

The Rock Island Railroad Co. is enforcing the anti-drink rule among its employes with a great deal of rigor, and even employs spotters to watch and report the men when off duty. One young engineer who protested stoutly that he never drank was shown a photograph which exhibited him in the act of drinking a glass of beer, and he instantly collapsed. Of course his head rolled in the basket. Another engineer who was known never to touch liquor of any kind was discharged for not reporting a fireman who did. This is a serious interference with the great principle of "personal liberty" as recently expounded by Senator Hill, but on the other hand there is no power on earth that can compel people to patronize railroads whose employes are known to be addicted to intoxicants. When the drunkards are forced out of the railway service, and sober and well-tried men put in their places it is not unlikely that the holding-up of trains by combinations among the hands employed in running them will cease.—Troy Times.

TRUSTWORTHY TESTIMONY.

"Catholics nearly monopolize the liquor traffic. The poverty, the sin, the shame that fall upon our people result almost entirely from drink."—Archbishop Ireland, in the Catholic World.
